—The Presbyterian missions in Siam appear to be gaining ground slowly. A second church of eight members has been organized in Bangkok and another at Bangkaboon, near Petchaburia. The chief obstacle Christianity has to meet in Siam is demonolatry. The Rev. D. McGilvary writes of how this interrupted the marriage of two church members, the children of Christians. It was in contemplation to have a Christian marriage, and there at first appeared to be no difficulty in the way. But an uncle of the bride, who, as patriarch in her family, had the right by immemorial custom to fees connected with the devil worship with which all Laos marriages are celebrated, refused to allow the ceremony to go on unless the fees were paid. He further notified the father of the girl that he would be held responsible for any loss in the family occasioned by giving offense to the spirits. As the Christians could not yield and pay the fees, the marriage was postponed until an appeal could be made to the government. The case is complicated by the fact that the persons concerned are slaves, and may be turned over to the king as slaves for life, if they refuse to return to devil worship.

Home and Farm.

"EGYPTIAN" OR "PEARL" MILLET.

We have already stated that a large quantity of this seed was planted at the farm last spring. But it was sown too early and rotted in the ground. Later a few rows were planted here. Though the seed germinated readily, and the plants grew to the height of a few inches—there they remained so long that while while we were in doubt whether they would make any further growth or not, it seemed evident that "Pearl" Millet was a failure, at least with us.

The advent of steady hot weather rapidly changed this state of things, as our first page illustration will show. This plant grew from a single seed, and is as true to life as our artist could make it. Many of the stems were nearly of the same height, the highest being 10 feet 1 inch. Three feet from the ground, the circumference of the plant was 13 feet, 9 inches. The weight of the highest stalk, leaves and flower spikes was one pound, two ounces. There were, in all, small and large, 52 stalks, the weight of which was 42½ pounds.

Several plants were cut down August 1st. The average weight of the subsequent growth was nine pounds per plant. Our first frost, which was very light, occurred while the seed was in the milk. A few seeds upon a few spikes have ripened. As the season has been unusually favorable for the ripening of the seeds, it may be concluded that seeds will never mature in this climate. This, however, is of little moment, since an abundant supply could be obtained from the South.—Rural New-Yorker.

CANCER CURE.

Four years ago I learned a remedy for cancer, which I have never known to fail in effecting a cure. It came to my knowledge in this manner: A lady, at whose house I was stopping, had a sister whose face was terribly disfigured, the nose being almost entirely gone, and the throat so much eaten away that the girl could not speak in a way intelligible to any but those accustomed to her. The sores were all healed, and had been for years, and there was no appearance of eruptions or any other impurities of the blood. She was so disfigured that it would have seemed a mercy not to have saved her life, but she was an example of what the medicine could effect. While I was in this lady's house, I met a gentleman who, I happened to know, had been afflicted with a cancer, which had caused him much anxiety. He had recently spent some time in New York under the treatment of a celebrated cancer doctor, but without obtaining relief. I informed the lady of these facts, and she gave him this recipe. This was four years ago. I saw the gentleman a few months since and inquired about his disease. The reply was, "Oh, it gives me no trouble; if I have any fear about it, I take a little of Mrs. S.'s medicine, and its all right."

I have an aunt between 50 and 60 years old, who has had an internal cancerous tumor, causing her much suffering, and rendering her much of the time unable to work. She has been treated by many eminent physicians, and has spent hundreds of dollars, but to little purpose. For the last few months she has been taking this medicine and says that she has not been so well for years.

I might mention other cases, but perhaps these will be sufficient. I have never known it to fail in a single instance to cure impurities of the blood, whether cancerous or otherwise. I wish I could inspire in others the same confidence which I feel, for I am certain that it would mitigate a vast amount of suffering.

CANCER CURE.

Two ounces of sulphur; ½ ounce of quicksilver; 1 ounce of cream of tartar; ½ ounce of saltpeter. Put into a pint of molasses, stir, take a tablespoonful before going to bed.

For outside application: 1 bottle of British oil; 1 ounce of red precipitate.

The sulphur and quicksilver must be thoroughly mixed for a long time in a druggist's mortar, and then the other ingredients added.

I wish this could be published in every paper in the land, and that in after years I could have the satisfaction of knowing that many had been saved from horrible suffering and death by its use.—Cor. Rural New-Yorker.

The Hindoo girls are pretty and exquisitely formed. From their earliest childhood they are accustomed to carry burdens on their heads. The water for family use is always brought by the girls in earthern jars, carefully poised in this way. The exercise is said to strengthen the muscles of the back, while the chest is thrown forward. No crooked backs are seen in Hindostan. Dr. H. Spray, one of the company's medical officers, says that this exercise of carrying small vessels of water on the head might be advantageously introduced into our boarding schools and private families, and that it might entirely supersede the present machinery of dumb bells, back boards, skipping ropes, etc. The young ladies ought to be taught to carry the jars as the Hindoo women do, without even touching it with their hands. The same practice of carrying water leads to precisely the same result in the south of Spain and the south of Italy as in India. A Neapolitan female peasant will carry on her head a vessel full of water to the very brim, over a rough road, and not spill a drop of it, and the acquisition of this art or knack gives her the same erect and elastic gait, and the same expanded chest and well-formed back and shoulders. Practice, girls.

TO REMOVE DANDRUFF.—This is a natural secretion, but becomes a cutaneous complaint by neglect. Take an ounce of powdered borax, a piece of unslaked lime the size of a chestnut, and a tablespoonful of spirits of ammonia; put them into a quart bottle and fill it up with boiled or pump water. After twelve hours apply this wash to the scalp. Ladies can apply it best with a fine sponge. Rinse with tepid water. After a few applications, the scales will disappear, the hair become soft and brilliant, and young hair will be seen to start out. Dandruff should be cured gradually, so as not to produce sick headache or dizziness by its sudden suppression.

DIPHTHERIA.—A remedy which the celebrated English physician, Dr. Field, always found effective: Put a spoonful of flour of brimstone into a wineglass of water; stir it with the finger, instead of a spoon, as the sulphur does not readily amalgamate with the water, and when well mixed, use as a gargle. Dr. Field used this in all cases.

Platform of the American Party.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

Knight Templarism is at work in Connecticut politics. In 1872 Gen. J. B. Hawley was prevented by means of a faction in the Republican party from gaining a seat in the Senate. He has since given further proof of his ability and integrity in the management of the great Centennial Exposition. The same faction is now opposing him again in favor of ex-Postmaster General Marshal Jewell, a Knight Templar. Mr. Hawley has no interest in Freemasonry.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

No sensible Mason dares deny that such men as Albert G. Mackey, the great Masonic Lexicongrapher, and Daniel Sickels, the Masonic author and publisher, are the highest Masonic authority in the United States.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

DETERMINATION.

On the part of the readers of the Cynosure to make the list number 10,000 this winter, is the quality which, with God's blessing, will bring success. To illustrate: W. Sperry, Waupun, Wisconsin, writes: "I started out with the determination to do something toward raising your subscription list to 10,000. * * * (He sends nine renewals and four new subscriptions). I will get other names and send them if possible. The Cynosure readers here say the paper is improving and they are well satisfied with it."

I. Talbot, Pella, Marion county, Iowa, sends six subscriptions for one year each. He writes: "I will send more new subscribers."

E. Z. Derbyshire, Ypsilanti, Mich., sends five subscriptions for one year each, and writes (her sister): "When we went to yearly meeting in ninth month, we found our friends not well posted on the subject of secretism, and made them the offer that all who would pay one dollar to E. Z. Derbyshire should receive a copy of the Christian Cynosure one year, and these subscriptions are in answer to that offer. We discovered that Odd-fellowship was plausibly working its way into Ohio yearly meeting of orthodox Friends, where Masonry could not go. Of course we are anxious to awaken our friends to a sense of this danger."

E. D. Tillson, Tillsonburg, Ont., sends four subscriptions for one year each.

S. M. Good, DesMoines, Iowa, takes four copies for one year each.

Geo. Cowley, Rio, Columbia Co., Wis., sends three for one year, one for six months, one for four months. He writes: "This list makes sixteen, seven of them new ones. I want to see 10,000 Cynosures going through the country and then multiply the number by ten."

Jas. Steel, Chillicothe, Ohio, and C. A. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill., send three for one year each.

W. Stewart, Pittsburgh, Pa., sends two for seventeen months (campaign rates).

Dr. L. W. Leister, Oakland City, Ind., W. B. Poplin, Somonauk, Ill., E. G. Cooper, Albany, Mo., N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Nelson Daniells, Wacousta, Mich., each send two subscriptions for one year each.

Dr. Leister writes: "The signs are good for several more subscribers before the holidays."

E. G. Cooper writes: "Let all that love the cause say, IT SHALL BE SUSTAINED."

C. Quick, Weston, Mich., and others, write encouragingly in regard to canvassing this winter. The first month of winter is nearly half gone. Let us work while the day lasts.

A friend who has not seen the Cynosure for a long time, writes: "Dear Cynosure, where are you? If you are still alive, do come to me."

Readers, is not some one near you asking what has become of the Cynosure? Canvass, Canvass, CANVASS WITH DETERMINATION. 730 subscriptions expire this month. Please renew promptly.

Notices.

CANADA.

Will friends of the anti-secrecy reform in Canada who desire to engage in active measures for instructing the ignorant and exposing the wickedness of the secret orders, write me at 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

My object is to ascertain what the people desire; and, should the facts warrant, to hold a convention at some central point convenient of access, and in connection with Bro. Ronayne and others to work the degrees and organize for systematic effort. Prompt responses are desired, so that if anythiug is done it may be arranged in connection with work in New England, to save time and expense.

J. P. STODDARD, Sec. N. C. A.

N. E. PENNSYLVANIA.—Read the call for this Association at Waverly, on the 5th page.

MICHIGAN.—Secretary Matthews writes that Adrian is the place for the Michigan State Convention. The friends want Mr. Ronayne's assistance, and will fix the time when they hear from him. Meantime let every one be getting ready; every church and local association be appointing delegates; every prayer-meeting be calling upon God and gathering a cloud of blessing over the place where the disciples of Christ shall come together.

NEW ENGLAND.

TO THE FRIENDS OF CHRISTIAN REFORM IN NEW ENGLAND:—The annual meeting of the National Christian Association at Worcester was a grand success. A deep impression was made in that city and one that will be felt throughout New England. In order to follow up and continue the good work the delegates from New England have secured the services of Rev. H. H. Hinman of Wheaton, Ill., who has had much experience in this work, and whose name is familiar to the readers of the Cynosure. Mr. Hinman will respond to all calls for lectures when not engaged. Correspondence in reference to the lecture work may be addressed to Mr. Hinman or to me at Willimantic, Conn.

JOHN A. CONANT.

10,000 SUBSCRICERS.—Rev. H. T. Cheever, President of the National Convention, writes: "The very best thing that can be done in New England for our cause is to procure the wide circulation of the Cynosure. It is the most available and least expensive power for good that we can command. Would that its circulation might be increased a hundred fold." Let every subscriber resolve to send at least one new name before January 1st—AND THEN DO IT.

Topics of the Time.

In connection with the starting of a new political society in Philadelphia lately, by representatives of the secret labor lodges, the following from the Elmira, New York, Free Press is a strong and honest statement of the effect of such organizations: "The secret element which has been injected into it may constitute a cohesive power among those accepting of that theory, but it will drive hundreds of others away from the party. They will wash their hands of this oath-bound organization as readily as they did of the Know-Nothing folly. No secret political organization can long exist in this country, because it is at war with the whole theory and policy of our government. It is incompatible with that freedom of opinion of which every American should be proud, and which he should defend and protect with the utmost vigilance and care. Oath-bound cabals are only fit for men who have not the courage to be frank and open in the defence of their opinions and principles, or who regard their principles as too obnoxious to be openly defended. These facts the better element of the party knows and feels, and will quietly withhold its support from a cause seeking such means as an avenue to success. Some of the most ardent in this cause a year ago now avow their intention of returning to their old party affiliations. The absurdity has spent its force."

The bill of Senator Edmunds of Vermont, which is intended to prevent the difficulties attending the settlement of our last Presidential election, has passed the Senate by a very favorable vote and will soon come before the House. All parties are willing to assist any measure which might attain this object, and there are several propositions now before Congress. None of them, however, go so far as the late Senator Morton's, which was more nearly a direct popular vote, as is urged in the platform of the American party. Mr. Edmonds' bill provides that hereafter presidential elections shall occur in October, and that the Electoral College shall meet at the capital of each State on the second Monday of January following; that the two houses of Congress shall meet in joint convention to count the votes on the second Monday in February, as is now the law, and proceed according to the existing method, with a few exceptions, which are as follows: In case there are two more or returns from a single State, none shall be counted unless both houses of Congress agree in opinion as to the legality of one of them: the opinions to be reached by the houses sitting apart in their own chambers, after two hours discussion. Fillibustering is prevented by a provision that no more than two hours shall be occupied in determining and counting the vote of any one State. During the last count it took six days to count the vote of Florida. The same provisions are made for the decision upon the legality of any single return from a State that may be questioned. The bill is stringent in preventing any delay by recess or otherwise while the count is in progress after the proceedings have lasted five days.

Every one who can afford it is preparing for the "holidays." "Christmas" is popular and opposition to it is frowned upon. But is not popularity its sole virtue? Let us see. It is an attempted falsehood for the evidence is entirely against the supposition that Christ was born on that day. It was first a heathen festival, and is even in our land noted for the excesses to which it gives occasion. It was next baptized into a Romish mass for the birth of Christ. It is Rome's day, an essential part of the papal system. Protestants can nowhere afford to aid or countenance the rites of Rome. It celebrated as a religious day it is in the face of Christ's word, "In vain do ye worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men," and "Why do ye also transgress the commandments of God by your tradition." The date of Christ's birth is irrecoverably lost; but he has given us an ordinance to commemorate his death, and the Lord's day for his resurrection. Do followers of Jesus need more? The giving of gifts is beautiful and harmless, and "New Years" is an appropriate time for it. Let us cease to aid and countenance irreligion and superstition because Christmas is popular.

An important decision was announced in the Supreme Court last week by Chief Justice Waite. It is the case of Congressman Robert Smalls (colored) of South Carolina, who, on the testimony of one witness, was sentenced by the State courts to the penitentiary for three years. At the opening of the case he applied for its removal to the United States court, on the ground that he could not have justice in the State courts. His motion was denied, but has finally been granted on petition to the Chief Justice. This question has been a disputed one for several years and at least two other State courts have denied similar motions.

The progress of British arms in Afghanistan meets little opposition from the Ameer. Whether his troops are tired of his tyranny and are not unwilling to change masters, or whether there is back of all an understanding with Russia, and in time that power will make its appearance on the stage—these are the questions that cause uncertainty. There is no mistake, however, respecting the struggle in Parliament. The debate last week was a surprise to the supporters of Beaconsfield when they saw the defection of several influential members to the opposition. The present distressed condition of England was a strong argument against the war. Sir William Harcourt declared that the government's policy would make Afghanistan a Bulgaria and cause Russian influence to overshadow the earth. The Marquis of Hartington believed the viceroy of India should be recalled, if to effect it "we must get rid of a government of whose nominally spirited, but really abject foreign policy he believed the country was nearly tired." Doubtless the temporary successes at Berlin and in the Afghan war have carried the British sympathy beyond their better judgment, and a reaction may be expected shortly, unless Beaconsfield can actually force a war with Russia, which his ambition would hardly hesitate to begin if he foresaw in it future honors for his administration.

Obedience Better than Sacrifice.

BY G. H. WILLIAMS.

(Luke 9:23; 1 Sam. 15:24; 1 Peter 1:11.)

"Deny thyself," the Saviour said,
"Who will my follower be;"
"A thousand dollars," Plutos said,
"My Lord, I give to thee."

Again to him the Saviour said,
"Deny thyself for me."
"Ten thousand dollars," Plutos said,
"My Lord, I give to thee."

Again said Jesus in reply,
"Deny thyself for me."
Reply: "Must I myself deny
Or not thy follower be?"

"If I much wealth do sacrifice,
And work and money give,
Will not all this quite well suffice,
Though I in luxury live?"

Again spake Jesus: "Hath the Lord
Delight in sacrifice,
As in obedience to his word,
And hearkning to his voice?"

"Far better is it to obey
Than costly sacrifice,
To give and not thyself deny,
Nor hearken to his voice."

"Deny thyself and take thy cross,"
His changeless word to thee;
Why wilt thou choose eternal loss,
Nor heaven nor glory see?

Marks of the Counterfeit.

BY THOS. HODGE.

It is a curious feature in the arguments of the defenders and supporters of Masonry that they maintain a continued comparison of the good which is done, or of the sentiments which are approved and commended alike by Masonry and Christianity. As if, because Masonry approves of some moral sentiment or benevolent act, therefore Masonry should have the honor and not Christianity, and that Christianity in doing the same, is no better than itself! and this very often passes for an unanswerable argument! But let any one consider the point for a moment, and the fallacy becomes apparent. Apply the same rule as to other things and we find that each professes to aim at, or to fulfill the same purpose. Christianity not only commands duties, at the sacrifice of indulgence, but foretells rewards or penalties, happiness or suffering in the life beyond the grave. "So do I," says Masonry. But she does away with the Christ! and he is the greatest of all powers in the world to purify and improve it by faith in his death and resurrection, and his living presence in his Word and church through all the ages. Every hypocrite affects the character which he does not fill; every forgery is made, every base coin or note is brought into use to be a substitute for the genuine. Every one may imagine how he would hate the discovery in his own case of the ruin which has recently been revealed to the shareholders of the city of Glasgow Bank. Instead of wealth they find poverty and ruin because of trust and false hopes in men who are proved to have been substituting wrong for right. So it must be with the deluded men who build their hopes for eternity upon the "philosophy and vain deceit" to be found in the lodge worships. What a terrific thing for Christians to allow themselves to accept as a "handmaid" to their religion such a pretense and snare as Masonry is; which as many say, is as good a religion as they want! And Christians in the lodge do by their adherence confirm such an awful delusion!

Another very strange thing to be often met with is the perfect indifference of professed Christians whether the Gospel of Christ be injured or benefitted by the lodge. "It is none of my business," says the sleeper, as he hears the fire bell. "Nor need I care," says another, as he reads of a distant calamity. But when next day they find that their own property or friends have perished how differently they feel! Famine across the seas may carry off its thousands, but pestilence in the South awakens our benevolence. What then? Is not the cause of Christ everywhere near and dear to every Christian? Is heathenism abroad to have missionaries, and the Gospel to be subverted at our own doors? Are the delusions around us to be ignored until the sleep of death shall have seized upon our preachers and churches? or shall the watchman on the tower give no alarm while the sappers and miners of the enemy are at midnight busy at the foundations of it? In the day time he may indeed profess to be a friend and ally, but in the dark he seeks to work our ruin.

That good may come out of the present evil portent may be believed; but it will be by the testimony and activity of the faithful, through whom He who sees all things from the beginning shall bring his own wise purposes to maturity in his own due time.

Let us then hope that one result of the contact of Masonry and Christianity shall be the purification of the churches from many errors to a simpler and clearer faith and practice. It would be well for every church to cast off those creeds and practices which have been adopted only by the authority of man, when such have no authority from Christ and his inspired word. No greater justification can be given to the fallacious reasonings of Masonry than to demand submission to merely human authority in church affairs. Let us have Jesus and his word only. Let every Christian see "Jesus only" as his Lord and master.

Lodge Fellowship Introduced into the Church.

There is a peculiar respect in which the secret associations are proving hurtful to the churches, and that is, their theory of fraternizing. Lodge associations could not be formed, nor kept in existence, were it not that they oblige all who unite with them to ignore their peculiar views of religion in the lodge room. Their membership is composed of men of all shades of religious belief, infidels, Jews, papists, pagans, Mohammedans, Mormons and Christians. All these harmonize in brotherly friendship in the secret conclave.

Now it would not be a serious loss, rather an advantage, did most of these classes suppress their distinctive views, not only in the lodge room, but everywhere else. But the true Christian cannot submit to any such reymie without danger of sustaining an irreparable loss. It would be incalculably better for him to lose his earthly all a thousand times than to lose his religious principles; and yet as long as he fraternizes in the lodge this is the very result to which his lodge training conducts him. The suppression of distinctive views is essential to lodge fellowship, and the tendency of such fellowship is to alienate the Christian from the principles on which his present and future welfare depends. Can such a theory be anything else than pernicious?

Now, how does it come to pass that in the course of the last twenty-five or thirty years, the evangelical churches have been conforming to this very theory? It is a sentiment very generally current among them that all distinctive views be laid aside, that church fellowship may be extended to all, and among all who profess Christianity. The theory is not applied to the same extent among the churches that it is in the secret conclave, but it is identically the same; there may not be as many important principles ignored in the mixed fellowship of the churches, as on entering the lodge, but in both cases there is a betrayal of religious faith to gain the fellowship sought. That the Christian on entering the lodge-room should, for the time, cast his religious principles behind his back is now by many sensible people considered most reprehensible.

But is his respect for his principles of any higher order when at the requisition of some Christian communities he subjects them to the same treatment for the sake of their fellowship? How does such conduct consist with the Divine injunction to "hold fast the form of sound words;" "Buy the truth and sell it not?" Under no circumstances, we apprehend, is a Christian justified in suppressing his religious belief, either in whole or in part, if by others he is requested to do so because it is objectionable or offensive to them.

To the mind of the writer this policy, when resorted to for the sake of fellowship, is averse to the spiritual interests of the Christian community. It is well calculated to bring churches advanced to higher attainments down to a level with those of an inferior grade, to blend those of purer faith with those which have not been so careful to harmonize their's with inspired oracles. In fact, the theory is calculated to draw the better class of churches into apostacy. As enforced in the secret conclave, it has resulted in the sad apostacy of not a few church members.

It seems to be the current belief among those who profess the evangelical religion, that distinctive principles and usages, however well founded, are not of sufficient importance to warrant separate communions among them. It is claimed that a united church more than counterbalances the expunging of those matters about which there is disagreement; and therefore the theory of ignoring distinctive principles is resorted to as a successful method of healing the division that now exists.

Whether this method will contribute to the unity of the church and the promotion of vital religion, may be gravely questioned. The great author of saving truth has declared that heaven and earth shall pass away rather than that the minor points of his law shall fail. These are important in their connection in the system of revealed truth like the minor blood vessels in the physical system; they every one bear the stamp of divine inspiration, and are sealed by the blood of Christ, as really as the weightier matters of the law. This fact sets the jots and tittles of the law in value far above human estimation, and therefore it would seem unwise to regard them as mere expletives, for no other purpose than to occupy room in the sacred volume.

But in view of the divided state of the church, and the ineffectual efforts to unite the different branches on any other than general or fundamental principles, it is deemed expedient to let all points of faith about which there is disagreement pass into oblivion, or allow them to remain a dead letter on the sacred page. It is this construction that has given rise to the lodge theory of uniting in one fellowship all the different sections of the church that they may worship at the same altar.

Now the question may be raised: Did this theory for promoting harmony among the members of the Christian community originate with them or did it originate from some quarter external to them? That it is fundamental in the lodge system cannot be questioned, and that as enforced among the members of the lodge it is fatal to the interests of sound religion, is fully attested. Has the church caught the contagion by receiving members of the lodge into her fellowship? After the Morgan excitement, when secret associations began to be revived, and their members became numerous in the churches, this theory began to be entertained by the latter, and has been growing in popularity ever since. It is generalizing the faith of the church precisely after the manner of the lodge. Might not this fact be taken as evidence that the lodge is moulding the fellowship of the churches according to its own theory, and thus working adversely to the interests of Christianity? It may not be judicious to assert this positively, but the fact that there is a close resemblance, if not an identity between the fellowship system of the lodge and that of the churches, affords ground of suspicion that the latter is copied from the former. The Unequal Yoke.

III.—IN PHILANTHROPY.

[From a pamphlet by C. H. Macintosh.]

Many will say, "I quite admit that we ought not to mingle ourselves with positive unbelievers in the worship or service of God; but, then, we can freely unite with such for the furtherance of objects of philanthropy—such, for instance, as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, reclaiming the vicious, in providing asylums for the blind and lunatic, hospitals and infirmaries for the sick and infirm, places of refuge for the homeless and the houseless, the fatherless and the widow; and, in short, for the furtherance of everything that tends to promote the amelioration of our fellow-creatures, physically, morally, and intellectually."

This, at first sight, seems fair enough; for I may be asked, if I would not help a man, by the roadside, to get his cart out of the ditch? I reply, Certainly; but if I were asked to become a member of a mixed society for the purpose of getting carts out of ditches, I should refuse—not because of my superior sanctity, but because God's word says, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." This would be my answer, no matter what were the object proposed by a mixed society. The servant of Christ is commanded "to be ready to every good work"—"to do good unto all"—"to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction;" but then, it is as the servant of Christ, and not as a member of a society or a committee in which there may be infidels and atheists, and all sorts of wicked and godless men. Moreover, we must remember, that all God's philanthropy is connected with the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the channel through which God will bless—that the mighty lever by which he will elevate man physically, morally, and intellectually. "After that the kindness and philanthropy of God our Saviour toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost; which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour." (Titus iii. 4-6.) This is God's philanthropy. This is his mode of ameliorating man's condition. With all who understand its worth the Christian can readily yoke himself, but with none other.

The men of the world know nought of this, care not for it. They may seek reformation, but it is reformation without Christ. They may promote amelioration, but it is amelioration without the cross. They wish to advance, but Jesus is neither the starting point nor the goal of their course. How, then, can the Christian yoke himself with them? They want to work without Christ, the very one to whom he owes everything. Can he be satisfied to work with them? Can he have an object in common with them? If men come to me and say, "We want your co-operation in feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, in founding hospitals and lunatic asylums, in feeding and educating orphans, in improving the condition of our fellow mortals; but you must remember that a leading rule of the society, the board, or the committee, formed for such object, is, that the name of Christ is not to be introduced, as it would only lead to controversy. Our objects being not at all religious, but undividedly philanthropic, the subject of religion must be studiously excluded from all our public meetings. We are met as men, for a benevolent purpose, and therefore infidels, atheists, Socinians, Arians, Romanists, and all sorts, can happily yoke themselves to move onward the glorious machine of philanthropy." What should be my answer to such an application? The fact is, words would fail one, who really loved the Lord Jesus, in attempting to reply to an appeal so monstrous. What! benefit mortals by the exclusion of Christ? God forbid! If I cannot gain the objects of pure philanthropy without setting aside that blessed One who lived and died, and lives eternally for me, then away with your philanthropy, for it, assuredly, is not God's but Satan's. If it were God's, the word is, "He shed it on us abundantly through Jesus Christ," the very one whom your rule leaves entirely out. Hence your rule must be the direct dictation of Satan, the enemy of Christ. Satan would always like to leave out the Son of God; and when he can get men to do the same, he will allow them to be benevolent, charitable, and philanthropic.

But, in good truth, such benevolence and philanthropy ought to be termed malevolence and misanthropy, for how can you more effectually exhibit ill-will and hatred toward men, than by leaving out the only One who can really bless them, for time or for eternity? But what must be the moral condition of a heart, in reference to Christ, who could take his seat at a board, or on a platform, on the condition that that name must not be introduced? It must be cold indeed; yea, it proves that the plans and operations of unconverted men are of sufficient importance, in his judgment, to lead him to throw his Master overboard, for the purpose of carrying them out. Let us not mistake matters. This is the true aspect in which to view the world's philanthropy. The men of this world can "sell ointment for three hundred pence, and give to the poor;" while they pronounce it waste to pour that ointment on the head of Christ! Will the Christian consent to this? Will he yoke himself with such? Will he seek to improve the world without Christ? Will he join with men to deck and garnish a scene which is stained with his Master's blood? Peter could say, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk." Peter would heal a cripple by the power of the name of Jesus; but what would he have said if asked to join a committee or society to alleviate cripples, on the condition of leaving that out name altogether? It requires no great stretch of imagination to conceive his answer. His whole soul would recoil from such a thought. He only healed the cripple for the purpose of exalting the name of Jesus, and setting forth its worth, its excellency, and its glory, in the view of men; but the very reverse is the object of the world's philanthropy; inasmuch as it sets aside His blessed name entirely, and banishes Him from its boards, its committees, and its platforms.

May we not, therefore, well say, "Shame on the Christian who is found in a place from which his Master is shut out?" Oh! let him go forth, and, in the energy of love to Jesus, and by the love of that name, do all the good he can; but let him not yoke himself with unbelievers, to counteract the effects of sin by excluding the cross of Christ. God's grand object is to exalt his Son—"that all should honor the Son even as they honor the Father." This should be the Christian's object likewise; to this end he should "do good unto all;" but if he join a society or a committee in order to do good, it is not "in the name of Jesus" he acts, but in the name of the society or committee, without the name of Jesus. This ought to be enough for every true and loyal heart. God has no other way of blessing men, but through Christ; and no other object in blessing them but to exalt Christ. As with Pharaoh of old, when the hungry Egyptians flocked to his presence, his word was, "Go to Joseph;" so God's word to all is, "Come to Jesus." Yes, for soul and body, time and eternity, we must go to Jesus; but the men of the world know him not and want him not; what, therefore, has the Christian to do with such? How can he act in the yoke with them? He can only do so on the ground of practically denying his Saviour's name. Many do not see this; but that does not alter the case for those who do. We ought to act honestly, as in the light; and, even though the feelings and affections of the new nature were not sufficiently strong in us to lead us to shrink from ranking ourselves with the enemies of Christ, the conscience ought, at least, to bow ot the commanding authority of that word, Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

The Church and the Theater.

In discussing the latter institution, a writer in the Christlan Union says:

"We know the spirit and meaning of the Christian church. It exists to train and educate redeemed human nature, and we know at the outset that it must attempt no compromise legislation with that world from whose sin Christ came to rescue men."

He then states the following propositions on the side of the church against the theater:

1. That the church of Jesus Christ is an election of grace, and is not of the world.

2. Our definitions of "the church" and of "the world" must determine whether the drama, as being essentially of the world, can ever claim the sanction and approval of the Christian church.

3. The Christian, in the vows of his baptism, renounces the world, the flesh, and the devil. Before the water of baptism is placed upon his brow he declares of this trinity of evils: "I renounce them all—and by God's help will endeavor not to follow nor be led by them."

4. The theater is a place of peculiar temptations, as it ministers so perceptibly to human nature's passionateness, and plays upon man's hidden desire for anger, revenge and lust.

5. The theater has failed conspicuously to create or preserve morality among its attendants. The moral actor or actress and moral habitue of the play-house are alike exceptions to the long line of the fallen.

6. As the theater fails to create or to preserve individual morality among the majority of people who attend it, so it is destructive of religious character, and signally ruinous to that grace of the Christian life, known, it may be, by different fruits, but called by that ambiguous term "spirituality."

7. The habit of theater-going secularizes the church, and does away with those landmarks and boundary lines which help us to distinguish plainly and unmistakably the church from the world.

8. Theater-going tends to deaden the conscience and to develop a morbid sympathy with imaginary cases of sin and suffering. Thus, while its sympathy is content to rest only on the surface of the feelings, it becomes a substitute for that true sympathy which is active and healthful, because it is living and real.

9. The theater in past days has tended to lower the character of the clergy who attend it, as shown by the records of history in Spain, Italy and South America, and notably in England in the time of Charles II., Anne, and the Georgian period, as represented in the satires of Thackeray and Churchill—himself a play critic.

10. The theater leads the way naturally to kindred temptations, conspicuously to the haunts of the drinking saloon and to her house whose door leadeth down to hell.

11. In moments of sorrow and at periods of great religious interest, we naturally feel that the theater has nothing to do with our higher nature, but that its place is in a lower sphere.

12. The Brooklyn disaster, in 1876, impressed upon the public mind the great gulf fixed between the spectacular vanities of life and the great realities of death, judgment, and the world to come.

Hewho climb s above cares of the world and turns his face to his God, has found the sunny side of life. The world's side of the hill is chill and freezing to the spiritual mind, but the Lord's presence gives a warmth of joy which turn winter into summer.—Spurgeon,

National Reform.

CONVENTION IN PAGE COUNTY, IOWA.

A convention called by the Christian Reform Association of College Springs, Iowa, closed its sessions on the evening of the 4th inst. There was a steady increase of interest to its close, when at least five hundred were present.

Rev. W. P. Johnson of Washington, Iowa, gave an address upon the subject: "The law of God meant for the nation as well as for the individual." This address was, for its compilation of facts, and clear and eloquent statement of them, one of the most profitable that this community has ever enjoyed.

Much interest was shown in the thorough discussion of the following resolutions by members of the convention.

Whereas, This nation was founded by Christians, who incorporated the principles of Christianity into the institutions of the country; and

Whereas, Unsectarian Christianity has always been a part of our common law; and

Whereas, Our written National Constitution though made by and for a Christian people, is destitute of any explicit acknowledgment of God or Christianity, and as this fact is now used by many persons and even many public men in assailing our Christian institutions and usages; therefore

Resolved, That the connection which has hitherto existed in fact, between our government and Christianity now demands expression in our fundamental law.

2nd. Whereas, The existence of polygamy in Utah is a foul stain upon the fair name and honor of our great country and Christian civilization; and the entire destruction of the marriage relation is also threatened by the movement in our country known as the Commune; therefore

Resolved, That every legitimate means should be employed for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, and the resistence of the communistic movement in the United States.

3d. Whereas, There are multitudinous secret associations, anti-Christian in principle, and therefore offensive to God; and particularly,

Whereas, The Endowment House lodge and its oaths are a great defense and protection of polygamy in Utah; therefore

Resolved, That as Christians and citizens we will do all that we can to save the State from these secret powers.

4th. Whereas, Intemperance is an evil which more than any other in our time is wasting the resources and consuming the vitality of the nation, carrying misery, demoralization and death into so many homes in our land; therefore

Resolved, That all manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage should be prohibited by law on the basis of God's great law of prohibition: "Thou shalt not kill; thou shalt not steal."

These resolutions were unanimously adopted by quite a large audience.

Prof. S. C. Marshall answered the objections of those who look upon the reform as an attempt to unite church and state. He showed that such a union would be abhorrent to those who advocate this reform, and while this was true they were as far from advocating the divorce of the state from religion.

The closing speech was made by Rev. M. A. Gault, of Hazel Grove, Missouri, on the subject: "State neutrality on questions of Christian morality impossible.

Chap. V. Discusses the relation of Masonry to the Bible.

Chap. VI. Shows how Christ's name must be excluded from every Masonic prayer and why.

Chap. VII. Shows how the name of Christ must be expunged from every Scripture quotation made use of in the degree work.

Chap. VIII. Treats of lodge antiquity and shows the origin of the present system.

Chap. IX. Introduces "the ancient mysteries" their origin and their revival under the name of Freemasonry in 1717.

Chap. X. Treats of the Preparation Room and its ceremonies.

Chap. XI. Introduces the candidate into the lodge-room and treats of the several rites of Induction, Symbolic Pilgrimage, Secrecy and Illumination.

Chap. XII. Explains the rites of Intrusting and Investiture.

Chap. XIII. Explains the symbols, emblems and government of the lodge.

Chap. XIV. Explains "the point within a circle," the ancient Phallus and Baal Peor.

Chap. XV. compares the legend of Baal or Osiris with the legend of Hiram the Builder.

Chap. XVI. explains all the ceremonies of the Master Mason's degree performed in the killing of Hiram Abiff; the concealment of his body; his burial; search for the ruffians; search for the body and the lost word; the substitution of Ma-hah-bone; the prayer and procession at the grave, and every circumstance connected with the Greater Mysteries.

Chap. XVII. treats of the Masonic obligations, while throughout the entire work the marked coincidence between Freemasonry and Romanism is pointed out and both systems are shown to be diametrically opposed to the Word of God.

As a whole this book might be termed "Freemasonry compared with the Bible," because the discussion is conducted entirely in the light of the Holy Scriptures.

In answer to my call for subscribers, recently issued in the Cynosure, I have so far received 85 names and $104. The book must be issued, or at least ought to issued, in January, and I want simply enough to pay for the work when done. It will contain at least 300 pages, so far as we can judge at present, and I suppose will be sold at retail at from 75 cents to $1. I intend to have it bound like the Moody and Sankey hymn books, and I trust it will supply a want always felt in the Anti-masonic discussions. To facilitate matters, I would suggest that one man in each neighborhood take the names of subscribers and forward them as soon as possible, remembering that each subscriber receives two books for $1, and that he pays for his books when he receives them. Now, friends, hurry up and let us get through.

Northeast Pennsylvania Quarterly Meeting.

The first quarterly meeting of the Northeast Pennsylvania Association opposed to the lodge will be held at Waverly, Pennsylvania, on the 27th and 28th of the present month, commencing on Friday evening, the 27th at 7 o'clock. There will be a lecture by some competent man on the evenings of Friday and Saturday. Saturday will be devoted to prayer, conference and deliberation.

Eastern Pennsylvania has resolved upon a campaign of working measures. George N. LeFevre, Esq., office No. 7 South Duke street, Lancaster city, has undertaken to secure Ronayne for that part of the State, sometime soon; and by proper concert of action in the enterprise we may have him in this part of the State at a moderate rate of compensation.

Now, brethren and friends of this much needed reform work, living in this part of this lodge-ridden State, throw aside all excuses and appear at the Waverly meeting and help us by your wisdom to wisely plan our campaign work for the future. Let us have representatives from Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Carbondale, Montrose, Harford, Clifford, Scott, Peckville "and all the region round about." Do not fail!

Must all the money be spent in the interests of this modern Baal worship of lodgery, and God's people keep silent and inactive till they are ground to death under the wheels of the modern chariot of death? God says, "Awake, awake!" Let us meet at Waverly and plan a vigorous campaign with Ronayne to help us in "making Masons." He knows how.

Cor. Secretary.

Meeting at Carpenter Hall.

The Chicago Christian Association met at Carpenter Hall, 221 West Madison street, on Tuesday evening, Dec. 10. The meeting opened at 8 o'clock, Thos. Hodge, President, in the chair. Prayer offered by Rev. J. P. Stoddard. Secretary's report read and approved. Mr. Stoddard then made some interesting remarks concerning his two months' eastern tour. The report of Miss Ella F. Hagerty, Treasurer, showed a debt of $4.50. The Superintendent of the reading-room, F. G. Houck, reported new visitors since Oct. 1st, 41; average daily attendance of readers, 10; religious papers (including temperance) received weekly, 50 (7 published in Chicago); secular papers, 41; magazines, 5. The report showed interest, talent and vigor in this work. Miss Annie Smith presided at the organ, while those present sang the impressive hymn, "O, to be nothing."

Elder Barlow made cheering remarks. He spoke of the importance of visiting Chicago clergymen. He also gave a brief account of the State Convention at Wheaton, Ill., as being high-toned, as good, perhaps, as any he had ever attended. The prayer-meetings were excellent. In closing, he suggested that it was time for Christians to stop holding "the fort;" that aggressive, not defensive action was the proper work of the Christian.

Captain Henry Bundy, of the Gospel ship, "Glad Tidings," which works among the islands and small ports in the lakes, made some excellent remarks. To illustrate the character and wants of the people among whom he works he related the following anecdote:

When visiting a family, a youth between 18 and 20 years of age entered, much elated with his success in fishing. Seeing Capt. Bundy, he supposed he was a trader, and said: "I have speared sixty fine trout, and you may have as many as you like at a reasonable price."

"You have succeeded better than Peter did," said the Captain.

"Peter? Who's he?"

"He used to fish in a little lake called Gennesaret," said the Captain.

"Gennesaret, Gennesaret," repeated the young man, "I thought I knew all the little lakes about here, but I never heard of that one."

Mr. Bundy took out his Testament and read ten or twelve verses about Peter's fishing. The young man bought it.

Light is brought to many dark places by the gospel ship.

Mention was made of Mr. Charles Webb, who is now very sick.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Elder Barlow were appointed to visit clergymen and report at the next monthly meeting.

Elder J. F. Browne was invited to speak at the next meeting of the Association, and the meeting adjourned. THOS. HODGE, Pres.

NOTES FROM NEW ENGLAND.

WESTFORD, Conn., Dec. 9, 1878.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—After two lectures and a sermon in the Congregational church at Straffordville, in all of which I had the sympathy of the excellent pastor, Rev. H. Smith, I spoke once in Union, Ct., and went to Wales, Mass., where a vacant Baptist church had been engaged for two evenings. On reaching the church I found quite a congregation met on the outside, but the doors were shut up by order of the selectmen of the town, who were Masons. A strong Masonic lodge, to which belong prominent members ot the Baptist and M. E. churches, largely controls the place. Nevertheless I found the young Baptist minister and his excellent widowed mother in sympathy with my work, but they felt that their hands were tied by lodge influences. We hired a hall, had a full house and excellent attention. The Masons were well represented and very respectful.

On the 6th a kind friend brought me fourteen miles to Westford, Conn., where I spoke to a good audience in the Free Will Baptist church. A number of Masons were present and among them the pastor of the church. He purchased from me a copy of the Handbook of Masonry, and I disposed of all my "supplements" giving "Freemasonry at a glance." My Masonic brother declined being introduced and evidently felt sore. On Saturday I visited the Congregational church on Westford Hill, the former home of two of our African missionaries, and where their kindred reside. I returned and gave my second lecture in the Baptist church at Westford and at its conclusion the pastor introduced himself and insisted that I should stay at his house and preach for him on the Sabbath. I did so and found him very kind and courteous; but I was never more impressed with the moral paralysis that comes over men's minds when they enter into the Masonic covenant. This otherwise intelligent and excellent man has such an idea of an oath that he thinks that Jepthah did a most commendable deed in killing his daughter (if he did do it) because he had sworn to do it. Surely a man whose moral sense is as poor as that, is utterly unfit to be a Christian instructor.

On Sabbath afternoon I preached in the Congregational church and lectured there in the evening. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Bissell, fully endorsed my lecture and said that if the Bible is true surely Masonry is false. I spent the night with him and was glad to find that he and all his people are in sympathy with our work and this is true of nearly all the New England people in the rural districts. I go from here to Connecticut.

Yours in the Lord,
H. H. HINMAN.

ANTI-MASONRY AT WYANET, ILL.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Past Master Ronayne came to this place, and "made Hiram" as few lodge masters are capable of doing, and then "laid him out" with the "setting maul" so successfully that the lodge has felt the shock all over this region of country. There seemed to be but one opinion as to the correctness of the exposure of the silly performances practiced by full-grown men in Masonic lodges.

The precious advantages however afforded more recently by the decease of a brother Mason, for showing their unbounded charity by going to the funeral, and for displaying the purity of their — of their—white aprons, was not to be neglected.

Then they sent away and secured a lecturer or two. They were reformers. They were temperance men. Nobody could fight temperance. They would consolidate for action against the rum-fiend. To do this effectually (?) a secret temperance society must be formed. The foe is wily, and he must be met by a secret, hidden enemy. The "worm of the still" and "serpent in the wine cup" must be met by a "snake in the grass." Temperance and reform must be as secret as intemperance.

The lecturers came. The first lecture was in the M. E. church. All was lovely. The second lecture was held in the Congregational church, to discuss the propriety of the organization of a secret temperance society. Mr. J. L. Stratton, a hardware merchant of Wyanet, was called to the chair. That was good figuring. He is a genial gentleman and a strong thinker, and his anti-secret proclivities and opposition would no doubt subside by the courtesy shown him. The meeting went off in the sweetest manner. The secret brotherhood were encouraged. But as the meeting was about to reach a definite point of action, Mr. Stratton invited Prof. Field, the Masonic and meeting manager, to take the chair. Coolly and calmly Mr. Stratton then opened the question, and warmed and fired as he advanced, until amid the cheers of the assembly the last argument of secretism was swept away.

The lecturers left Wyanet on the next train, saying that it was one of the hardest places they had been in for a long time. Where honesty and open-handed dealing, both with sin and virtue, are the rule, clandestine customs and secret combinations find an unproductive soil for their Javan Upas. Heaven would be a hard place for the schemes of devils. Of course Wyanet is not heaven, nor are Masons devils, but Wyanet is a good place and society is in a fair way of being improved by open rather than secret means.

THAT BENEVOLENCE.

ZANESVILLE, Ind.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am sick and tired of listening to the boasted benevolence of the lodge. I am sure, so far as I have learned, their benevolence is limited and selfish. Masons here and elsewhere have told me they united with the institution for protection and aid. Yet they confess that they have never been benefited in the least by it. Have they not been deceived; and what ought they to do?

They love to contrast their acts of charity (so-called) with those of the church of Christ. For instance, they are heralding it abroad that during the late pestilence in the South they contributed so freely to the relief of their suffering that they had to be restrained. On the other side I endeavor to show them that the U. B. church sent her contributions down there to the amount of several hundred dollars, when she has no members in any of those cities that were plagued. This last looks more like benevolence.

Again, we had a case near home which stops their mouths on the subject. Last spring a young man came to my quarterly conference recommended for license to preach. He had with him his noble companion (both strangers in the community). His wife was taken sick Sabbath evening of the meeting, and lingered two days and died. During her brief illness everything that could be done was freely done, money to telegraph to friends in Kansas, money to send a messenger to Blackford county in this State, money to pay physician, and when she died money was freely offered to buy coffin, burial robe, etc. — all from strangers. Surely these cases have a tendency here to refute the arguments of Masons that the church does not assist its members.

I am acquainted with a widow of a Mason of Zanesville lodge who is having an extremely hard time of it to keep her property from being sold, and her children clothed, even for night meetings. These circumstances are having their effect upon the community here. Men and women are beginning to decide the matter of which kind of benevolence they prefer. None of the churches here which accept secretists have had any revival influence for some years though they have labored hard for it. I had arranged with Elder Markley of the Church of God, to hold a union meeting, but just at the time our meeting should have begun he pulled off from me and sent for Elder Bumpas, who is a Mason, thinking perhaps that they would control the Masonic and Oddfellow element of Zanesville and community; but Christ was not on the side of the ship at which they let down their net, and the result was a four week's waterhaul. We begun a meeting soon after theirs closed which lasted two weeks. We had some thirty-two or three conversions and twenty-seven accessions to the U. B. church. These meetings I regard as significant. The people here want something better than shams in the way of religion. The anti-secrecy cause is gaining ground. This is where your staunch old friend William Hoverstock resides. May he live long yet to be a thorn in the flesh to secrecy is my earnest prayer.

SABBATH-SCHOOL TEACHERS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Is a man who is not a member of the church but an adhering and active Mason, a fit person to teach a class in the Sabbath-school? I opine that a teacher should be a member of the church, and thereby be qualified to teach as well by example as by precept. An outsider might endeavor to drive, but could not consistently ask children to come to Christ. What confusion would possess such a one if interrogated by one of his pupils as to why he does not publicly profess the Saviour. I may be considered a "troubler in Israel," but what peace so long as such a state of things exists?

The curative properties of Seloam's water were improved by agitation. I have in my mind's eye a little pool, the surface of which may be ruffled at this article, but if the casting out of such mire and filth as the above mentioned be the result, I do hope it may be not only moved, but stirred to its lowest depths. Before we appoint a teacher he should be examined as to his ability; "not a novice," not a Mason with "the poison of asps under his tongue," but he should be "of good report" of them that are without, and acknowledged ability of them that are within, "lest they fall into reproach and the snare of the devil."

A deacon was "first" to be proved before being permitted to "use" that "office." If so, how much more a Sabbath-school teacher. I think I can see a growing laxity in the choice of teachers, that to say the least, forebodes no good to denominationalism. If our denomination is worth holding on to, let us be careful how we handle the material out of which we expect to perpetu ate it.

This great reduction in the price of the Cynosure is only for the winter months and is made for the purpose of encouraging every subscriber who loves the paper and the cause it represents, to make an earnest effort NOW, in the hope of making the Cynosure truly a mighty power for good, owned and felt in every village of our land, before which the hosts of darkness shall tremble and fall under the mighty hand of our God. Is not the cause a glorious one? Will not YOU be a co-worker with us, yea with God in this great work of enlightening the nation concerning the soul-destroying influence of secretism, which blights and withers everything that is dear to the patriot and Christian?

THE NEW WORK ON MASONIC SYMBOLISM.

My new book proving that Freemasonry corresponds in every ceremony, symbol and legend with the old Osirian worship of pagan Egypt or the Baal worship of Samaria, is now ready for the printer and from estimates received from some of the leading book publishers in Chicago will cost about $500. It will be a book of about 300 pages and well bound. It is indispensably necessary to have this book in our present and future controversy with Masonry and I trust my numerous friends throughout the country will help me to get it out at once.

I want five hundred subscribers at a dollar each for which each subscriber will receive two books. Each one to pay when he receives his books. All I want now is the names of subscribers so that I may go to press as soon as possible.

Please be prompt in this matter and send names to 104 Bremer street, Chicago.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER
OF

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

Religious "Orders," in past ages, were some of them invented with the best motives by the best men; but all alike became a corruption and a curse.

All secret orders, religious or other, profess to exist for worthy and benevolent ends; and actually do some humane and worthy acts. Thus Good Templars profess temperance and the care of inebriates. The cognate orders, Sons, Daughters, Cadets of Temperance, etc., profess the same. Freemasons help a few widows, orphans and unfortunate persons. Odd-fellows care for their poor and sick. Secret priesthoods practice religion. Nuns visit hospitals. Orangemen love Protestantism and hate priests. Even pirates practice hospitality; and bandits keep their word: and both profess, amid robbery and murder, to be secret boards of equalization, distributing to the poor what they plunder from the rich; while even the Ku-Klux and Mollie Maguires are, in their own account, harsh, yet necessary remedies for monopoly and injustice which the laws cannot or do not redress. "Argument which proves too much, proves nothing;" that is to say, is vicious. Therefore professions of benevolence, which would justify pirates, cannot justify Good Templars.

After their professed benevolence, the most common and plausible justification of secret orders, is their resemblance to institutions ordained of God.

This argument is thus put by S. B. Chase, Esq., P. R. W. G. T., the ablest and most candid defender of the Order of Good Templars. (See his pamphlet, page 31.) He says: "The meetings of many societies, both civil and religious, are secret. Grand Juries, the world over, sit in secret. * * * The United States Senate transacts all its more important and delicate business with closed doors; and each Cabinet meeting is strictly a secret society. We have known church judicatories to be obliged to hold secret sessions in order, prudently, to administer discipline. * * * Each family is a secret society, nor did any one ever complain that custom, from time immemorial, has sealed up the doings of every family from the ears and eyes of outsiders."

But societies with secrets are not, necessarily, secret societies. The above-named organizations, which practice some necessary privacy, differ from a secret order, as the day, with some shade trees, clouds and umbrellas to keep off sun-stroke, differs from night.

Legislatures, courts and juries belong to the state, which executes its plans by the sword. And in war, concealment from the enemy is as justifiable as force. But forage and slaughter, justifiable in war; in peace become stealing and murder, for which men are imprisoned and hung. Therefore, privacy, practiced by grand juries, sheriffs and senates, whose privacy is incidental and temporary, can afford no justification to a lodge, whose secrecy is constitutional and perpetual. Then juries and sheriffs are, by divine appointment, "revengers" to "execute wrath." (Rom. 13:4). Lodges profess universal good will. The sheriff "beareth the sword"; the Good Templars lodge the olive branch. You can, therefore, no more justify lodge secrecy by the privacy of the jury-room; than you can justify by the forage of hungry soldiers, in war, the tramps who steal your pigs and poultry by night, in time of peace.

Then, to compare a lodge, composed of a motley crowd, to the family united by blood, is to insult the God who made the family. A family conducted like a lodge, with a pledge at its door-sill, never, till death, to tell what the comer sees or hears inside, would be endured nowhere on earth, by savage or civilized men. Nor would a Christian church be endured if so conducted. Nor would the lodge itself be tolerated, if it did not worship the god of this world, who protects it, for the sake of the worship; by oaths or solemn pledges; by intimidation; by false honor; by perils to business; by superstition; by harlot finery; by grandiloquent titles; and by hopes of impunity and secret worldly advantage. Hence the attempt to justify Good Templars lodges by comparing them to families, is as illogical and monstrous, as the attempt to justify brothels by their resemblance to homes!

Then a secret order is, in its nature, contraband, while families, churches and states are legitimate. "An order," says Webster, "is a rank of persons so closely linked together that they form a separate class in the community." Its original germ and conception therefore, are monopoly and privilege. A secret order is clearly so. For if the whole community should join it what would become of its secrets when all should know them? It is thus manifest that the contrivers of secret orders neither intended, expected or desired that whole neighborhoods should join them; for the order with its secrets is designed to be perpetual, and secrets imply outsiders from whom they are kept. The Good Templar candidate is told that his obligation is "Earnest in its nature, imperative in its requirements, and lifelong in its duration." (See ritual G. L. North America, p. 15.) Thus this order was intended to be perpetual, and like all other separate ranks and orders has in it the quality of a monopoly and conspiracy against the world of outsiders. Hence its evil nature must always take precedence of its benevolent design, and always run it into stronger and worse orders, or disintegrate and destroy it in a short time.

No secret order in the United States ever allied itself to a reform till that reform had become popular, and then the reform has had to carry the secrecy, and not the secrecy the reform. Long after the argument against slavery had been carried by the abolitionists and when Northern patriots by the hundred thousand had rallied to the flag for the nation's life against the guns and secret lodges of the South, then only secrecy ventured to turn patriot. The Union League was formed with its initiation, oath and prayer. And then too, Freemasonry, which thirty years before had been driven from the North, a convicted murderess, came from the South where it had stimulated the rebellion, to shield our Northern soldiers by making them Masonic brethren with the rebels.

Precisely so with the temperance orders. Pledges had been circulated as early as 1809, more than sixty years ago. Secret temperance orders sprang up thirty or forty years later, to ride the reform after the argument was carried and the cause popular. "Sons," "Daughters," "Rechabites," "Cadets," etc.—their names were many and their spread rapid. But the order of Good Templars had a special and peculiar origin. We are told by their historian and defender, S. B. Chase, P. R. W. G. T., in his pamphlet, page 7, that this order was started in 1851, in Central New York, to unite all the temperance orders "in one grand organization." So Weishaupt, in 1776, at a world's Masonic Congress held at Wilhelmsbad, Germany, formed the Illuminati to unite and rule all the secret orders of the world, to overthrow religion and government and make all things common. Blue Lodge Masonry had a similar origin fifty-nine years before, when (1717) four decayed lodges of working masons in London united in the first Grand Lodge to charter, tax and govern all lodges of working masons on earth, with all others who would join them.

Thus it should be noticed that the order of Good Templars had a political, not a reformatory origin; not primarily to promote temperance, but to concentrate and govern all the temperance orders "in one grand organization." The Illuminati became the terror and loathing of Europe, and in this country the aid of Washington was invoked against it by Mr. Snyder of Maryland, in 1798. That London Grand Lodge now dots the globe all over with its altars, and but for the Spirit of God in the rise of the National Christian Association to withstand and oppose it, the order of Good Templars might have achieved power over mind far beyond what they have realized as yet. Our chief danger from it lies in the secret alliance of its leaders with other dark orders, in its influence as a training-school for the rest, and its drawing, by their love of the temperance cause, thousands of good men and women into the bewildering maelstrom of secret worships which are excluding Christ from religion, and putting in his place his rival and antagonist "the god of this world."

Having glanced at the family of secret orders to which the order of Good Templars belongs, and also at the circumstances and history of its origin, let us now analyze and examine the order itself. And first—

The Good Templars are a religious order. The candidate about to join a temperance organization, is made to begin with a confession of his faith. He is asked at the threshold "Do you believe in the existence of Almighty God, the Ruler and Governor of all things?" (Rit. p. 12.) On page 23 he is thus addressed by the chaplain: "I charge you to love God and keep his commandments." And a little further on the Past Chief Templar exhorts him: "Abide with us. Here you are safe." (p. 25.) He is received by prayer, (p. 18); is pledged before an altar (p. 31) and is addressed as a brother (ibid.) If this order is not professedly a religious organization it is difficult to conceive what would constitute one. But its religion is not the religion of Christ. The omission of Christ from its creed at the door is the omission of Christianity from all beyond. The creed itself is that of the pagan, Mohammedan, Jew, deist and Freemason. Cudworth in his "Intellectual System of the Universe," shows that every pagan system recognized one Supreme Deity over its multitude of gods. The creed of the Sultan knows no God but Allah. The Jew hates the "one Mediator" the deist has no Christ, while the creed of the Freemason as stated by their Lexicon (Art. Religion) is that "in which all mankind agree," and their "Grand Architect" is but another name for Satan, the "prince" and "god of this world." Thus the absolute religious identity of Good Templarism and Freemasonry is proved by the first and only article of its creed.

And this creed or confession of his faith which the Good Templar is required to make at the door, discredits his Christian profession if he has before made one, as a second baptism discredits the first, or a later will the one previously written, so that every Good Templar is a professed deist. He may be ignorant of it but such is his profession.

And the prayers of the order should coincide with its creed. But the god of the lodge having secured the order for himself by its creed, must, in a Christian land get members from among Christians. If worldlings only joined it, its worships would be a laughing-stock, and its oath or promise a farce. The prayer must therefore be such as will satisfy both Christians and deists; and such in fact they are.

Thus, the first prayer in initiation is offered "In the name of Thy dear Son our Redeemer." (Rit. p. 8.) But the first prayer in the third, or "Charity" degree begins: "Father of all! In every age, in every clime adored!" (Deg. Rit. p. 38) the first line of Pope's universal prayer, supposed to be offered "By saint, by savage and by sage," which is strictly Masonic, putting the true God on a level with idols, which is denying him; as the son who puts his father on a level with other men denies his father and casts off his authority over him.

There are ten prayers given in the ritual and degree book. Of these just one half are Christless, such as any heathen might offer, three allude to Christ and two are ordinary Christian prayers. The contrivers of the order, having given the creed to Satan, divided the prayers equally between Satan and Christ. But such prayers never reach Christ, who said, "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Mark 7: 7. Is that wife accepted who regards other men as she does her husband?

Thus, tested by its creed and ritual, Good Templarism is an inchoate Christless religion, incrusted with temperance and Christianity to draw in and deceive Christians.

Temperance is mentioned only in the first obligation of the first degree, while in that and the obligations of the degrees of "Fidelity" and "Charity", the candidate is made to promise "Not to reveal the words, signs, grips, signals or other private work of the order." (pp. 16, 43.)

Its identity with Freemasonry is further manifested by its name of "lodge," by its words "grips" and "signals"; by its leading the candidate around the lodge; by its constitution in layers or degrees, each upper degree being pledged to secrecy from all below; but above all by its destroying the Ten Commandments as Freemasons do, by limiting the protection of the law of God to their own members (p. 17, Rit.) thus making it lodge-law and not God's law.

Its law of secrecy, repeated in all the obligations, while temperance is mentioned but in one, is in direct contempt of the example and word of Christ, who "In secret said nothing," (John 18: 20) and forbade secret teaching to his disciples. (Mat. 10: 27.) This alone condemns the order with every enlightened child of God.

It weakens its own pledge by putting the making of sweet cider "as a beverage" on a level with making and selling whisky. (Rit. p. 17.) Making points of conscience which are not points of conscience, ultimately destroys all conscience.

All the "work" of the order, done within closed and guarded doors, is "private work", which the member promises to conceal till death, or "lifelong." (Rit. p. 15 and degree book p. 48.) This monstrous obligation covers not only the things which the member sees and shares in the local lodge, but in the order the world over, as he may come to know them.

It "uses vain repetitions as the heathen do," which is forbidden by Christ. Mat: 7. All the lodge-officers fifty-two times in the year, if they meet weekly, rise and say over their respective duties, even the treasurer and chaplain must say over theirs (pp. 7, 8, Rit.) and the same stereotyped round of ceremonies and repetitions, generating nothing but weariness and disgust in thinking men and women, only answer the end of bead-counting, crossings and genuflections in the Romish church, to amuse, harden and deprave.

In the whole ritual and degree book the candidate is never once directed to the Spirit of God, the Holy Ghost, to "help his infirmities," nor to the blood of Christ to cleanse him from his sins. He is directed in the prayers to look to the god of the lodge, and made to rely on ceremonies as substitutes for the atonement of Christ and the forgiveness of sins.

No candid, intelligent inquirer can read and ponder on this present writing, and not see, clear as sunlight, to what sort of religion the order of Good Templars belongs. No matter how good the object or how sincere the motives of the contrivers. Many sincere men have been deceived by Satan. Their work convicts itself. It takes rank with the family of false religions by which Satan holds his usurped dominion over this earth. No one can read the Old Testament from the Creation down to Christ, and not see the hateful devices of Satan in the leading features of Good Templarism reappearing all the way down the ages; mingling human devices with divine appointments; aping the great Almighty God by counterfeit religions; covering Satan's poison pills of error with a sugar coat of truth; amusing conscience by priestly functions, and ruling men by tortures of inquisition until Christ, who is the light breaks through; and then even devils acknowledge him the son of God, and, with an impudence born in hell, ask him to practice that false worship by which Satan rules mankind and weans this globe from its God.

The writer of these words is nearing the gate at the end of life's lane, and as from the portals of eternity, he entreats the reader to "turn from these vanities to the living God which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein." (Acts 14: 15.)

Sabbath School.

LESSON I.—Jan. 5, 1879.—THE SECOND TEMPLE.

SCRIPTURE.—Ezra 3: 1-13.

1. And when the seventh month was come, and the children of Israel were in the cities, the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem.

2. Then stood up Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and his brethren the priests, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and his brethren, and builded the altar of the God of Israel, to offer burnt offerings thereon as it is written in the law of Moses the man of God.

3. And they set the altar upon his bases; for fear was upon them because of the people of those countries: and they offered burnt offerings thereon, unto the Lord, even burnt offerings morning and evening.

4. They kept also the feast of tabernacles, as it is written, and offered the daily burnt offerings by number, according to the custom, as the duty of every day required;

5. And afterward offered the continual burnt offering, both the new moons, and of all the set feasts of the Lord that were consecrated, and of every one that willingly offered a freewill offering unto the Lord.

6. From the first day of the seventh month began they to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord. But the foundation of the temple of the Lord was not yet laid.

7. They gave money also unto the masons, and to the carpenters; and meat, and drink, and oil, unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus king of Persia.

8. Now in the second year of their coming unto the house of God at Jerusalem, in the second month began Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Jeshua the son of Jozadak, and the remnant of their brethren the priests and Levites, and all they that were come out of captivity unto Jerusalem; and appointed the Levites from twenty years old and upward, to set forward the work of the house of the Lord.

9. Then stood Jeshua with his sons and his brethren, Kadmiel and his sons, the sons of Judah, together, to set forward the workmen in the house of God: the sons of Henadad, with their sons and their brethren the Levites.

10. And when the builders laid the foundation of the temple of the Lord, they set the priests in their apparel with trumpets, and the Levites the sons of Asaph with cymbals, to praise the Lord, after the ordinance of David king of Israel.

11. And they sang together by course in praising and giving thanks unto the Lord; because he is good, for his mercy endureth forever toward Israel. And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid.

12. But many of the priests and Levites and chief of the fathers who were ancient men, that had seen the first house, when the foundation of this house was laid before their eyes, wept with a loud voice; and many shouted aloud for joy:

13. So that the people could not discern the noise of the shout for joy from the noise of the weeping of the people: for the people shouted with a loud shout, and the noise was heard afar off.

GOLDDN TEXT.—"And all the people shouted with a great shout, when they praised the Lord, because the foundation of the house of the Lord was laid." —11.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 19, 1878.

HOMESTEADS IN KANSAS for men of Christian principle can be had by writing, for a few weeks, to Rev. Paul S. Feemster, Walton, Kansas. Prof. Feemster, whom our readers well know, has taken a homestead for himself, after extensive travel and inspection, in what he considers a fair and excellent region in Harvey county, central Kansas, where he intends to live and make a strong stand for Christ and a pure Gospel. His father did the like in Lowndes county, Mississippi, and preached there against slavery and secret societies until he died; and his children follow the footsteps of their father. Any who wish can for a limited time obtain free homesteads near him. He invites correspondence directed as above.

THE ASSOCIATE CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

Our readers will hail with delight the "Greeting" sent by the Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, found in the present number. It is significant that the first four churches enrolled are situated in Mississippi and in the remote extremity of Iowa, next to Missouri. The College church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., and the Independent church in Streator, Ill., were originally organized on the same basis, and there are six or eight other churches in this immediate vicinity in known sympathy with the movement for the divorce of Christianity from the false worships of this country; while the entire body of Congregational churches, which are now paying a five thousand dollar tax to A. H. Quint, the Jeroboam "who is making Israel to sin," would to-day vote, three to one, for excluding the lodge, if a secret ballot could be taken. After the battle is turned by the faith and sacrifice of the "three hundred" at the brook, these will come from their hiding places in Mt. Ephraim, and do good service for Christ against Baalim. Rev. W. I. Phillips, late pastor of the College Springs church, has an ability and wisdom which have earned him "a place among the thirty" if not "among the three," in this conflict between the hosts of light and darkness. He is a young minister of agreeable presence, and the church will be fortunate which secures him for their pastor.

WHAT IS PROPOSED TO BE DONE?

At present nothing but to enroll churches all over the country who are willing by vote to "take forth the precious from the vile," Christianity from lodgery. When those who "are on the Lord's (Christ's) side" have come out from those who practice or tolerate the worships of "the god of this world" they can then consult with each other through the Cynosure; and, by prayer and fasting inquire what God will have them do to reclaim and save this country from its national cancer and curse, the abominations of false worships, which are depraving the popular morals, divorcing God and the Bible from popular education; and taking the oath of God out of our court-houses, and putting oaths of Satan in its stead!

OUR DUTY MEANTIME.

A commission or board of eleven men, Bishop Wright first on the list, was appointed at Wheaton to look after missions. This committee will, doubtless, meet for consultation, but they are all men loaded with labors of their own. And, moreover, some are wishing for shorter, simpler methods of conducting missions. Perhaps "boards" and "secretaries" and "agents" have been needful in the past. But some how or other there accumulates around every mission board a timid conservatism which seems to be offensive to God and grieving to his Spirit. Missionary secretaries, agents and committees naturally shrink from unpopular reforms, however necessary. Ministers and churches naturally make these their models; and the wrath of God accumulates for the unreproved sins of the land.

Mr. Brown, a blacksmith of Oberlin, O., sends such aid as is given him, to two or three missions in foreign lands and they seem to be blest. Mr. Peter Howe of Wenona, Ill., is his own disbursing agent, and sends a certain contribution yearly to the good Dr. Nathan Brown in Japan. Suppose we copy their example, and act for missions as a committee of the whole. Begin by sending something at once to Rev. Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss., who has sent up the first three churches for the "Associated" list. Mr. Tapley is an earnest and successful worker, and he and his family need help this winter. A postal order for any sum will reach him, and he will acknowledge all in the Cynosure.

THE LODGE CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS.

Zell's Cyclopedia in two large volumes, issued at Philadelphia at a cost stated at some four hundred thousand dollars, strikes out the whole history of Anti-masonry in the United States, the murder of Morgan, the popular agitation, legislative and judicial action, national and State political parties and all! This act of suppressing history is the more glaringly corrupt in that other popular encyclopedias give fair and full statistics of that important portion of American history. This same Cyclopedia (Zell's) contains laudatory articles on Freemasonry and popery at great length.

Johnson's New Universal Encyclopedia, suggested, and in part written by Horace Greeley, is lately issued from the publishers in New York city, in four large volumes, and contains nearly twice as much matter as Zell. Its chief editors, Barnard and Guyot, are assisted by thirty-seven distinguished Americans, with Theodore D. Woolsey at their head. This great, and in some respects, excellent American work is scarcely more reliable than Zell's on questions concerning the lodge.

Its article "Anti-masonry," gives the facts the that Anti-masonic party cast at one time 128,000 votes in New York; that it elected a Governor (Ritner) in Pennsylvania; and carried the entire electoral vote of Vermont in 1832 for Wirt and Ellmaker. But it says not a word of its twice electing Wm. H. Seward to the United States Senate; nothing of Fillmore and Granger as leading Anti-masons; and in fact gives less than one-fourth of one page to this history, while it affords two and half pages, double column, close print, to Freemasonry; which, it tells Americans, "stands pre-eminent among the institutions established for the benefit of mankind." And yet with the presumption and effrontery peculiar to falsehood, it identifies Freemasonry with the heathen mysteries which are denounced as shameful and "unfruitful works of darkness" by the Word of God. Even Greeley, a known Anti-mason of Morgan time, is made to speak of Morgan's, who was a soldier and a patriot, as "a thriftless traitor;" and it says that the charge that the lodge murdered him "is probably false!"

The agents of this work procured and inserted a historic notice of Wheaton College, but the editors were careful to strike out every word concerning its principles of reform as opposed to the lodge, while everything in favor of Freemasonry, however insignificant, is printed in full.

For many years before the fall of the slave power in America, its invisible spirit stood at the capitol and allowed no measures whatever to pass Congress, which had, or might be supposed to have, any bearing on the absolute universal predominance of that terrible monopoly, until slavery was satisfied with it. A like surveillance by the lodge exists at this day over the American press. So that no great work intended for general circulation among the people, can get into type until it has nothing in it that the secret orders object to.

Now whether this general truth is referable to the sagacity and greed of bookmakers which led to the mutilation of books and tracts in favor of the slave power; or whether as Mormons had, and may still have, residents in the principal towns and cities where books are published, so the lodge actually pays men, secret agents, to watch the press, and modify or strangle every great work which is likely to injure its dark realm, the danger is alike imminent and dire. All false religions are of Satan who is from the beginning "liar," "murderer" and thief. Hence there is nothing which priestism will not do to achieve its ends—mutilate records, destroy books, the Bible itself if there is more prospect of gain than loss by it; strike out history or destroy life. False religions are false, and their promoters, conscious that they are so, have made up their minds to traffic in men's eternal interests to subserve their purposes. Why should they stick at anything in time? Yet the loss of what they strike out is not so fatal as the universal distrust of books and histories which must follow when once they have been tampered with for selfish ends. The popular mind must then pass through indifference to ignorance, as no one cares to drink water in a country where he knows that many perhaps most of the wells have been poisoned.

AFGHANISTAN.

The popular idea respecting the nation now being ground between the upper and nether millstones of Russia and England is, that its people are treacherous, fierce and cunning, not distant relatives of the aborigines of this country. The history of the massacre of the English army in 1842, which gained for a time possession of Cabul, their capital, is dark and bloody, the usurpation and irresolution of the invaders was repaid with bad faith and cruelty on the part of the natives. As if in mockery but a single man of Lord Elphinstone's army numbering over 20,000 was allowed to escape to India. What may be the outcome of the present invasion is yet too far in the future to predict; but it is certain that no very vigorous resistance has been met.

It is interesting to know that at a late missionary conference in London it was stated that missionaries received all possible kindness from the Afghans and that their work was making good progress. The native literature includes the whole Bible and Bunyan's immortal Pilgrim's Progress. It is also stated that the fruits of that country may rival our California or the ancient Canaan, grapes growing as large as a walnut and the bunches so long often that a tall man cannot hold them clear of the ground.

Of the origin of this people the theory is advocated by some that they are Jews, and the Jewish World says on this subject: "There is no doubt that the prevailing type of the Afghan physiognomy is strongly Jewish—more so probably than any other living race—and in the national religious customs considerable analogy can be traced to those of recognized orthodox Judaism. This is particularly the case with the Kashmiris and Tajik people of Badakshan, and indeed so obvious are these indications that when Bernier first investigated them he came to the conclusion that he had found the descendants of the lost tribes of Israel. All the native histories of the Afghans contain a circumstantial account of the early history of the Jews—or, as we may say, their Jewish ancestors—from Abraham down to the captivity, and although the bulk of the population is said to have been converted to Islam by Kais, it is stated by a local scribe, Ebn Haukal by name, that it was not until the middle of the tenth century that Judaism was totally forsaken and Islamism has become the prevailing religion."

—Rev. E. Mathews, Secretary of the Michigan State Association, writes that the State Convention will be held in Adrian. Rev. H. S. Limbocker, President, has also given his opinion in favor of that point. The time will be announced when they can hear from Mr. Ronayne, now in northern Wisconsin. As he will doubtless be ready early in January the friends in Michigan should not expect to wait long, but by judicious and wide correspondence be securing a large attendance.

—The very able and convincing argument of Bishop Wright, delivered at our late Illinois Convention at Wheaton, will be given to our readers next week. Such papers as this and that of General Phelps are great educators; we believe that the time is coming when they will be read eagerly by tens of thousands where they now are by hundreds.

—The Boston Congregationalist publishes the address to New England pastors adopted by the Worcester Convention, though not daring to approve of its sentiment.

—Bro. Hinman's work has been somewhat delayed by the terrible storm which visited New England last week, causing immense damage to railroads, bridges and other property in western Massachusetts. His next appointments after the 10th inst., were at Windsor, Weatogue and New Brittain. He has work enough booked for about six months to come.

—Dr. Cook writes from Indiana that he is having full houses every night in Kosciusko and Marshall counties. He is working partly over new ground, and is confident that his work is accomplishing good. The friends throughout that State must remember the necessities of their agent and do generously by him at New Years.

—Brethren Stoddard and Ronayne started for Minnesota last week Tuesday night, to assist at the State convention at St. Charles. The train divided at Elroy, part going to St. Paul and part to Winona. Mr. Ronayne by some oversight of the conductor was allowed to go on toward St. Paul and was so prevented from reaching St. Charles in time for the first evening. They both visit Menomonee this week.

—Elder J. F. Browne removed his family to Wheaton last week and started on Wednesday for Morrison and Round Grove for his first lecture work in the State. The financial committee will soon be in correspondence with friends throughout the State to make up the five hundred $2.00 shares. We hear already of one pledge for twenty-five shares from a friend who was not at the convention.

—Miss Hauck, the prima donna, has refused to sing on Sunday in public for her manager, Col. Mapleson. The latter persisted in advertising her appearance after repeated refusals, and a disappointed New York audience was the result. It is reported that he will insist on his Sabbath-breaking arrangement. Such conduct should be put to open shame.

—A late issue of the United Presbyterian contains an able article from ex-president Wallace, arraigning the Masonic bluster at the laying of the corner-stone of a new court-house at Wooster, O. He closes thus:

"It looks to me as if those who attempt to make people believe these wild stories about the antiquity of Masonry are guilty of the crime of falsifying history.

"Is it not time that officials entrusted with the erection of public buildings should stop calling in the Masonic order to do their work? Should not our citizens put in such prompt and decided protests against such doings as we have had in Wooster as would prevent their repetition? If we must have this sort of thing, I would respectfully suggest that the programme be varied by calling in a Roman Catholic bishop now and then. The ceremonial of the church of Rome is more magnificent than that of Masonry, and would prevent the thing being as monotonous as it is becoming. We might be called on to listen to an elaborate defence of the Papacy now and then, but still a Roman prelate could hardly be found who would dish us up such a mess of stuff under the name of history as Dr. Firestone gave us the other day."

—The Christian Instructor of Philadelphia, announces several important features in its next volume, which is the 33d, beginning with the New Year. There are great improvements, reduction in price, change of management and removal to Chicago. Rev. J. B. Dales, D.D., who has been editor of the paper since its foundation in 1846 will still remain associate and corresponding editor. The new management, Revs. A. G. McCoy and John Morrison, editors and proprietors, will have their office at No. 118 and 120 Monroe street near the new postoffice building. The United Presbyterian of Pittsburgh has also made a noticeable change which has improved its external appearance. It is now printed in a sixteen-page instead of an eight-page form. Our best wishes and prayers go out toward these cotemporaries whose testimony is uniformly true to Christ and his Word.

To the Ministers of the New Durham (N. H.) Quarterly Meeting.

Beloved Brethren:—At the last session of our ministers' conference it was my privilege to present to you an essay on "Holiness," in which I suggested that membership in the Masonic fraternity and other similar secret societies is a hindrance to holiness. In the debate that ensued I argued that no Christian could take the Masonic obligation without sinning, and hence that Masonry is inconsistent with holiness. From lack of time I did not succeed in convincing you all, and I now propose to restate the case in so clear a manner as to compel the assent of every unprejudiced mind. I shall take it for granted that you agree with me that sin is a hindrance to holiness. I shall endeavor to prove that no man can be an adhering Freemason without sinning. If any brother is unchurched by my arguments he can find a remedy in Mat. 3:8.

I shall speak of Freemasonry as revealed by Past Master Edmond Ronayne and confirmed by more than one hundred reliable witnesses now living. Three reliable witnesses to the correctness of Ronayne's revelation of Masonry reside in New Hampshire; all being Christian men, and two of them ministers of the Gospel of the highest standing.

That Masonry is fully revealed cannot be doubted by any intelligent inquirer. Every Mason swears by the Bible, square and compass, which is in itself an act of sin. Proof: Deut. 6:13, 10:20; Mat. 5:26; Isa. 65:16; Jer. 12:16; Josh. 23:7.

Every Mason swears to conceal "the secret arts" of Masonry before he knows what those secret arts are. That is an act of sin. Proof: Prov. 18:13; Lev. 5:4. There is a chance to quibble here by saying that the secrets are now well known and hence Lev. 5:4 does not apply. Very true, the candidate may know the secret arts of Masonry by the testimony of seceders, but then he swears to do what he knows to be impossible, to "ever conceal" that which he knows to be a matter of public notoriety. That would be even a greater sin.

Every Master Mason swears to "conform to and abide by" "laws, rules and regulations" of which he is supposed to know nothing. He swears also to "support" the "laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge" which are also hid from him. These are evidently acts of sin. Proof: Lev. 5:4; Prov. 18:13.

Every Master Mason swears to "obey all due signs and summons" if within the length of his cable tow. The candidate cannot know that this oath will not require him to do a moral wrong. Hence he commits an act of sin. Proof: Lev. 5:4.

Every Master Mason swears to "keep the secrets of a worthy brother Master Mason as inviolable as my own when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted, and then only at my own option." It is evidently a sin to swear to conceal other men's crimes, murder and treason excepted and then only. Proof: 1 Tim. 5:22; Eph. 5:7.

Every Master Masons swears to give a brother "due and timely notice that he may ward off approaching danger," if in his power. This oath is evidently sinful, as it is liable to bind the candidate to assist a criminal to "ward off approaching danger" of arrest and just punishment. Proof: Prov. 29:24.

Every Master Mason swears, "Should I see the sign given or hear the words accompanying it, I will immediately repair to the relief of the person so giving it, should there be a greater probability of saving his life than of losing my own." No man can take this oath without sin as a criminal might give the sign. Prov. 28:4, 7.

Every Master Mason swears, "binding myself under no less penalty than that of having my body severed in twain, my bowels taken from thence," etc., should he ever violate his oath as a Master Mason. It is a sin for a man thus swear away his life. Proof: Act 23:12; Mark 6:23.

Here are eight distinct acts of sin committed by every Master Mason in taking his oath in that degree. The adhering Mason is perpetually committing these sins. These are by no means all the sins that rest upon the conscience of the adhering Master Mason. He has previously taken the degrees of Entered Apprentice and Fellow Craft which involve many sins. He has repeatedly joined with profane men in mock prayers, as that over the pretended dead body of Hiram Abiff. He has denied Jesus Christ every time he has fellowshiped the deistic worship of the Masonic lodge. He has disgraced his Christian character by suffering himself to be blindfolded and in a semi-nude condition led around a Masonic lodge in quest of "light." He perpetually sins by fellowshiping profane men as "brothers." His Masonic oath leads him to practice continued deception by seeking to conceal what penitent seceding Masons have published. He also becomes a false witness by seeking to discredit the true testimony of seceders.

Beloved brethren, can a man have holiness in his heart who is wilfully guilty of all these sins? Let us heed the dying exhortation of David Marks: "Beware of secret societies." Ministers of Jesus Christ, have nothing to do with such societies, except to expose their hollow pretensions and guard the sheep from their devouring jaws.

SLEEP.

Beautiful up from the deeps of the solemn sea
Cometh sweet Sleep to me;
Up from the silent deeps,
Where no one waits and weeps;
Cometh as one who dreameth,
With slowly waving hands;
And the sound of her raiment seemeth
Like waves on the level sands.
There is rest for all mankind,
As her slow wings stir the wind;
With lullaby the drowsy waters creep
To kiss the feet of Sleep.

ABUSES OF PRAYER.

Poor human nature has an innate tendency to get things loose, or out joint, or even upside down. And the precious privilege of prayer does not escape abuse; for who in offering public prayer confines himself to the proper limits of thanksgiving, confession and petition? A wide observation of the subject will convince any thoughtful man that there is a great deal of unthoughtfulness afloat in the minds of preachers and others on this matter. A few words of counsel may be permitted:

1. Do not exhort in prayer. You ought to pray to God, not to the people. Exhortation is good, but let it be in its place. Prayer is no place for indirection. Address God directly when you pray, and address sinners or saints, when you wish to exhort them.

2. Do not reprove in prayer. There is often a temptation to do this, but examination will show that it is mixed. and only a questionable motive that leads to indulging in it.

3. Do not flatter in prayer. Here opens a very wide field. There is a class whose over-goodness throws them constantly into this sin. But it should be stopped. Brother, when called on to close the service after another preacher, don't tell the people how "elegant" the sermon was. If you desire to benefit your brother, don't throw temptation in his way, If he has succeeded, he already knows it, and perhaps only too well. If he has had a "dry" time of it, don't mock him by feigned laudation. Prayer is no place for compliment passing. But above all things, cease the nauseating and widely prevalent habit of flattering the Christian or other families whose hospitalities we share. When surrounding the family altar, let us have better and higher thoughts than the bountifulness of their tables, the sweetness of the social intercourse enjoyed, the loveliness of the members of the family. All this, in the manner in which it is sometimes done, smacks of servility. Ministers are not beggars or public paupers, and are under no more obligation to be servilely thankful for a living, than the shoemaker for the dinner which he earns and pays for by honest use of hammer and awl. Proper thankfulness to God for all his good gifts, men ought to have and do have; but they should not make the impression on a kind parishoner who has lodged them a night at a protracted meeting, or given them a good solid meal, that he has made a great and signal sacrifice, or has done more than was his duty to a minister. You have done your duty, he has done his. There is an equal obligation to brotherly love on both sides. Do not, therefore, act out a falsehood by indulging in a large display of acknowledgments, for which there is no proper occasion, and which can only serve to debase yourself, and to nourish a false feeling toward your entertainer.

4. Do not do anything in prayer but simply praise God, confess your own faults, and ask the help that is promised to the penitent and believing.—Selected.

TEACH YOUR BOYS.

Teach them that a true lady may be found in calico quite as frequently as in velvet.

Teach them that a common school education, with common sense, is better than a college education without it.

Teach them that one good, honest trade is worth a dozen professions.

Teach them that "honesty is the best policy"—that 'tis better to be poor, than rich on the profits of "crooked whisky."

Teach them to respect their elders and themselves.

Teach them that as they expect to be men some day, they cannot too soon learn to protect the weak and helpless.

Teach them that to wear patched clothes is no disgrace, but to wear a black eye is.

Teach them that God is no respecter of sex, and that when he gave the seventh commandment, he meant it for them as well as for their sisters.

Teach them that by indulging their depraved appetites in the forms of dissipation, they are not to become the husbands of pure girls.—Ex.

WOODEN MONEY.

From the reign of Henry I. down to the period of the establishment of the Bank of England a portion of the money of England was fabricated out of wood. This instrument was called an exchange tally, and by virtue of it the holder was entitled to receive from the crown the value inscribed thereon. It really consisted of one half of a four-sided rod or staff, on which when in its entire state, the sum it purported to represent was carved in transverse notches, varying in width for thousands, hundreds, scores, pounds, shillings and pence. These signs were for the unlearned; for the advantage of those who could read, the sum was written in ink on two opposite sides of the staff, and, finally, with a knife and mallet the staff itself was split in two longitudinally. One half, called the tally or check, was given to the person for whose service it was intended; the other half called the counter tally, was laid up in safe keeping until its corresponding tally should be brought in by the person who had last given value for it. Its intrinsic value was, of course, only that of the wood of which it was composed, but by representation it denoted large sums. It was a current token of real money, and served actually to distribute it from man to man by this exchange. From this primitive tally was derived the exchequer bill, first introduced in 1696 by Mr. Montague, the chancellor of the exchequer. The word "bill," too, was no doubt obtained from the Norman-French word, bille, which means a staff. Bank post bills and bills of exchange in our own day came from the same wooden base, and soldiers are said at this hour to be "billeted," because formerly they tendered wooden "billies" or tallies to the victuallers upon whom they were quartered. In olden times officers of the army who were taken into the king's own pay were said to be put on the staff—that is, they were paid with exchequer tallies, or wooden money.—Ex.

FROM DAWN TO DAWN IN THE ALPS.

Stand upon the peak of some isolated mountain at daybreak, when the night mists first rise from off the plains, and watch their white and lakelike fields as they float in level bays and winding gulfs, about the island summits of lower hills, untouched yet by more than dawn, colder and more quiet than a windless sea under the moon of midnight; watch when the first sunbeam is sent upon the silver channels, how the foam of their undulating surface parts and passes away, and down under their depths the glittering city and green pasture lie like Atlantis, between the white paths of winding rivers; the flakes of light falling every moment faster and broader among the starry spires, as the wreathed surges break and vanish above them, and the confused crests and ridges of the dark hills shorten their grey shadows upon the plain. Has Claude given this? Wait a little longer, and you shall see those scattered mists rallying in the ravines, and floating up toward you along the winding valleys, till they couch in quiet masses, irridescent with the morning light, upon the broad breasts of the higher hills, whose leagues of massive undulation will melt back and back into that robe of material light, until they fade away, lost in its lustre, to appear again above, in the serene heaven, like a wild, bright, impossible dream, foundationless and inaccessible, the very bases vanishing in the unsubstantial and mocking blue of the deep lake below. Has Claude given this? Wait yet a little longer, and you shall see those mists gather themselves into white towers, and stand like fortresses along the promontories, massy and motionless, only piled every instant higher and higher into the sky, and casting longer shadows athwart the rocks, and out of the pale blue of the horizon you will see forming and advancing a troop of narrow, dark, pointed vapors, which will cover the sky inch by inch with their grey network, and take the light off the landscape with an eclipse which will stop the singing of the birds and the motion of the leaves, together; and then you will see horizontal bars of black shadow forming under them, and lurid wreaths create themselves, you know not how, along the shoulders of the hills; you never see them form, but when you look back to a place which was clear an instant ago, there is a cloud on it, hanging by the precipices, as a hawk pauses over his prey. Has Claude given this? And then you will hear the sudden rush of awakened wind, and you will see those watchtowers of vapor swept away from their foundations, and waving curtains of opaque rain let down to the valleys, swinging from the burdened clouds in black bending fringes, or pacing in pale columns along the lake level, grazing its surface into foam as they go. And then, as the sun sinks, you shall see the storm drift for an instant from off the hills, leaving their broad sides smoking, and loaded yet with snow-white, torn, steam-like rays of capricious vapor, now gone, now gathered again; while the smouldering sun, seeming not far away, but burning like a red hot ball beside you, and as if you could reach it, plunges through the rushing wind and rolling cloud with headlong fall, as if it meant to rise no more, dyeing all the air about it with blood. Has Claude given this? And then you shall hear the faint tempest die in the hollow of the night, and you shall see a green halo kindling on the summit of the eastern hills, brighter—brighter yet, till the large white circle of the slow moon is lifted up among the barred cloud step by step, line by line; star after star she quenches with her kindling light, setting in their stead an army of pale, penetrable, fleecy wreaths in the heavens, to give light upon the earth, which move together, hand in hand, company by company, troop by troop, so measured in their unity of motion, that the whole heaven seems to roll with them, and the earth to reel under them. Ask Claude, or his brethren, for that. And then wait yet for one hour, until the east again becomes purple, and the heaving mountains, rolling against it in darkness, like waves of a wild sea, are drowned one by one in the glory of its burning—watch the white glaciers blaze in their winding paths about the mountains like mighty serpents with scales of fire—watch the columnar peaks of solitary snow kindling downwards, chasm by chasm, each in itself a new morning; their long avalanches cast down in keen streams brighter than the lightning, send each his tribute of driven snow, like altar-smoke, up to the heaven; the rose-light of their silent domes flushing that heaven above them, piercing with purer light through its purple lines of lifted cloud, casting a new glory on every wreath as passes by, until the whole heaven, one scarlet canopy, is interwoven with a roof of waving flame, and tossing, vault beyond vault, as with the drifted wing of many companies of angels—and then, when you can look no more for gladness, and when you are bowed down with fear and love of the Maker and Doer of this, tell me who has delivered His message unto man! —John Ruskin.

Childrens' Corner.

The Old Clock.

O the old, old clock, of the household stock,
Was the brightest thing and neatest;
Its hands, though old, had a touch of gold,
And its chimes rang still the sweetest.
'Twas a monitor, too, though its words were few,
Yet they lived, though nations altered;
And its voice still strong, warned old and young,
When the voice of friendship faltered,
"Tick, tick," it said—"quick, quick to bed,
For ten I've given warning;
Up, up, and go, or else, you know,
You'll never rise soon in the morning."

A friendly voice was that old, old clock,
As it stood in the corner smiling,
And blessed the time with a merry chime,
The winter hours beguiling;
But a cross old voice was that tiresome clock,
As it called at the daybreak boldly,
When the dawn looked gray on the misty way
And the early air blew coldly;
"Tick, tick," it said—"quick out of bed,
For five I've given warning;
You'll never have health, you'll never get wealth
Unless you're up soon in the morning."

Still hourly the sun goes round and round,
With a tone that ceases never;
While tears are shed for bright days fled,
And the old friends lost forever;
Its heart beats on, though hearts are gone
That warmer beat and younger;
Its hands still move, though hands we love
Are clasped on earth no longer!
"Tick, tick," it said—"to the churchyard bed;
The grave hath given warning;
Up, up, and rise, and look to the skies,
And prepare for the heavenly morning."

The Little Ropemaker.

The ropemaker belongs to a very large family, and very ancient one too; for we read about him in the Bible, in Proverbs 30:28. His house is made of the rope he spins. He carries within his own body the apparatus for spinning the thread which composes the rope. And this is well, since his pretty house is frequently destroyed by his enemies; for you must know that, beautiful as this little ingenious creature is, in his gay coat of orange, red and black, he is not in good repute. Some of them sting and the wound is painful. Yet all do not, and you need not run away when you see one. You are larger and more powerful than an insect, and can take care of it and place it where it can not harm you.

Stand still and watch it as it weaves in and out its tiny silken rope. Up it goes and before you can wink the rope is fastened, and down it drops with another rope, which is as quickly secured; and up it goes again, then round and round until all is done, and its house of gossamer is ready to "weather the storm" and imprison the rain-drops as they fall; then, when the sun shines, how the drops sparkle like gems!

Ah! you have guessed the name of this wonderful creature, and say it is only a bad, deceitful spider, and its house only a trap to catch the poor little flies. Do not blame the spider; it only catches the flies to satisfy its hunger.

Now let me tell you what I have read about the little spinning machine. On the under side of the spider's body are four or six little points no larger than the point of a small pin; these are the places where the silk is prepared. When the spider wishes to spin a thread, it presses these points with one of its legs, and there appear, not one, but a thousand threads, of such fineness that it is only when all are united that they become visible to the naked eye. Thus, the tiny rope of the spider is composed of four, five or six thousand of these silken threads.

How does the spider twist these threads together? With the hindmost pair of legs, which like the rest are furnished with three claws apiece. Using these claws as fingers, the little ropemaker twists his many threads into one with surprising quickness.—Sel.

"Eye Gate."

Boys and girls what do you read? There are swarms of story papers and sensational weeklies in the land, and like the frogs of Egypt they go into the bedrooms and trunks and pockets of the children. A boy reads the wonderful adventures of some one who runs away from home, and after some years of incredible changes comes back rich and happy. Straightway the foolish fellow wants to go away too, and, in more than one case, boys have left pleasant homes and their mothers' love and afterward bitterly repented their folly; for there is one great and serious trouble about these books —one little word tells it all—they are not true. Then girls take up a foolish story about some improbable people who pass through great suffering, and finally wind up with marriage. The tears come their eyes, the lessons are neglected, mother may work all day without their help, and everything but the book is forgotten. This is not all; these untrue stories destroy the taste for better reading, and the boys or girls who indulge in such trash will be weak men and women.

You know in old times the cities and towns were surrounded with walls, with gates to let people in and out. Well, your soul is a kind of city which Satan wants to take.

You have, as John Bunyan says, five gates to your city—"Ear gate, eye gate, mouth gate, nose gate and feet gate." These gates can not be opened by any one but yourself, because the latch is on the inside. Outside the door stands Satan, your cruel enemy, wanting to get in. He sets baits before "Eye Gate;" he puts these foolish stories in your way, and if he can get you to read them, the gate is open, and in he goes into your soul. O, boys and girls, watch "Eye Gate." The next thing presented may be some of those wicked, foul things that are printed now, which leave such a stain on the souls.

Remember what the Bible says: "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," and let your reading be judged by that rule.—Christian Worker.

Story of a Jack-Knife.

More than seventy years ago a young man owned a jack-knife, which he sold for a gallon of rum, and by retailing by the glass made enough to buy two gallons, and by selling that was able to increase the quantity he purchased. He got a barrel, then a cask, and at last a large stock, and having a turn for business and industry he became rich, and when he died left $80,000 to his three sons and one daughter. The daughter married a man who spent her money, and she died. The sons entered into folly and extravagance, and two died of dissipation and poverty. The last of the family lived for many years on the charity of those who had known him in his prosperity. He died a short time since suddenly in a barn, where he had laid himself to take a drunken sleep. On his pockets being examined, all that was found in them was a string and a jack-knife.

So a jack knife began and ended the fortune of that family.

This is a true story; and the father who bought and sold the rum, no doubt had plenty of it in his house and on his table. In giving and recommending it to others, his sons learned to like it.

They were like the little boy who was following his father through a field of potatoes. The father several times cautioned his son not to tread on the potatoes.

At last the boy said, "Father, I am walking exactly in your footsteps."

Let every father ask himself, "Do I wish my son to walk in my footsteps?" and let every boy ask his father, "Do you wish me to walk exactly in your footsteps, father?"—Friends' Tracts, (N. Y.)

Home and Farm.

Ashes vs. Barnyard Manure.

Unleached ashes contain, besides large quantities of potash, lime and carbonic acid, notable amounts of silica, alumina, oxide of iron and manganese, magnesia, soda, sulphuric and phosphoric acids and chlorine. When leached, the potash is the principal substance eliminated, and, if the wood from which the ashes have been made is burned at a low heat the principal part of the potash will be leached out.

When wood is burned in large fire-places, or in large heaps, under a strong heat, the product contains large quantities of soda and potash in the form of insoluble silicates, which are gradually set free, and hence the long-continued effects of ordinary leached ashes on land, from the slow transformation and giving out of potash, soda and other compounds. And hence, also, the variable value of leached ashes. But when one or two tons are applied per acre, the effects are shown for ten or fifteen years, and even longer in many cases.

The soluble portions of one ton of wood ashes, according to Bishop Watson may be represented by sixty pounds of crude potash, sixty pounds of crystalized carbonate of soda, twenty pounds of sulphate of soda, and twenty pounds of common salt.

According to experiments made in England at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, with well-prepared barn-yard manure, the analysis made previous to application showed sixty-five parts of water. Of the remaining thirty-five parts, twenty-five consisted of carbonaceous matter, of course inert except as a source of carbonic acid. This leaves about ten per cent. of inorganic matter; only 0.6 of nitrogenous or fertilizing matter was contained, and about three per cent. of other fertilizing substances of considerable value.

If manure, prepared as it is in England, contains only the quantity of valuable matter we have shown, manure, as it is generally made in the West, with its ammonia and other volatile matters thrown off by fermentation, its soluble portions washed and carried away by every rain that falls, would contain but a trace of the valuable substances of the original dung—probably not more than one or two per cent.

Now, since leached ashes are found practically to be of nearly equal value, as manure, to unleached ashes, it would follow that a ton of ashes would be equal to from forty to sixty tons of ordinary barn-yard manure. Why? The average quantity of ashes from one hundred parts of dry oak, beech, birch, etc., is 2.87. Of 100 parts of such ashes 13 57 are soluble, or will be given up immediately to the action of water; 86 42 are insoluble or such as are left as refuse of ash works. These 86.42 parts may be taken as being of the same worth as the ten per cent. found valuable in the analysis of the manure heretofore mentioned. Therefore a ton of leached ashes, representing 100 parts, ought to be of equal value with ten tons of manure, representing ten per cent. of valuable compounds, or of forty or more tons as commonly made in the West, representing two and one-half or less per cent. of value.

But there is another source of value in the application of ashes to land. They not only supply the inorganic matter necessary to plants, but they act chemically as solvents upon other salts already in the soil; or they act in neutralizing acids.

Therefore, besides the opinion given in a general way, the Western Rural would prefer where fruit trees are concerned, unless the soil is undeniably poor, the application of one part of ashes rather than 100 parts of manure; and for this reason; The manure would stimulate the trees to form wood, while the ashes would assist the trees in the production of fruit. If the soil is really poor, then use ashes in connection with manure.—Western Rural.

The New England Farmer says: "Nothing will so much conduce to the adoption of a system of working the farm as a well prepared map, hung where the farmer can see it every day. It will be sure to set him thinking and planning how best to pitch his crops, and how best to work to save work. And once the farmer adopts a system of farming he starts on the road to success. It matters not that the system is not the best that could be devised; so long as it is a system, it is infinitely to be preferred to the haphazard practice of many farmers. We therefore advise every reader who owns a farm to make at once, or have made, a map of it, and hang it up where he can see it every day; and having made it, study it."

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

To "ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST," GREETING:—The Congregational church of College Springs, Iowa, voted at a regular business meeting, held Dec. 7, 1878, to apply for membership in your Association.

This church has always refused to admit to its membership, since its organization, adhering members of any secret society. In behalf of the church. HENRY AVERY, Pastor.

W. I. PHILLIPS, Clerk pro tem.

—A protracted meeting has been lately held with the little church at Lisle on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road some 24 miles from this city by brethren Warner and Grinnell, students at Wheaton College. There were several interesting cases of conversion and the meetings are being continued by Christian people of the place. Mr. Warner has been preaching Sabbath afternoons to the church since September.

—Capt. Henry Bundy, the sailor missionary of the lakes, has returned home from his season's work, having gone as far as Buffalo, New York, where, November 21st, he laid up his little craft, the "Glad Tidings," for the winter. He left Chicago on the 26th of June preaching in the open air and in such rooms as could be found. At Pine Island he had almost a continued meeting for nine days. At South Manitou Island he found that his former work had borne fruit and liquor entirely banished from the island. He is cheered by the encouragement of Christians in the cities along his route who have contributed to maintain his mission.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The church at College Springs, Iowa, whose vote to stand with the Associated Churches of Christ is recorded above, will also assist in mission work, home and foreign, that is free from lodgery.

—The Rev. Edward Ebbs, late pastor of the Congregational church at Plainfield, Ill., has received and accepted a unanimous call to the church at Naperville.

—Prof. E. D. Bailey of Wheaton College has been holding a protracted meeting with the church at Crystal Lake, Ill., which he supplies and which lately placed a prohibition of secret societies in its manual. The meetings have continued three weeks and are of such interest as to detain Prof. Bailey from his work in the College.

—Rev. J. E. Potter, the evangelist, is holding successful meetings at Cambria, New York, and in other churches of the vicinity.

—Rev. Albert Ethridge, late Marsailles, Ill., where he labored three years has accepted a unanimous call from the church at Normal. A union protracted meeting is now going forward in the place.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Rev. Abner Orr, of Albany, Gentry county, Mo., whose trial and victory over lodge persecutors was told in these columns last winter and spring, announces himself ready to begin work as an evangelist in the following:

"After 21 years of constant labor as an itenerant Methodist preacher, I have been forced for one year to desist from pulpit labors. The reasons for this retirement were twofold: the first was suspension by the church; the second on account of declining health during the whole of this year. My health has now recovered, so that I take the field as an evangelist. I will in my labors co-operate with all churches and people who are not in sympathy with organized evil. My former convictions, as they have been expressed, are in no wise retracted. Reform in church and state is the great demand of the hour. The coldness and barrenness of the churches, with their want of interest in and sympathy for the poor under their care is driving the poor from her communion, and is the chief reason for the organization and perpetuation of secret societies."

FRIENDS.

—J. F. Hanson and wife expect to sail for Europe about the beginning of next year to engage in religious work in Norway and Sweden.

—At the Baltimore Yearly Meeting of Friends a petition was presented asking that the words "a hireling ministry" be omitted from the sixth query, in order that Friends contracting alliances out of the society might accept the services of a minister without violating the rules of the society. The women were united in favor of it, and returned the adverse report of the committee to the men's meeting, where it was finally concurred in. The change is accordingly to be made.

—The Christian Worker says that it is evident that the relations between Friends and the present Indian Commissioner, Hoyt, are very unsatisfactory. The Secretary of the Interior, also, is probably unable to comprehend the value of the work which Friends have accomplished, and through him the President is led to sanction some transactions which are very injurious to the cause, and unjust to our committee. The committee will do well to abandon the work, rather than suffer themselves to be placed in a false position, and be made responsible for agents over whom they can exercise no control; especially as it does not follow that the Society of Friends should therefore withdraw from the Indians as objects of missionary enterprise. We must still labor for their religious and intellectual improvement.

BAPTIST.

—Elder Barlow preached in Princeton, Ill., last Sabbath. He expects this week to go to Menomonee, Wis., in answer to a special invitation. Rev. W. W. Ames of the Baptist church there has decided to resign his pastorship, which he has very successfully maintained in the midst of the crushing opposition of the lodge for over twelve years.

—Rev. Joel H. Austin of Burlington, Iowa, writes that he has been investigating the standing of the ex-parte council which lately voted him unworthy of confidence. He finds the following facts: The minister at Riverton is "proud to say that he is a Master Mason." The Denmark pastor, according to the testimony of a seceding Mason has been raised to the eighth degree in that order. The pastor at Pisgah is known to have a number of Odd-fellows in his church and to sympathize with them. The pastor at Danville is an Odd-fellow and by some believed to be also a Mason. The Mt. Pleasant and Burlington pastors are known to be in sympathy with secretists. Thus it appears from the information of Mr. Austin that the lodge was reasonably strong in the council, and the attempt of a member to make it appear that Masonry had nothing to do with the matter may be taken for what it is worth.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Revivals are reported from several charges. At Chicago Junction, O., some 70 professed faith in Christ and 40 have united with the church. At Oak Grove, Va., the same number were added to the church.

—The Telescope says: The brethren of Iowa Conference are enlisted in pushing Western College to the front and thus increasing its power. Rev. M. S. Drury has entered the field as an agent, and is at work in earnest." A donation of $3,000 was lately received. From Philomath College, Oregon, there is also a good report. There are forty students in the college department, more than ever were in this grade before at one time.

—An urgent appeal is make for aid for Miss Dickey, a graduate of Mt. Holyoke, who has raised $5,000 and established Mt. Hermon Seminary at Clinton, Miss. The yellow fever and poor crops have ruined the country around and she is in a very destitute condition with her school.

FREE METHODIST.

—Superintendent E. P. Hart is to dedicate a new church at South Lyon, Mich., probably next Sabbath.

—Reports from the work of brethren E. C. Best at Sheffield, Ill., and M. L. Vorheis, Burlington, Iowa, are very encouraging. The latter writes to the Free Methodist: "The word of God still goes on here, amid fiery opposition. The pilgrim band stand firm. 'God is in the midst of her. She shall not be greatly moved.' A few days ago I received through the postoffice the following missive:

'BURLINGTON Iowa, Nov. 29, 1878.

'Rev. M. L. Vorheis:—If you don't git out of this Town you will git a Coat of Tar and Feathers, and a Ten Foot Rail from the Comitty. Now look out.'"

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The congregation at Somonauk, Ill., was cheered by receiving fifteen new members at its last communion. Fourteen were also received at Sidney, Ohio, on the last Sabbath in November.

—At the last meeting of the Illinois Synod the following covenant was adopted:

Resolved, 1. That we, the ministers and elders composing this Synod, do, in the presence of God and each other, pledge ourselves to new devotion in our Master's service, and do most earnestly beseech the Holy Ghost to shed upon us his sanctifying grace, that we may indeed succeed in a new and fuller consecration of ourselves to the Lord and his service.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D.D., of the Theological Seminary, Pittsburg, has delivered two discourses on Premillennialism, in the First U. P. church in that city. The United Presbyterian says: "The discussion of the subject was of such a character as would be expected from one of Dr. Sloane's eminent ability and Christian culture."

WESLEYAN.

—A new church is to be dedicated at Newfane, Niagara Co., N. Y., January 1st next. Rev. D. S. Kinney of the Publication Office, Syracuse, is to preach the sermon.

—On the 19th inst., Bro. Stratton of the Wesleyan is expected to officiate at the dedication of another church at Armenia, in Bradford county, Pa.

—"The Abraham Yant Industrial School" is the name given to the new asylum established by Rev. David Yant of Bolivar, O. The name is given in honor of his father a faithful minister of the German Baptists. The institution has been incorporated and the trustees have been elected as follows: David Yant, Bolivar; Joseph Kollar, Zoar Station; Charles W. Kohr, Canal Dover; Joseph Rinear, John Ellett and Joshua Reeves, Damascoville, and George Richey, Pataskala. The law requires that all the trustees shall be citizens of Ohio. David Yant is secretary of the board, to whom all communications regarding the business of corporation should be addressed. All vacancies in the board of trustees will be filled by the Wesleyan General Conference. The charter says that the board of trustees is authorized to receive "bequests, donations and funds arising from other sources, for the purpose of establishing within the county of Stark, State of Ohio, an Industrial Orphan's School."

GENERAL.

—A recent letter from Mrs. Geo. Muller to a lady in Chicago, says that Mr. and Mrs. Muller propose to re-visit America next year. Mr. Muller will preach throughout the country. They are now in Switzerland, and will soon go to Spain, Italy and Germany in Christian work.

—The Marquis and Marchioness of Lorne signified their reverence for the Sabbath day by remaining on board the Sarmatian a whole day after her arrival in the Halifax harbor, notwithstanding their tedious and tempestuous voyage, rather than to mar the quiet of the Sabbath by landing between Saturday night and Monday morning. It was an auspicious beginning to an official career.

—As one of the results of the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Edinburgh two years ago, a new religious monthly magazine is to be published, the first number appearing about Jan. 1st, entitled The Catholic Presbyterian. The name has been subjected to much criticism, and a change is quite possible.

—The Free Church of Scotland has a bequest of $135,000 to use in its foreign mission field. It is thought most of it will be spent in India. This church with a membership of one million, contributes as much for missionary purposes as the whole Church of England, with its twelve millions of adherents and unlimited wealth.

MISSIONARY.

—At a recent communion of the Chinese Presbyterian church at Oakland, Cal., thirteen united, six being on profession of faith. Deputations of Christian Chinamen from San Francisco, Sacramento, San Jose and San Leandro were present. The church has now 29 members.

—It has just been estimated that Japan has—Protestant missions, 15; missionaries, inclusive of wives, 161; mission stations, 94; organized churches, of which 12 are wholly and 26 partially self-supporting, 44; church members, 1,761; students in three theological schools, 173; native preachers, of whom nine are ordained, 102; children in 52 Sabbath-schools, 1,856; Bible colporteurs and women, 24; church buildings and preaching places, 135; hospitals and dispensaries, 9; patients treated last year, 3,550. In 1872 a well-known missionary estimated that there were 20 church members in Japan; in 1875 there were 538; in the following year, 1,004; and now, 1,761.

—Rev. Dr. Dales of the United Presbyterian Board of Missions reports a letter from Rev. J. P. McKee of Gujranwala in northern India in which he says: "At present there is a fearful famine raging in Cashmere. There is nothing like it on record in North India. It is believed that fully one-third of the whole population have already perished from starvation, another third have fled from the country, and the remaining third, too weak to fly, remain to die of hunger and disease. Those who have left the country are scattered over the large towns and cities in the Punjaub, near Cashmere territory, where they are subsisting on charity. As Gujranwala is near Cashmere, we have a great many of the poor, starving creatures here. The day before yesterday I told them that I would feed as many of them as would come to me between the hours of eight and nine o'clock A. M., at which time about two hundred of the most wretched creatures I have ever seen presented themselves. I did not expect so many, and had only made provision for about one hundred, so I had to send about half of them away without getting anything; a most painful thing to do, as they went away howling with hunger. However, I told them all to come back the next day, and that I would have better arrangements made. To-day more than ever came, and if that were possible, looked more wretched than ever; still I was, to-day, able to feed them all, as I had two bakers preparing bread since yesterday. The way in which the poor creatures clutch and devour the bread when it is given them is painful; but to look at their diseased and famine-stricken bodies is simply revolting. I have made arrangements to feed two hundred people for a week, which will be as much as I can afford. However, I have no doubt that some one will come forward and take it up at that time, and thus the lives of some will be saved."

Week of Prayer, 1879.

The Executive Committee of the Evangelical Alliance of the United States makes the following suggestions for the observance of prayer, subject to such alterations as local circumstances may render desirable.

The Alliance is now so widely extended as to include in its membership Christians in all nations, and the first week in January, 1879, will be observed in all Christian countries and at missionary stations in heathen lands.

For the Sabbath, Jan. 5, as a subject for the pulpit: "Christian Union."

Monday, Jan. 6.—Thanksgiving for the blessings of the year past, and prayer for their continuance.

Tuesday, Jan. 7.—Prayer for the church of Christ; its ministers, its growth in grace and its enlargement.

Wednesday, Jan. 8.—Christian education; the family; the young; colleges, seminaries of learning, Sunday and other schools; Christian Associations of young men and of young women.

Thursday, Jan. 9.—For nations; rulers and people; for peace and religious liberty in the earth.

Friday, Jan. 10.—The Press; for a blessing on publishers, editors and authors; the cause of temperance and other social reforms.

Saturday, Jan. 11.—Home and Foreign Missions and the conversion of the world.

On Sabbath evening, Jan. 12, it is suggested that public union prayer meetings be held for prayer, praise and the presentation of the object and work of the Evangelical Alliance.

News of the Week.

—The Jesuits' church in Chicago has laid the corner-stone of a Catholic club-house, which contains a bowling-alley, billiard-hall and society rooms.

—The Western Union Telegraph Company has earned net in twelve years over $36,000,000, of which $14,000,000 have been paid to stockholders in dividends; and there is a project on foot for the capitalization of some $17,000,000 of surplus earnings. The above figures show that rates can be largely reduced and yet the business be a profitable one.

—Of the thirty-eight States, fifteen are virtually without public indebtedness: Colorado, Delaware, Kentucky, West Virginia, Wisconsin, California, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, Oregon and Vermont. Mississippi and Minnesota have each but a small debt, and the debt of the rich and prosperous Ohio is a mere trifle.

—Dispatches from central and western Missouri, Iowa and Kansas, say the heaviest snowstorm known for years prevailed last Thursday and Friday. The depth varies from ten to thirty inches, and in some localities very badly drifted. Railroads generally obstructed, and some of them have been obliged to suspend running trains altogether. At Lexington, Mo., and other places schools closed and business stopped. At Fulton and Rock Island the Mississippi river closed, and people walked across it on the ice. A dispatch from Kansas City, Mo, says: "The heaviest snowstorm ever known in this section began about eight o'clock Thursday night, and at nine o'clock Friday night the fall was between twenty-one and twenty-two inches, about which time the storm seemed to abate. A perfect gale attended the storm, and in many places the snow is drifted to the depth of six or eight feet. The storm extended eastward over Illinois, the snow falling heavily and obstructing business in the western counties.

—The Republican Senate, seconded by several patriotic Democratic Senators, this afternoon passed the Edmunds bill relative to presidential elections, and regulating the counting of the electoral vote. Such a law, carrying into effect the constitution provisions on the subject, would have prevented the scene of 1877, in which the Republic was on the verge of revolution. Leading statesmen of both political parties joined in securing its passage through the Senate, by a vote of 35 yeas to 26 nays.

—The decision of Attorney-General Devens to remain in the Cabinet is the result of great personal sacrifice on his part. He has always regretted having left his life position on the Supreme Bench in Massachusetts to take a place in the Cabinet, and greatly desired to be appointed Judge of the New England Circuit. He has decided not to accept, in order to relieve the President from the embarrassment of rearranging his Cabinet. It was discovered that grave political complications might result if it should become necessary to make a new Cabinet appointment at this time.

—The promptness with which the jury at Indianapolis returned a verdict of guilty, with the sentence of death, in the case of Merrick, the awful fiend who murdered his wife and left her body to be eaten up by hogs, produced in the court-room a demonstration of applause which the admonition of the judge was powerless to suppress. Women waved their handkerchiefs, and men clapped their hands and cried "Good!" at the righteous verdict.

—An explosion of nitro-glycerine and gunpowder occurred at the St. Bernard coal-mines, Arlington, Ky., last Friday. The shock was felt for miles. A train of mining-cars, mules and a negro driver were blown to atoms.

—The Princess Alice, third child and second daughter of Queen Victoria of England, died on Saturday last, the seventeenth anniversary of her father's death. The Princess Alice was married July 1, 1862, to Prince Ludwig of Hesse, who succeeded to the throne of the Grand Duchy, as Ludwig IV., June 13, 1877. She leaves five children, and has lost two. Her son Leopold, born in 1871, was accidentally killed by a fall in May, 1874, and her youngest daughter, Marie, born within a few days of that sad event, died a few weeks since of diphtheria, and the Princess Alice, always a devoted mother, while nursing her child was prostrated with the same disease, which terminated fatally. This death makes the first break in Queen Victoria's family of nine children.

—The motion for a vote of censure on the Afghanistan policy of the English government was, on Friday, defeated by a majority of 101, being nine or ten less than had been counted upon by Beaconsfield's supporters.

—General Roberts telegraphed from Afghanistan under date of Thursday as follows: "We have finished our reconnaissance to the top Shaturgardan Pass, and returned to Ali Khil without firing a shot. The country is friendly. I am rapidly fortifying the Peiwar Pass camp." General Browne has sent a sixth regiment back from Dakka to Peshawur on account of sickness. General Biddulph has constructed a road over Khojuk Pass unopposed.

--A correspondent at Peshawur understands that General Browne's advance on Jellalabad has commenced, and meets with no opposition. It is impossible that the Turkestan reinforcements, which the Ameer is reported to be intriguing for, will arrive in time.

The Turkestan Gazette states that the Chinese troops in Kashgar are concentrating to operate against old Kuldja, which is occupied by the Russians.

—A Constantinople dispatch says the Council of Ministers has decided to settle without delay the questions pending with Greece, Persia, and Montenegro and Austria, and conclude a definitive treaty with Russia as soon as possible.

—A dispatch from Constantinople under date of Dec. 15. states that Prince Lobanoff, the Russian Ambassador, has presented a note protesting against the issue of the new Turkish loan, and declaring that Turkey has no right to alienate her resources prior to liquidating her engagements, including the war indemnity. On the other hand dispatches from St. Petersburg, under date of Dec. 14, denies that Russia would object to the loan.

—A private dispatch from Lima, of the 16th ult., received in Panama, mentions the assassination of ex-President Pardo, of Peru. He was struck down by the assassin on entering the Senate Chamber. No disturbance followed the assassination, the country remaining quiet.

—The full particulars of the assassination of Don Manuel Pardo, ex-president of Peru, threw little light on the motives of the assassin. Pardo succeeded Balto, who was assassinated in 1872, as president of the republic. An attempt to assassinate the new president in 1874 was frustrated. His administration was one of the most successful in Peruvian history, and it was under his encouragement that many railroads were constructed. Pardo held office until Aug. 2, 1876, when he was succeeded by General Mariano Ignacio Prado, the present executive. On his retirement from the presidency Pardo was made president of the Senate, an office he held at the time of his death. He was shot at the entrance of the capitol by the sergeant of the guard, on duty as a guard of honor. The assassin said that there was a conspiracy in the guard to kill the ex-president, and that he fired his carbine in accordance with the programme agreed upon.

—A dispatch from Pesth says Count Schouvaloff's mission marks a change in the policy of Russia, who was previously disposed to strain her rights under the treaty of Berlin. The change is due to the general alarm of Europe, or hints received from Berlin, or domestic affairs. It is noticeable that when Prince Gortschakoff lately offered to go to Lavatia, he was informed that it was unnecessary.

The Health Reformer for December closes the 13th volume of this one of the best of health monthlies. The publishers announce a change in the name of the journal, which is hereafter to be known as Good Health, a name eminently appropriate for a journal of the recognized character of this. Under the new name and with a new dress this valuable periodical will undoubtedly become still more popular than it has heretofore been. The subscription price will remain the same, $1.00 a year. A specimen copy of the first number of Good Health may be obtained by addressing the publishers at Battle Creek, Mich.

Platform of the American Party.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discouraged.

9. That the government should furnish the people with an ample and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—At the late election the lodge was treated to an original burlesque at New Bedford, Mass. Five hundred tickets were distributed and some voted which were headed by a cut of Masonic emblems, the word "Together" in large letters, and the United States coat of arms, and then as follows:

For Mayor,
HIRAM ABIFF.
For Aldermen,
Ward 1—Boaz; s, b, o, z, sz, Boaz.
Ward 2—Jachin; s, j, c, b, i, n, ja, chin, Jachin.
Ward 3—Tubalcain; bal, tu, cain, tubal, Tubalcain.
Ward 4—Shibboleth; bo, shib, leth, shibbo, Shibboleth.
Ward 5—Jubelum.
Ward 6—Mahabone.

"Three Times Three for the Ten Thousand."

"Let us not stop until we get them, and then of course we will not, for we shall have only just begun." So writes R. J. Hathaway, Bedford, O., and sends four new subscriptions for one year each. He says: "These are not all I intend to get. I shall look after renewals also."

J. S. Rice, North Pownal, Maine, sends five for one year each and one for four months and writes: "I intend to send you ten if possible toward the 10,000 subscribers and more if I can. I have a hard piece of ground to work on, and I have to face the music almost alone in this part of the State. I never felt more sure that I was right in anything I ever undertook than I do in opposing and exposing the deception and wickedness of the abominable institution of Freemasonry."

H. C. Miller, Oxford, Butler Co., Ohio, sends two for sixteen months each, three for four months each and one for two months.

Sam'l Pratt, Worcester, Massachusetts, sends seven subscriptions for six months each, for a friend, and writes: "I hope to send other names on my own account soon."

Riley Wilder, Baraboo, Wisconsin, send four subscriptions for one year each, making with five names acknowledged in the Cynosure, Nov. 21st, nine. He writes: "I shall try to send you some more names."

Rev. W. W. Ames, Menomonee, Wisconsin, has fulfilled his pledge of four for one year each, made at the Illinois State meeting. He hopes to get more before March next. Jacob Grove has half fulfilled his pledge made at the same meeting. J. F. Browne sends three on his pledge for five.

J. S. McClelland, Oberlin, O., sends two for one year each and one for six months.

Nelson Daniells, Waucousta, Clinton Co., Mich., sends three subscriptions for four months each.

Geo. Ely, Monroe, Wis.; Mrs. A. I. Salisbury, Pascoag, R. I.; James Harrow, Riodel, Cal.; John Dorcas, Shiloh, Iowa; Aaron Sullivan, Masonvill, Iowa; Geo. Richey, Pataskala, Licking Co., Ohio; Edmund Tuttle, West Meriden, Conn.; A.W. Dunbar, Elkhart, Ind. (in about two weeks he expects to canvass for more subscribers,) Albert Crowell, Wilkesville, O.; and Wm. B. Walthal, Quaker Hill, Vermillion Co., Ind., each send two subscriptions.

We trust all interested in the cause of reform can unite with Geo. Richey in the prayer, "May God bless all who are laboring to increase the circulation of the Cynosure."

One lady sends her own new subsc. ption and writes: "I will be one read these words whose names are not now on the list do likewiee?

Another writes: "The Cynosure is worth more than $2.00 a year to me. I wish to pay the old price."

Anson Eastman, Warren's Corners, N. Y., writes: "I am at work for your paper. I will be on hand with names and money by January first. * * I have already seven subscribers in my club. Shall sell the papaper to every one I can.

MICHIGAN.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan State Christian Association opposed to secret societies will be held at Adrian, Michigan, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1879. The Convention will meet at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday evening and will hold day sessions during Wednesday and Thursday. Past Master Ronayne will attend and work the Masonic degrees, and other able speakers will also be present and address the Convention. Now, friends, let us have a general rally at Adrian and help once more to sink Freemasonry out of sight.

E. MATHEWS, Sec'y.

PAST MASTER RONAYNE.

From the State Convention, Adrian, Michigan, I go to Angola, Indiana; from Angola to Shade, Ohio. Friends in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania or New York desiring to have the Masonic degrees worked in their respective localities are requested to write to me at once, so that a regular programme of work may be made out.

E. RONAYNE,
104 Bremer St., Chicago, Ill.

CANADA.

Will friends of the anti-secrecy reform in Canada who desire to engage in active measures for instructing the ignorant and exposing the wickedness of the secret orders, write me at 221 West Madison street, Chicago.

My object is to ascertain what the people desire; and, should the facts warrant, to hold a convention at some central point convenient of access, and in connection with Bro. Ronayne and others to work the degrees and organize for systematic effort. Prompt responses are desired, so that if anything is done it may be arranged in connection with work in New England, to save time and expense.

J. P. STODDARD, Sec. N. C. A.

10,000 SUBSCRIBERS.—Rev. H. T. Cheever, President of the National Convention, writes: "The very best thing that can be done in New England for our cause is to procure the wide circulation of the Cynosure. It is the most available and least expensive power for good that we can command. Would that its circulation might be increased a hundred fold." Let every subscriber resolve to send at least one new name before January 1st—AND THEN DO IT.

The special rate for the Cynosure till March 1st next is $1.50. The regular price is $2 00, which will be resumed after that date. Remember, $1.50 till March 1st for old or new subscribers.

Topics of the Time.

There will be peace and joy in a million homes to greet the New Year next Wednesday. Parents and children will rejoice in the gifts prompted by mutual affection. Prodigals will return to their Father's house with new resolutions for a better life. Christians will begin with new zeal another year's work for their Lord and Redeemer. All will be reminded of their obligations to God in whose hand are all their good gifts. It is well that the new year should begin hopefully; and it will not check the joy or repress the good cheer of the day to remember to share our good things with the poor. At some time we may learn that it is an indirect mercy that we have the poor always with us. The best enjoyed gifts will be to them. "Blessed is he that remembereth the poor."

Secretary Sherman received the congratulations of the country last Tuesday on the actual resumption of specie payments among the brokers of New York. Gold and greenbacks having reached a dead level the labor of the treasury department is anticipated and its head relieved of a great burden. It was in December, 1861, seventeen years ago, that specie payment was suspended. The effect of this success of Mr. Sherman's policy will be greatly to the credit of our nation abroad, and will strengthen our finances at home. Time must elapse before the full benefit of financial stability will be realized throughout the country, but if the present basis can be quietly maintained there must soon result new activity in business and a degree of relief from the straitened situation of the last five years.

There is a question of dollars and cents suggested by the statement that the debt of New York city, largely the result of the Masonic Tammany rule, amounts to the enormous sum of $230,000,000, or over two hundred dollars for each inhabitant of the city. Several States are collecting the figures of their indebtedness, general and local. The reports are not pleasant, but will be useful as a medicine. In Illinois the counties, townships and towns have an aggregate debt of nearly fifty-two million dollars. From reports in other States it is estimated that the aggregate local indebtedness throughout the Union equals our whole national debt. This vast amount cannot be repudiated, but must certainly be paid, and its burden will fall heavily upon every family, while the national debt will be felt as a personal inconvenience to but very few. It is a question worth considering how far the lodge is responsible for these crushing burdens. It may be impossible to follow out each case as it may be done in New York, but in the opportunities to office-seekers, and the immunity to defaulters and others who have committed crimes upon the public credit given by the the lodge we may trace its responsibility for public debts. This problem must in the near future be approximately solved, when American voters shall determine that the lodge and politics shall be separated.

The extreme penalty of the law was visited last Wednesday upon Jack Kehoe, the king of the Mollie Maguires who was hung at Pottsville, Pennsylvania. The story of his career of crime is graphically told in detective Pinkerton's record of the overthrow of the Mollies, whose chief agent in the work was nearly poisoned by Kehoe. In his confidence in the power of his secret order to clear him from the power of the law, Kehoe's case is a perfect illustration of a leading feature of the whole lodge system. He was not only leader of the Mollies but a great politician, and held the important office of sheriff. He knew the potency of the votes of his society, and held it in his hand. He laughed at his prosecutors and had no doubt of his pardon. "The old man at Harrisburg will never dare go back on me," he said, referring to Governor Hartranft. But he counted too much on the power of his order, and in spite of the most desperate efforts, continued since 1876, he failed to receive the pardon, though it was not till the 18th of November that the Governor finally signed the death warrant. Thus must hope of immunity through the lodge perish from the breast of every criminal. The Keiths and Kehoes must be put on a level.

With all due respect to the memory of the dead, the lessons of two lives of public men who passed away last week should not be lost by American youth. Beverly B. Douglass, member of Congress from Virginia, died last Saturday morning after a brief illness brought on by the use of intoxicating liquor. Prominent in Virginia politics for many years, an ex-Confederate officer, and now serving his fourth term in Congress, he yet abused his great opportunities for usefulness and prostrated them before a base appetite for liquor. He even went so far as to make disgraceful displays of himself in the House while drunk, and has several times put the Speaker to the painful necessity of ordering his removal from the Hall. "Whisky," says the laconic dispatch, "was the cause of his ruin in private and public life, and finally killed him." A more conspicuous case is the death of Bayard Taylor, the representative of our government at the German court, and well known as traveller, author and poet. The scenes attending his departure for Europe last summer were fully noticed at that time as a disgrace to the nation. His friend, the poet Stedman, confesses to the power and evil effect of Mr. Taylor's intemperate habits, while attempting to palliate them, and ward off the attacks of enemies who charged Taylor with excessive beer-drinking. "He was not an excessive drinker," he says, "though what he did take may have brought on his disease." Thus does he atone for the evil influence over American young men, who, attracted by the brilliancy of his genius and the honor of his name, have followed him into the haunts of besotted appetite to swill beer amid the stinking fumes of tobacco.

The Dying Year.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

Yes, the year is growing old,
And his eye is pale and bleared!
Death, with frosty hand and cold,
Plucks the old man by the beard;
Sorely—sorely.

The leaves are falling, falling,
Solemnly and slowly;
Caw! Caw! the rooks are calling;
It is a sound of woe!
A sound of woe!

Through woods and mountain passes,
The winds like anthems roll;
They are singing solemn masses,
Singing, "Pray for this poor soul!
Pray—pray!"

And the hooded clouds, like friars,
Tell their beads in drops of rain,
And patter their doleful prayers!—
But their prayers are all in vain,—
All in vain!

There he stands in the foul weather,
The foolish, fond Old Year,
Crowned with wreaths of weeds and heather,
Like weak kings of yore, I fear,
All too late.

Then comes the summer-like day,
Bids the old man rejoice!
His joy! his last! O, the old man gray,
Loveth that ever soft voice,
Gentle and low.

To the crimson woods he saith—
To the voice gentle and low
Of the soft air, like a daughter's breath—
"Pray do not mock me so!
Do not laugh at me."

And now the sweet day is dead;
Cold in his arms it lies;
No sign from its breast is spread
Over the glassy skies.
No mist or stain!

Then, too, the old year dieth,
And the forests utter a moan,
Like the voice of one who crieth
In the wilderness alone:
"Vex not his ghost!"

Then comes an awful roar,
Gathering and sounding on,
The stormy wind from Labrador,
The wind Euroclydon,
The storm wind!

Howl! howl! and from the forest
Sweep the old leaves away;
Would the sins that thou abhorrest,
O, Soul! could thus decay!
And be swept away!

For there will come a mightier blast—
There shall be a harder day!
And the stars from heaven down cast,
Like red leaves be swept away!
*Kyrie eleyson!
Christe eleyson!
*God have mercy!
Christ have mercy!

Is Vermont Waking up?

A writer from Vermont, whose letter is published in a religious paper (if a paper of religious pretensions can be called such in these days) asks, as if waking up from a long nap, what New England State has, within a year, passed laws against lotteries in churches.

Now we had supposed that almost every State in the Union, except perhaps Louisiana, which is entirely given over to Jesuitry and the lodge, had passed laws for the protection of their citizens against lottery swindling. These laws, however, were not especially designed to protect society against swindling from clergymen and church members. Anything done in the name of religion, even if it be stealing or murder, is of course sanctified under the moral teaching of the lodge and the confessional, those twin relics of barbarism.

But in sober earnestness, we never had supposed that laws were necessary for protecting the purity of religious institutions. We had supposed that it was the office of these institutions to protect the purity of the laws. The idea of a drunken set of infidel legislators, elected by the lodge, passing laws to prevent churches swindling seems preposterous. If the religion of a people will not prevent them from making their churches instruments for setting up the old exploded lottery business, nothing else will.

We doubt if there is any State in the Union where, under the auspices of the church, the lottery business (in the name of the Lord, of course!) has been carried on more extensively, of late years, than it has in Vermont, although there is a law on the pages of the statute book against it. But what are laws where Freemasonry becomes the power behind the throne, as it has done in Vermont? Where men make use of the Scriptures as Freemasons do, for the better concealment of their knaveries, mere laws of the State will have but little force. If sacred Scriptural terms and phrases are made use of by the lodge as means for circumventing law, of course the laws themselves will be used for that purpose. One of the chief features of the lodge appears to be to teach men that the highest evidence of good citizenship is—not obedience to the laws, but a successful evasion of them.

It cannot be disguised from any observing person that the return of Freemasonry to Vermont is signalised by a seven-fold intensity of its former arrogance and contempt of law, and if the people of that State wish to rescue their liberties from its deadly grasp, they must arouse and expel the foul spirit from their borders once more. It has injured the good name and character of the State to a frightful extent. While the State has been struggling to save its independence and freedom from the slave power, it has been falling under the control of the lodge-power, which is the more dangerous of the two, because the less suspected, while insidiously making its aggressions, in its very midst, under false pretences of religion, benevolence and morality.

But a little while ago Vermont was in reality what it was said to be—the pole-star State of the Union. Is she awarded that position now? Has the State preserved that moral and political weight that she possessed at the out-break of the war? Does she any longer possess the power of preventing or opposing the game of grab upon the treasury?

The question for the people to decide is, whether they will attempt to restore the State to its former elevated position in the Union as a model republican State, or whether they will still suffer it to be dragged at the tail of this foreign power, the Masonic lodge. If they decide upon the former course, they will have to wake up, and that pretty quick too, from a long nap, and set to work in right good earnest. Is the Vermonter afraid to assert his independence in face of this English aristocratic institution the LODGE? AMERICAN.

Who will Dare Take the Responsibility?

BY H. H. HINMAN.

"And if a soul sin and hear the voice of swearing and is a witness, whether he hath seen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity."—Lev. 5: 1.

"Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul; he heareth cursing and bewrayeth it not."—Prov. 29: 24.

The sin here condemned is silence in reference to the sins of others. To hear unholy and sinful swearing, or to know that it takes place, and to consent to, or be silent in reference to it is to be involved in its guilt. As silence in reference to a theft of which we have perfect knowledge makes us partners with the thief, so silence in reference to the blasphemy that we hear makes it our blasphemy, and he that is guilty of it "hateth his own soul."

How forcibly this applies to those who silently drop out of the lodge, ashamed of its abominations, deeply convinced of its wickedness and yet lack the courage to expose its shams and renounce its profane oaths. They have heard the voice of swearing and "do not utter it." They hear the cursing and "betray it not." Nay, more and worse, they hold their obligations to their companions in sin to be paramount to their duty to obey God. They keep their unholy covenant to always conceal this wickedness, when God says that in so doing they hate their own souls.

They think to be relieved from all guilt by being relieved from active participation in the lodge, but as well might the thief who only waits and watches while the theft is committed, deem himself innocent. He is indeed partner with the thief, for not only does he silently know of the unholy swearing, but he knows too that the lodge virtually steals the initiation fees of every candidate and the lodge dues of every member and sells them for pretended secrets, falsehood, blasphemy and idolatries. Downright stealing is less culpable than this, and yet every one of these silent seceders is (perhaps unconsciously) guilty of this wrong.

Nor can silence on the part of those watchmen who have never been involved in this sin be in any wise justified. True, they have never heard the voice of the swearing, but they know that it takes place. They have not been personal witnesses of the theft, but they know it takes place and refuse to give the warning. "If the watchman see the sword coming and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the sword come and take away any person from among them, he shall be taken away in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand."—Ez. 33: 6.

Is all Charity Charitable?

Bible charity suffereth long and is kind. But is all charity of the same disposition? There is some so-called charity which can not suffer for a moment any opposition to its dictates. It has a fine theory about how people ought to overlook the faults, follies, failings and mistakes of others. But let any one presume to question the wisdom of this charity, in all its ways and views, and he will find that some charity vaunteth itself and is puffed up.

Some charity is not very kind. I have before me an authorized report of the recent session of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows of Illinois, held in Representatives Hall, Springfield—the capital of the State. It appears from the figures given that the total income of the lodges of that State is the large sum of $215,506.31. The following sums were paid out during the year for charitable purposes: For the relief of brothers' families, $32 507.69; for widowed families, $5,629.98; for burying the dead, 8 150 42; for special relief, $4,972 22; for the education of orphans, $261.75. Total charities, $46,549.84. If this is deducted from the revenue of the Grand Lodge, there is a remainder of $168,956 47 not expended for charities. But the order of Odd-fellowship claims to be a distinctively charitable institution. Why is it, then, that less than one-third of the income of the order in a State is devoted to charity? What is done with more than two-thirds of the sum which is raised from the membership for distinctively charitable purposes? Does it take over two-thirds to run the order? If so, then it is dear charity to the common membership, most of whom are poor men, and give to the order hoping to lay up thus against the time of need for their families. It looks, indeed, as if it took a large amount to pay the expenses of the Grand Lodge; for the meeting at Springfield cost about $15 000. Can charity which is so expensive be charitable? Let people think of this question before defending this order or entering into it. The widows of Illinois Odd-fellows did not receive the past year much over one-third of the money spent by the Grand Lodge in a session of a few days. It is rather astonishing, too, that while there are three hundred and twenty-six widowed families under the care of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, there were only $261.75 spent by it the last year for the education of orphans. That is less than a dollar a family for education. Contrast this with $15,000 for the expenses of holding one session of the Grand Lodge, and that, too, in the Hall of Representatives, which probably cost nothing in the way of rent. We may well ask whether all charity is charitable.

I am now speaking of a charitable order which frequently vaunteth itself enough to depreciate the charity of the church of Christ. Honest members of the church lament its lack of charity in being kind to the needy. But what member of a charitable secret order has ever been known to lament its charity even in the face of such statistical facts as we have here presented? Attack such an order on whatever side you may, and the cry of its apologists will ever be that it is a good charitable institution, and ought not to be criticised. Is such not puffed up? Does it not behave itself unseemly when the grand masters and most worthy managers, of every name, are devouring widows' houses in expensive suppers at fifteen thousand dollar sessions of the Grand Lodge? When such charity criticises the charity of the church, which has to struggle against all the corrupt propensities of the human heart, does it not think evil? Charity that thinketh evil is not charitable. I might go further and say that when a charitable institution which is all charity, pockets and squanders, through its army of grand managers, over two-thirds of the money given in the name of charity, it does in this thing seek its own. Is charity which seeks its own charitable?

I have herein criticised some of the inconsistencies of a certain form of charity, just as I would any other thing open to criticism. If the very charitable folks who think so much of such kinds of charity should see this, and become easily provoked, I must form a still lower opinion of charity which seems to me be uncharitable. W. O. TOBEY.

WAS SOLOMON A MASON?

Yes, for we read in the 11th chapter of I. Kings that he "did evil in the sight of the Lord * * * and built high places (Masonic temples) for the strange gods of his wives, and went after Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidemers and Milcom (Molech) the abomination of the Ammonite." That is, he was initiated into these ancient mysteries, which Freemasonry claims to be the continuation of. And what was the result? The Lord was angry with Solomon and stirred up adversaries against him.

As we go further in the history of the Jews we find other eminent Masons mentioned; as Jereboam the son of Nebat, whose peculiar characteristic was that he "made Israel to sin." Then there was Ahab and his wife Jezebel, that eminent androgynous Mason. If Masonry is, as it claims to be, a continuation of the ancient mysteries, then it is only fair to class the idolatrous kings of Judah and Israel as Masons. How does it suit? J. E. HOLMES.

THE CHURCH AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

ADDRESS BY BISHOP M. WRIGHT, D.D.

Delivered in the College chapel at Wheaton, November 21, 1878, before the State Christian Association of Illinois.

Our address this evening will be on the relation of the church of Christ to secret societies. The first inquiry is as to the nature of the church. It is declared to be the body of Christ, the immaculate Son of God, who is spotless in his righteousness, the very embodiment of holiness. How high then must be the standard of morals in his church! But further: It is declared to be "the church of the living God." Worthy of such a title Christ wills it should be. It is declared to be the pillar and ground of truth. Surely then it should not harbor any great error or sin. It is ordained as the great conservator of virtue, righteousness and truth; nor is it less ordained as the chief antagonist of all sin and wrong. Our Lord was exalted because he loved righteousness and hated iniquity. So is his church exalted in proportion to its love of the one and hatred of the other. It not only takes much of the love of righteousness, but also a great deal of the hatred of iniquity to constitute a first-class Christian, or a real good Christian church.

We next inquire, What is the prerogative of the church as to the government of its members. It is self-evident that the King of saints would not ordain that the church should be without rule and authority—the very embodiment of disorder and anarchy. Christ says that an offender who refuses to hear the church—to hear in the sense of conforming to its righteous requirements—shall be regarded as a heathen, regarded even as the Jews regarded the rapacious publican. In the same connection he enjoins on the church to bind, that is, prohibit, whatsoever heaven would prohibit, and to loose, that is permit, whatsoever heaven would permit. So far then from the church being the mere receptacle of lawless elements, it is required to bind—prohibit—whatsoever is not in harmony with the principles taught by Christ and the apostles. That Christian has a dull conscience who will say that the church has no right to forbid anything if it be not specifically condemned by name in the Scriptures; for gambling, horse-racing, lotteries, bull fighting, and many other evils are not condemned by name, though they are condemned by the enlightened judgment of well-informed evangelical Christians everywhere.

The apostle taught the Christians of his day that they should withdraw themselves, as to fellowship, from such as walk disorderly, and not according to apostlic tradition. The church of Corinth is expressly instructed to deliver the offender against purity unto Satan; that is, put him out of the pale of the church. And this, though it would appear from a subsequent epistle that this offender was a real convert to Christianity, and that the sin in which he persisted had been entered into when he was ignorant of its deep culpability. The apostle also instructs Titus that heretics, after repeated admonition has failed, should be rejected; that is, put out of the church.

The church of Pergamos is severely censured by the Lord Jesus himself for not exercising discipline against false doctrine and evil practices. The church of Thyatira is even threatened by him with the judgments of God for laxity in the exercise of discipline.

I have thus dwelled briefly on this subject because some imagine that the church should exercise little or no discipline toward its members. Such would tell us that if a man be converted the church is bound to take him into its pale even though he come bidding defiance to its regulations and breathing contempt for some of its sacred principles. They teach us too that it is under solemn obligation to keep him in, though he persist in his pernicious practices, just so long as they can not deny his having some of the virtues of Christianity. Paul says, "Purge out the old leaven." He is right; for, as he says, "A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

The church should receive members as disciples, not as dictators; as subjects of government, not as if they were to be independent sovereignties, bringing in anything they like, however disagreeable to other members of the commonwealth, and however pernicious to the body ecclesiastic. A political government justly claims the right to require of its citizens conformity to wholesome regulations, deemed necessary for the general good, even though some may not see the wisdom of some of these regulations. What ship-crew would be obliged to receive kegs of powder or cans of nitro-glycerine aboard the vessel, contrary to the will of the officers of the ship, just because some passenger or some one of the crew thought he might have use for these explosives on the voyage or on the far-off shore? What family would be obliged to receive a keg of rum into its cellar, or a pack of hounds into its parlor or kitchen, because some one desirous of becoming a member of the household and a partaker of its privileges and associations has rum or houuds which he desires to have quartered there? Neither is the church bound to receive into its fellowship liquor-sellers, liquor-drinkers, gamblers, secretists or slave-holders, because some professing conversion and practicing some of the virtues enjoined by Christianity desire to have a place in the household of faith and to become partakers of the privileges of the church, and yet would bring in with them those evil things. The church has some rights which even dram-sellers, Freemasons and soul-drivers should be compelled to respect.

But it may be asked, Have not some men been dram-sellers, secretists and slave-holders and yet Christians? Why, sirs, we do not deny that some men in this and other ages of the world have been true converts to Christianity, and yet have held some pernicious error or continued some most reprehensible practice. Some of the most pious elders and deacons in the American churches of fifty years ago were distillers and venders of intoxicating drinks. Shall saloon-keepers therefore have a place in the church now? The pious Francis de Sales and the saintly and accomplished Fenelon were both Roman Catholics, holding many of the errors of Romanism. Shall bead-counters and image worshipers therefore be tolerated in Protestant churches? Some of the most pious deacons and divines of America sanctioned both by precept and practice slavery, which John Wesley truly characterized as "the sum of all villainies." The pious and learned John Calvin was the persecutor of Servetus, and the amiable Melancthon by letter approved of the execution of that unfortunate errorist. Some evidently genuine converts to Christianity have, for a time at least, continued in polygamy. Indeed, if no sin is to be forbidden in the church provided that sin now is, or ever has been, practiced by any believed to be genuine Christians, church-discipline is reduced too low to be anything less than a stench to any true moralist. If any evil or sin has beguiled any real Christian or Christians, it is for that reason the more to be abhorred, the more to be reprobated, the more to be proscribed. The question is not whether that sin has washed itself clean and merited immunity by seducing some sincere Christian or Christians into its commission, but the real question is whether that evil or sin is contrary to the principles of our holy Christianity. Christ and his apostles laid down general principles, with which if anything ancient or modern, whatever be the variations of its form or name, does not harmonize, it is to be condemned.

The next question for our investigation is as to the nature of secretism, of which Freemasonry is the strongest type and the most conspicuous representative. Has the nature of secretism been made known by the revelations of those who have been members of its various orders? It has been so made known. But as Freemasonry is the boldest type of secretism, and its major representative, our inquiry shall be specifically concerning this mother of a large group of veiled daughters who seduce a multitude of victims to their nocturnal habitations.

Revelations of Freemasonry have been made by intelligent and reputable seceding members of the lodge. These revelations all agree, substantially, though made by different men. The truth of these revelations has been attested by hundreds of men of the best character, some of these being among the most illustrious men of the age, as, Richard Rush, William Wirt and Charles G. Finney. Few things have been proved by so many infallible witnesses as has been the truth of the revelations of Freemasonry. Even its own chief officers in Rhode Island testified under oath before a committee of the legislature as to the obligations of Freemasonry, confirming, substantially, the truth of the revelations made by seceding Masons. That man is exceedingly credulous who can believe that Freemasonry could exist with hundreds of thousands of members for more than a century and a half and not be revealed by even one of them. It is a well-known fact that reputable Freemasons have never openly, squarely and explicitly made public denial of the substantial truth of those revelations of the order, though the order at one time almost went down before those revelations. It is also noticeable that Freemasons of character have never treated such men as Finney, Aydelotte, Bernard, Wirt, Rush, and others of like character, as if they had been guilty of the most outrageous falsehood. Indeed, so clear is the proof that the revelations of Freemasonry are substantially true that for any one to say in the face of these revelations that he knows nothing about Freemasonry, and can know nothing about it, is tantamount to a frank confession that he is one of that class of whom our Saviour said they loved "darkness rather than light." The man who, as an intelligent Christian minister, will discredit the truths of the revelations concerning Freemasonry deserves to be branded as a traitor to truth. He shows that either he is too great a coward to avow his real convictions, or that he suppresses them because, like Balaam, he loves the wages of unrighteousness. He deserves the scorn of every lover of truth.

We may next inquire, What are the evil things to be charged against Freemasonry and reprobated by the Christian church?

First. Freemasonry, as all other secret orders, resorts to underhand methods to promote its ends. It requires no argument, surely, to convince any Christian that Christ and his apostles never by precept or example taught or sanctioned such methods. The open conduct, the guilelessness, the sincerity of our Saviour and of the holy men who were his primitive followers is a standing rebuke to Freemasonry and to all secretists. The methods of secretism are the very methods to which sin and Satan are represented in the Scriptures as ever resorting—covert, guileful, unfair, selfish, clannish, deceptive, and yet brazen and presumptuous when occasion serves.

Second. Freemasonry is a conspiracy against those outside the lodge. It proposes to rescue from deserved punishment, so far as consistent with Masonic interests, offenders against law who claim the protection promised the offender under solemn oaths and awful penal imprecations. It promises political preferment to men, in virtue, not of their merit alone, but of their relation to the order. It promises help to a Masonic brother in distress, and obedience to the summons of the lodge, though these might necessarily take precedence of similar claims coming from worthier friends and the best of Christians outside the lodge.

It takes the name of God in vain, thus violating the second commandment of the decalogue and the precepts of Christ. In proof of this we call attention, first, to the fact that all extra-judicial oaths involve the taking of the name of God in vain; secondly, all oaths taken to be violated, as every one knows many oaths of Freemasonry are, and necessarily must be, do take the name of God in vain; thirdly, all oaths which are barbarous in the penalties imprecated, and unlawful as to the ends to be attained by their taking, do use the name of God in vain. Masonic oaths are confessedly extra-judicial; they contain terms which no one can fulfill, and hence are false; the penalties imprecated are inhuman and barbarous, and the ends to be attained are guileful, covert, and clannish; so then the many oaths with which Freemasonry paves the way of its candidates from degree to degree are flagrant violations of both the decalogue and the precepts of Christ. If profane swearing, persistent profane swearing, is to be tolerated in the Christian church, then Freemasonry may be tolerated, but if profanity is to be disciplined, then Freemasonry must be disciplined, for it is gigantic in its profanity. What a farce it is to require confession, on pain of expulsion, of a church member for the utterance of an oath under circumstances of excitement, and at the same time let go scot-free the hoary-headed Freemason shrouded with oaths as dark as Mizraim's night of wrath! Masons sitting in judgment in such cases would furnish an aggravated instance of Satan reproving sin!

But Freemasonry perverts Scripture fearfully, and commingles its sacred truths with fables. The story of Solomon and Hiram Abiff being associated in a lodge held in the "holy of holies," of King Solomon's temple (!) is absurd, unscriptural, and ridiculous beyond degree; yet for more than a century past this has been gravely told as if it were a historic truth to every one initiated into a Master Mason's lodge. King Solomon, too, after the fabled tragic death and burial of Hiram, is represented as raising him from a grave "six feet perpendicular," by the master's grip, upon the five points of fellowship, which are "foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back, and mouth to ear." A sweet time that, with a corpse of fourteen days' interment, the effluvia repelling those who had unearthed it and who had found the flesh slipping from the bones when they laid hold of its fingers! And we are further informed that this corpse was buried under the holy of holies, and a marble slab erected over it (in the most holy place of course), with a most fanciful inscription on it! This in the holy of holies, the place too sacred for aught but the golden censer, the ark of the covenant, the mercy-seat, the golden vessel of manna, Aaron's rod that budded, the tables of the covenant, and "the cherubim of glory shadowing the mercy-seat." A monument of Hiram erected in that holy place, where the high priest himself could enter only once a year! Hiram's Freemasonry is only a myth; his being raised out of the grave by King Solomon on the five points of fellowship is a ridiculous and disgusting myth; and that part of the story representing him as being slain by three Tyrians bearing Roman names, three hundred years before Rome was founded, must be the forefather of all those Irish bulls which have since so often cheered the mirth-loving hearts of the sons Erin. Not less contradictory of both Scripture and common sense is the Masonic story of the ark of the covenant (containing a copy of the Pentateuch) being found long after Solomon's reign, in a vault constructed deep underground by Hiram Abiff, just as if every intelligent Bible reader did not know that the ark of the covenant was in the holy of holies after the completion of the temple, during the days of Solomon, and long after! Equally ridiculous, as well as profane, is the story of the Masonic discovery of the golden plate engraved by Enoch, giving the true pronunciation of the name of Deity, indicating this by vowel points such as every scholar knows were never used till several centuries after the birth of Christ—more than three thousand five hundred years after the translation of Enoch! So it appears that Freemasonry, historically founded on a fable in the very foundation structure of several of its degrees, not only profanes the Scriptures by mixing its historical truths with ridiculous and unlearned fables, but blushlessly violates the commandment forbidding false witness, as it also does that forbidding the taking of God's name in vain. What man that loves the truth can uphold Freemasonry, or how can any church professing to be a part of the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth, tolerate in its pale those who support such profane and even sacrilegious falsehoods?

Freemasonry also has a worship not in the name of Christ, and hence profane. Its worship being deistic is a denial of the Redeemer and an insult to him who bought us with his own precious blood! Can a Christian church tolerate its members in supporting and partaking of such worship, any more than it could tolerate its communicants in participating in the worship of a Mohammedan mosque, or that of a heathen temple? The ritual of the side degrees of Masonry, sometimes called Christian, so far from being evangelical, is, if possible, more profane than the deistic degrees; for it prostitutes the name of Christ to the most profane uses.

Let us look at the effect of Freemasonry on the church. It builds up a privileged order and promotes favoritism in the church — lodge-connection often outweighing real merit and true piety. It must needs promote jealousies in the church between lodgemen and those solely churchmen. It infuses a Masonic spirit and introduces Masonic methods into the ministry and into the church. It attempts to mingle clannism with the broad loving spirit of Christian benevolence, to the freezing out and suppression of the latter. It often controls the choice of pastors, and holds their continuance in charges in its hands, thus making loyalty to God subordinate to devotion to the lodge. If the pastor be of a weak moral nature, and cowardly, as too many are, it makes a dissimulator out of him—a sort of respectable hypocrite. As many lodgemen know the inconsistency of Masonry with the pure Gospel of Christ, it destroys the confidence of these in ministers and other professing Christians who delight in the folly and mummery and blasphemy and plottings of the lodge. It weakens the spirituality of the church members—if they have any—who attend the lodge; and it often draws upon their attendance on worship and business meetings. It gradually introduces skepticism, deism, ritualism, and irreverence toward sacred things, familiarizing, as it does, its members to the profane use of the Bible, of religious ceremonies, and even of the sacraments; for it has in some of its degrees a shocking representation of the eucharist, and in others, of baptism — of course not calling them by these names, though meaning something resembling them, especially the sacrament of baptism.

The higher degrees of Masonry bind its members even to bring condign punishment on any Masons who may violate their clannish and profane obligations; and these higher degrees control the lower ones, which by oath put themselves into relations of obedience to their superiors.

The lodge, too, often causes men to put their reliance for eternal salvation on the morality and worship of Freemasonry. It does this even if it do not teach this directly. But some authorities, as Mackey, do so teach. Shall a system fraught with so much ill to saint and sinner, to the church and to the world, pass undisciplined and unrebuked of Zion, even thrusting its most zealous devotees into the highest offices of the church—and this by Masonic methods? Reason, religion, the Bible of God, and the Holy Spirit all join in forbidding it; and soon all the people shall say, Amen.

I desire to emphasize the fact that one of the strongest stays of Freemasonry, and other forms of secretism, is their sanction by the church. Without this sanction Masonry could not have reached its present height of power; and without it the decline, if not the very death of the order would be rapid. The churches of America are greatly responsible to-day for the power and evil exerted by this great secret organization, which, by its methods, eludes and sometimes defies both church and state. That the lodge, to a great extent, dictates the election and appointment of officers of state, civil and military, can not be questioned, as such is even the quiet boast of members of the order. Little less does it dictate as to the pastors and officers of many Christian churches which yield supinely—if they do not deport themselves obsequiously —to its pleasure. Then, that members of Christian churches should not be permitted to be adherents of the lodge, and partakers of its worship, practicing also its methods, while holding the relation of communicants in the church of Christ, is too clear to be reasonably questioned in the light of truth and facts.

But we may next inquire, What should be the position of the church toward minor secret orders? These orders have all the seductive characteristics of Freemasonry. They often exert a more active and mischievous influence than Masonry, just as tattlers are often more harmful than well-defined liars. The minor orders often ingratiate themselves with the better class of moralists by having for their ostensible object some great moral or political or humanitarian reform or benefit. Some of these minor orders aim mainly to seduce the young of both sexes into their lodges, demoralizing them as to true Christian methods, and as to true Christian worship, in the formative period of their moral and religious character and tastes. They are nurseries of the major orders, and, to use another figure, the stepping-stones of Freemasonry, To aim a blow at the major orders, and yet tolerate the minor orders, seems little or nothing short of folly. It is like expelling from the family circle the older sons who have become bearded and confirmed drunkards, and yet allowing the younger sons to freely visit the same beer-shops which have done the elementary work in making the full-grown and besotted elderly sons almost hopeless drunkards. To tolerate the minor orders is to cherish the common schools and academies of secretism, which are to furnish freshmen for the Masonic college and Knights Templar university. It is to protect the Masonic Sabbath school, organized and superintended by Freemasons and Odd-fellows, to fill their lodges with members when these pupils shall have reached bearded strength, the work of their training being more than half done before they are matriculated as Entered Apprentices in the Masonic college.

Indeed, if Freemasons swear, so do the minor orders—less profanely, it may be. If they do not swear by heaven or God's throne, and thus by him that sitteth thereon, they do swear by themselves, which is equally forbidden of Jesus Christ. They are like the major orders in their underhand methods and their profane worship. There is surely no good reason why Zion should not be as free of their pernicious influence as it should be of that of the major orders. Long enough shaded and polluted by the lodge, it is high time that she should put on her beautiful garments; that she should arise and shine in the glory of the Lord; that she should look forth as the morning, as fair as the moon, as clear as the sun, and as terrible as an army with banners to the hosts of darkness and death. Blessed be the Lord, who has said that against his church the gates of hell shall not prevail.

Utica, Minn., Dec. 16.

Dear K.:—The State Convention closed at St. Charles on Saturday evening with the third degree of A. F. and A. M.. rendered by Bro. Ronayne in his accustomed masterly and convincing manner. The brethren have done themselves much credit and the cause of God signal service in preparing the way and conducting the convention to a very successful termination. An organization promising much in the immediate future was effected, which starts off under the leadership of Prof. Paine, with Christian enthusiasm. A State Lecturer, to work in. this State and Wisconsin, is greatly desired and very much needed, but the stringency of the times enjoins the friends from doing or promising to do what they would like to for his support. A man of God, with gifts and qualifications for the work, need not fear starvation, however, if he should give himself to the work here. I expect to accompany Bro. Ronayne to Menominee, Wis., and hope to reach Chicago this week. Bro. Fenton, Secretary of the State Association, will forward you minutes for publication. J. P. Stoddard.

Dodge County, Minnesota.

The Dodge County Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, held its third annual session at Wasioja, Dec. 4 and 5, 1878.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 4, an able and interesting address was delivered by Rev. Wm. Fenton, of St. Paul, on the Religion of Freemasonry, in which he read largely from Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, and other Masonic works, showing that Masonry claims to be a religion which frees men from sin and brings them to the Grand Lodge above by Masonic rites and precepts, without the merits of Christ or faith in him; and also showing that Christ is excluded from the lodge and from Masonry by its precepts and declared nature.

Thursday, Dec. 5.—Met at 9 A. M. An essay was read by F. L. Garrison on the subject, "Can a man be an intelligent Christian, and at the same time an intelligent Freemason?" in which he showed that the religion of Masonry is opposed to Christianity, and in its nature opposed to the law of God. After discussing this paper the Association adjourned for dinner.

In the afternoon the following topics were discussed: "Good men are Masons, therefore Masonry must be good;" "Is Freemasonry a benevolent institution?" After discussion on these the Association proceeded to election of officers; after which W. F. Hillman read an essay on "How to Interest Christians in Anti-secret Work." After which Prof. E. G. Paine, of the Wasioja Seminary, read an essay on "The Terrorism of the Lodge," in which he read several anonymous letters of warning which had been received by those who are laboring in the anti-secret cause.

By vote of the Association the following resolution was adopted as the sentiment of the Association:

Whereas, The standard authorities of Freemasonry acknowledge that they in their system of salvation reject Christ, and retain the symbolism of the worship of Baal-Peor, which so provoked the fierce wrath of God in ancient times; therefore,

Resolved, That we will not countenance their evil deeds, lest we be partakers of their sins, and provoke the wrath of God.

Thursday evening another lecture was delivered by Rev. Wm. Fenton, before a numerous congregation, which was followed by short speeches from several others, after which the meeting adjourned in much enthusiasm.

Notes from New England.

Weatogue, Conn., Dec. 19.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—On the 11th inst. I came to Windsor, the oldest town in Connecticut. Its official records date back to 1640, and its ancient burying-ground contains stones with dates but little later. The Congregational church is a large, fine building, rebuilt in 1844. It is a fine farming town and most carefully cultivated—I am sorry to say, largely with tobacco. A minority in the churches protest against this desecration, but the ministers, though clearly conscious of the evil, are just as silent as they are on the Masonic question. A pastor of a Congregational church told me that he heartily sympathized with my views and objects, but he would not dare to introduce an Anti-masonic, or a temperance lecturer to his people. The high state of the water (twenty-six feet above low water mark) which flooded the roads and did immense damage, prevented my lecturing at that time.

I went to New Britain on the 12th; had a pleasant visit with Mr. J. C. Fuller, a seceding Mason who is active and earnest in our reform; called on Elihu Burritt, the "learned blacksmith" and philanthropist, whom I found in very feeble health, and then came to Weatogue, where I found a warm reception from our earnest friend, Philip Bacon. Bro. B. has faith and works and both are abundant. Sending me in one direction he started in another and we soon arranged for work. I lectured twice in a country school house to a fair audience of intelligent people and had the sympathy of them all. I preached for them once, and once at Weatogue, and then went to Windsor and lectured twice in the Town Hall, to not large but intelligent audiences. The two pastors (Congregational and Methodist Episcopal) both attended and privately expressed their approval, but that is all I expect of them.

The friends of our reform here are very active, uncompromising and devoted. They have arranged for some four to six more lectures in the vicinity of Windsor, which I expect to give after my present appointments are filled, which will take me a week of steady work. From Windsor I came back to Weatogue and lectured last night in the Congregational church at Avon. The pastor I am told is a Mason. One Mason aided me materially both by his admissions and his denials He seemed honest. May the Lord open his eyes. I expect to speak there again to-night and to-morrow and next day at West Avon. From thence I go to Bloomfield (near Hartford) and from there back to Windsor. The Lord has wonderfully opened the way for the declaration of his truth. May he graciously bestow strength, courage, patience and faithfulness to do his will. Yours in Him.

A Suggestion for the Week of Prayer.

Editor Cynosure:—I see the programme for the week of prayer embraces supplication for Christian union, thanksgiving for past blessings; for ministers, the church and its enlargement; for the family, Christian Associations, young men and women; peace and religious liberty; the cause of temperance and other social reforms; home and foreign missions; the conversion of the world. It is admitted that secrecy is as bad, if not the worst enemy the church has, and I submit that if its devotees are not publicly denounced, they should be, and as such are the subjects of public prayers; but as such a course would antagonize a smooth living, they are forgotten—nay, scrupulously avoided.

I would suggest prayers for members of secret societies—for their never-dying souls, not fearing the face of man. Persistently persevere in this course and God's Word for it you will be victorious. The result will be, "Thou shalt seek them and shalt not find them—even them that contended with thee; they that war against thee shall be as nothing." "For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee."

One Half Mile.

Editor Cynosure:—As Christians, if men compel us to follow their line of thought, and insist upon our going a mile with them, we must go two miles; but when we of the Worcester Convention asked the Boston Congregationalist to go a mile with us, that paper, with a very close, unwilling spirit, consented, after a long delay, to go only one half a mile with us. The Congregationalist has gone many miles with the paganism of the Masonic lodge, but when we appeal to it, as Christians, to go with us it hesitates, and then goes only a short distance, thus completely turning the tables against Christianity in favor of paganism.

To drop metaphor, our Anti-masonic convention at Worcester, less than two hours ride from Boston, closed on the 15th of November; and though its proceedings merited a place in every religious paper in the land, yet the Congregationalist took no notice of them until the 4th of December, and then only in a very restricted degree, and without the least evidence of a genial, sympathetic welcome. The paper has evidently become so compromised with the idolatry of the lodge, that it feels a duty rendered to a Christian cause as a burden, and performs it with an unwilling, grudging spirit. If any thing were needed to convince us of the ungodly spirit of the Congregationalist it is the way in which it has attempted to ignore the Anti-masonic convention at Worcester.

There is but one way to deal with such a paper, and that is to withhold supplies. I do not see how any man of sound Christian principle can support it to the extent of even one subscription. It is now ten years since we have made an earnest, serious appeal to the American churches to clear themselves from the pollutions of Freemasonry; and during all this time the Congregationalist has been as cold towards us as if our efforts threatened the Christian religion instead of that blasphemous travesty of it, Freemasonry.

We Americans owe it to ourselves —to the sincerity of our motives, to drop all pretended religious papers that do not come out against this abominable piece of foreign idolatry, the relic of a barbarous age. No paper that seeks to protect it, by silence or otherwise, should be held as either religious or respectable. It gives evidence of being swayed more by temporal worldly interests than by religious ones. It is deceiving men; pretending to be a guide to a future world when it is lost in the business mazes of the present one. All the rivers of life with it flow only into the sea of business. It is wicked to countenance such a paper. It is recreant to the duties which it has undertaken to perform.

We hope that the Congregational churches of New England will get up a new organ, one that will be more alive to the interests and character of that denomination, which ought to be restored to its original vigor and spirit as the primitive, indigenous church of America. Its preservation in its early purity ought to be the interest of every one of its members; and the sooner the work is begun of redeeming it from a foul, unnatural subserviency to the Masonic lodge the better. We want an organ that will inform us who it is that through their crimes are now bringing disgrace upon that church, whether it is its Masonic members or its Anti-masonic ones.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

OPENING CEREMONIES.

Worthy Chief Templar to Lodge* (one rap). We are now about to open the lodge. All not members of the order will please retire. The officers and members will clothe themselves in appropriate regalia and assume their respective positions.

Worthy Chief Templar. The Worthy Vice Templar will see that the Guards of the lodge are at their proper places, and that they are correct in the quarterly password, explanation and signals.

[The Worthy Chief Templar sees whether any officers are absent and if so fills their places by pro tempore appointments.]

Worthy Chief Templar. The Marshal and Deputy will communicate to me the password and explanation of the present term, after which they will ascertain and report if all present are in possession of the same.

[The Worthy Marshal takes the right hand side and the Worthy Deputy Marshal the left hand side and demand of each the password and explanation. Each failure to give the proper password and explanation is as it occurs reported to the Worthy Chief Templar and if any are not entitled to receive them he will order them to leave the room; if entitled to them, he communicates them at once. Worthy Marshal and Deputy resume their stations when examination is completed and report all correct.]

Worthy Chief Templar (two raps, officers rise.) Worthy officers, what are your respective duties?

Worthy Vice Templar to Worthy Chief Templar. To assist you in preserving order; allow none to enter or retire during the opening, closing or initiatory ceremonies, unless directed by you; to have charge of the ante-room of this lodge and in conjunction with the Guards, enforce the rules of the order in relation to the same.

Past Worthy Chief Templar to Worthy Chief Templar. To receive and recognize the salutation, and see that members are properly clothed in regalia.

Worthy Secretary to Worthy Chief Templar. To keep a correct record of the proceedings of this meeting.

Worthy Financial Secretary to Worthy Chief Templar. To keep just and true accounts between this lodge and myself; between the lodge and its members; and pay all money received to the Worthy Treasurer.

Worthy Treasurer to Worthy Chief Templar. To safely keep all money of the lodge, and pay the same only on the order of the Worthy Chief Templar and Worthy Secretary.

Worthy Marshal to Worthy Chief Templar. To see that all present are qualified to remain; to keep the regalia in order; introduce candidates and attend to visiting members.

Worthy Chaplain to Worthy Chief Templar. It is my duty and privilege to conduct the devotional exercises of the lodge [To the lodge] Let us look to God for his blessing. [Or, in case a passage of Scripture is first read.] "Let us listen to the teachings of Divine Inspiration."

Worthy Chief Templar (three raps, all rise).

OPENING PRAYER BY CHAPLAIN.*

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank thee that thy protecting care has been over us and ours during another week; and that we are permitted again to meet around our common altar, under circumstances of great mercy. Do thou be pleased to pardon all our transgressions, and forgive us for having loved and served thee so feebly. As we have met to promote the great interests of the temperance cause, may we be enlightened and strengthened, so as to make our plans and acts most potent for good. We would commend to thee the suffering everywhere, and especially the inebriate and his family; and wilt thou help us to work for the good of those thus unfortunate. Bless, O Lord, the organization to which we belong, and all temperance effort in whatever direction; and in thine own good time, may everything that can intoxicate be driven from our midst, and the clouds that have so long darkened our sky be scattered by the golden beams of truth and temperance. Do thou guide us in our deliberations this evening, through the journey of life ever lead us, and finally bring us to thyself in thine own kingdom; which we ask in the name of thy dear Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

*In the absence of the Worthy Chief Templar the Worthy Vice Templar or a Past Worthy Chief Templar will preside.

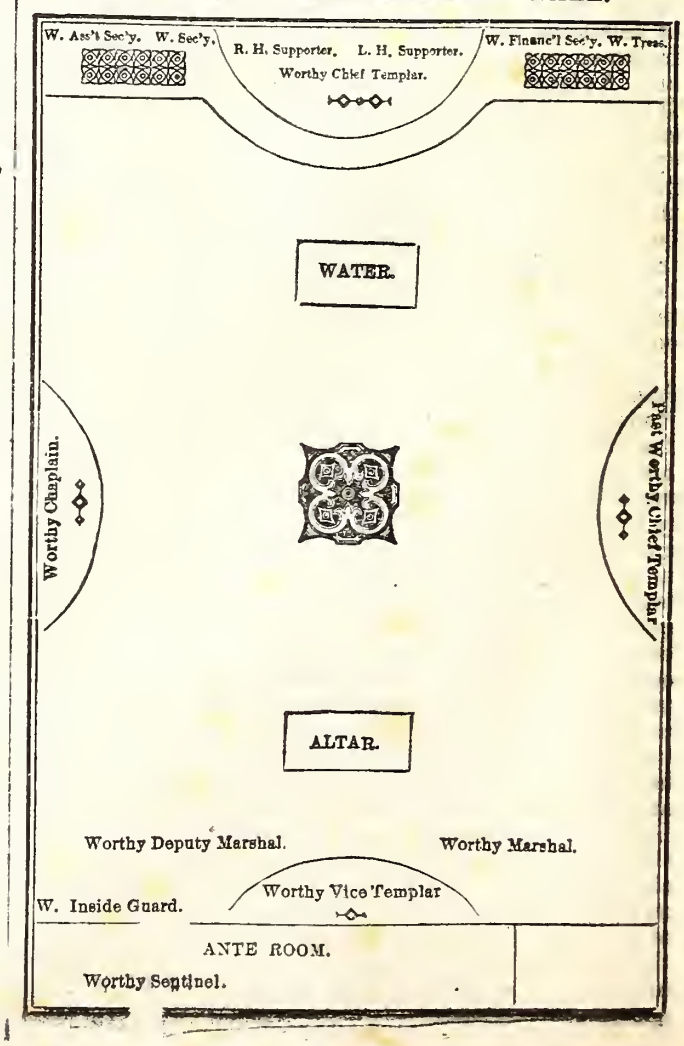
†The prayer may be extempore and in some lodges usually is, but in most lodges, especially in the larger towns, not only is the prayer read as above, but leading members of the order after extensively visiting city lodges give it as their deliberate opinion that most of the chaplains of city lodges are the most ungodly members of the lodge, often selected because of such character as "a good joke."

Worthy Chief Templar. Officers and members, our respective duties are plain, and I need not urge their faithful discharge upon all. A nobler moral object than ours never called true men and women together in council. We are here to work. Let us do it, and so advance our common cause and honor God. Please sing our opening ode No. 1 (or number two or three as he selects.)

OPENING ODES.

1. AIR—"Watchman."

Friends of temperance, we'come here,
Cheerful are our hearts to-day;
Tell us—we would gladly hear—
How our cause speeds on its way.



Here we pledge ourselves anew,
Not to touch the drunkard's drink,
Proving faithful, proving true,
We will from no duty shrink.

2. AIR—"Battle Cry of Freedom."

We are gathering for the conflict with earnest hearts and true.
Shouting the battle cry of temperance,
The world will bless our progress in the work we have to do;
Shouting the battle-cry of temperance.
Cold water forever, hurrah! then, hurrah!
Down with the wine glass—up with our star;
As we gather for a right cause, with earnest hearts and true,
Shouting the battle-cry of temperance.

Worthy Chief Templar. I now declare the lodge open for the transaction of business (one rap). [All the members in the ante-room are now called in and business proceeds.]

FIRST OR INITIATORY DEGREE.

[Persons who by vote of the lodge are to be initiated are received in the ante-room and there await the pleasure of the lodge.]

Worthy Chief Templar. The Worthy Marshal will retire to the ante-room and ascertain if there are candidates in waiting.

[Marshal retires to ante-room and ascertains and reports the name of each candidate in full, plainly, that the Worthy Chief Templar and Secretary may satisfy themselves that all have been duly balloted for.]

Worthy Chief Templar. The Past Worthy Chief Templar and Financial Secretary will repair to the ante-room, propound the usual questions and collect the fees and dues. [The officers named retire and ask the following questions:]

QUESTIONS TO CANDIDATE IN ANTE-ROOM.

Past Worthy Chief Templar to Candidate(s). Will you be obedient to all the laws and rules of this institution, they not conflicting with your duties as a citizen or a Christian?

Candidate. I will.

Past Worthy Chief Templar. Will you take a solemn pledge to abstain forever from the use of, or giving to others as a beverage, anything that will intoxicate?

Candidate. I will.

Past Worthy Chief Templar. Do you believe in the existence of Almighty God the Ruler and Governor of all things?

Candidate. I do.

These questions all being answered in the affirmative and the fee paid by candidate, the officers return to the lodge-room and salute the Worthy Chief Templar, by raising the right hand, with open palm outward, and laying it on the left breast over the heart, when the Worthy Financial Secretary reports:

Worthy Financial Secretary. Worthy Chief Templar the fee is paid.

Past Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Chief Templar, the questions are properly answered.

Worthy Chief Templar. The Marshal and Deputy will now repair to the ante-room and introduce the candidate(s). [If there is but one candidate, only the Marshal will retire to the ante-room, when he conducts the candidate to the door between the ante-room and lodge-room and gives three distinct raps.]

Inner Guard. Worthy Vice Templar there is an alarm at the inner gate.

Worthy Vice Templar. You will attend to it.

*Initiation is 6th in the order of business. After the opening ceremonies the roll of officers is called and vacancies are filled by pro tem. appointments; the journal or minutes is next in order, then report of investigating committees, next balloting on candidates and then initiation.

Inner Guard. It is our Marshal, accompanied by (a) friend(s) who seek(s) admission to our lodge.

Worthy Vice Templar. Admit them (three raps).

[They enter and the candidate or candidates are conducted slowly around the room while an ode is sung; stopping at its close in front of the Worthy Chief Templar.]

INITIATORY ODES.

1. AIR—"Saviour, like a Shepherd lead us."

Welcome, welcome to our order,
We shall need your help and care;
In the harvest fields of temperance,
You shall have a rightful share.
Welcome, welcome,
Heaven bless you! is our prayer:
Welcome, welcome,
Heaven bless you! is our prayer.

2. AIR—"Harwell."

Welcome, stranger, to this temple,
To our altar now advance,
Join our band of valiant soldiers,
Strike for right and temperance.
Hearts united cheer you on,
Honor, pleasure will be won,
Welcome, stranger to this temple,
Welcome, welcome, welcome here.

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Chief Templar, allow me to introduce to you our friend, who, after due trial, wishes to become a member of our order.

Worthy Chief Templar to Candidate. My friend(s) we give you a cordial welcome.

Worthy Chief Templar. It rejoices our hearts that henceforth your services are to be given to the great temperance reform, and that to this end you desire to unite your influence with ours. This place is sacredly dedicated to the cause of temperance, and you see here the entire family circle, around one common altar, fully determined to reclaim the fallen and save others from falling. The enemy with which we have to contend is crafty and powerful; and to resist such a foe successfully will require our mightiest efforts. All have felt his power, or suffered more or less from his destructive influences. In every walk of life, intemperance, like an undying worm has gnawed at the vitals and corrupted the life blood of the fairest, ablest and purest of earth.

We aim to unite all moral and social elements of society in an unceasing warfare upon this giant evil. Our hearts and hands are ever open, to lift up those who are sunk low in the scale of human degradation, and restore them to family, friends and society, as well as to save the young, pure and virtuous from ever falling into the snare of the tempter.

You will now be required to take upon yourself a solemn obligation of total abstinence, and to bind yourself to our laws; but, as you have already been assured, there is nothing in this obligation inconsistent with your duties arising from any of the relations of life. It is an obligation earnest in its nature, imperative in its requirements, and lifelong in its duration. Regarding it thus are you still willing to proceed?

Candidate. I am.

Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Marshal you will now present our friend(s) to the Worthy Vice Templar for obligation. [The Worthy Marshal and candidate remain standing at the altar while one of the following odes are sung:]

ODES.

1. AIR—"America."

God of the temperance cause,
Bless those who seek thy laws,
Owning their power:
Be thou to them a shield,
Teach them thy sword to wield
Upon temptation's field,
In sin's dark hour.

2. AIR—"Pleyel's Hymn."

God of Mercy! be thou near,
While these vows are spoken here;
Shield the victor, guard and guide
Where the lurking tempters hide;
Man may strive, but thou alone,
Must the final conquest crown.

Our Mail.

C. W. Dutcher, W. Meriden, Ct., sends for some books and tracts and writes:

"There are a great many Mason here."

George M. Freese, Washington, Ill., writes:

"I believe your arduous work is approved by Him who is able to make it easy and successful. For two years and over we have read and given away (mostly to Masons) a copy of your worthy paper. Consequently we feel the pressure of lodge men. A Master Mason said to me that he would like to talk with one of our lecturers; and that he would give ten dollars towards furnishing the tools and lodge-room to have Ronayne work the first three degrees in Masonry, to see how near he could do it. I took him up, providing he would see that there was good order and no molestation in the meeting. But he cooled down and went away nearly losing his jewel. He resides in Pekin, Ill. I am willing to share the expense to have Mr. Ronayne work the degrees there, also to operate in Washington. Both points are strongholds of the lodge."

Mrs. Louisa Hull, Perry, Wyoming Co., N. Y., writes:

"When I have faithfully performed my duty then my part is done, and God will not let me be discouraged as long as I do that and humbly, prayerfully keep close to his bleeding side and nail-pierced feet. 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and because 'he lives I shall live also,' if I am faithful to the end."

Stephen Grover, East Boston, Mass., writes:

"By the help of the Lord, I believe the time will come when this doctrine will be more generally known, and many saved from this den of infamy, the Freemason lodge."

Mr. Hinman writes under the date Nov. 18, from Staffordville, Ct.:

"Spoke last night in a school-house. The night was very dark and rainy. The wrath of the craft was much stirred."

Wm. Babcock, Erin Center, N. Y., writes:

"With the prayers of God's people and the help of your paper, we may expect this band of iniquity will be destroyed."

E. G. Cooper, Albany, Mo., writes:

"We are just home from the borders of Iowa, where we, to the best of our ability, endeavored to acquaint the people with the nature and fruits of oath-bound secret orders. Feeble and limited as our efforts have been in the past, I see now a great harvest springing up, an hundred fold in some instances. It is encouraging. May the God of war keep us at our posts till the shout of victory is heard. We could not do without the Cynosure in this work.

Joseph Kittman, Bigelow, Minn., writes:

"I think the Cynosure is a publication that will prove beneficial to all who will take it and read it. I rejoice to know that some of the ablest and best men in our nation are engaged in this reform work, and are giving expositions of the mean, low, shameful, soul-degrading and soul-destroying influence of secretism. Lodgery is a blight on the life-power and spirituality of the church. It tends to division in the church, which should be one in spirit and agreement. I wish our lecturers would draw a vivid picture of the glorious religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and then draw another picture of the religion of the lodge, so that all the world could see the difference. The religion of Christ will triumph over every false religion. 'Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away.' 'No man can serve two masters.' Ministers who join the Masonic lodge and adhere to and approve the principles and doings of the lodge, according to the Word of God, are hirelings who care not for the sheep. They care more for the situation than for the life of the sheep. I have heard some men say that there was as much religion in the lodge as in the church. Some of them boast of being members of three lodges, and of a church besides. Christ says, 'He that denieth me denieth my Father also.' Where does this place lodge men? May the Lord of heaven and earth bless all efforts put forth in the cause of reform."

George Allen, Walker, Iowa, writes:

"We are trying to push the battle of reform here, and the Lord is helping and giving us the victory. Your paper, recently introduced here, is being received gladly. I hope you may be prospered in the good work."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DEC. 26, 1878.

CHRISTMAS will have passed before this number reaches our subscribers. We shall be in a condition to look coolly at the following considerations concerning it:

It is not the birthday of Christ, though thousands of children believe it is. It is a "mass" day which began with the dark ages of despotism and superstition. It professes to honor Christ, but never converted a soul to him. It rivals and supersedes the Sabbath, the day of his resurrection. It is the prolific mother of "Santa Claus" superstitions It is a birthday celebration nowhere sanctioned or commanded by the Bible. It is a day of carousals and crimes; and is utterly unnecessary as a holiday, since we have Thanksgiving and New Years, in near proximity, which are founded in truth as this is based on error and superstition.

INFALLIBLE GAMBLING.—A huge Romish Cathedral in New York has just closed a fair, running through thirty-six days, with receipts stated at the enormous sum of $160,000. The Evening Post sent a reporter to Father McGlyn and Cardinal McCloskey, asking if they approved of the gambling to raise money in the fair. Both justified it. McGlyn said: "Certainly gambling is not a sin per se. If a man has a hundred dollars to give, why can't he stake it on the turn of a die?" Thousands on thousands of young boys are said to have clung to the "wheels of fortune," presided over by priests, gambling as long as they had pennies to stake.

A reporter of the Daily Witness says: "Wine and beer flowed as though from a corner pump. Upon every side hung handsomely engrossed signs, recommending this or that particular brand of lager beer, whisky, rum, gin, or champagne." The reporter observed to an officer of the fair: "It has surprised many people that the rum traffic should be introduced into a sacred building." "O," was the reply, "this isn't a church yet; it hasn't been dedicated." Surely this is treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath.

THINGS AT WHEATON.—The winter term at Wheaton College opened with a considerable increase of students, and the intellectual and spiritual prospects of the College were never better. Above nineteen thousand five hundred dollars of the debt are paid and the notes taken up and destroyed.

The Wheaton lodge is not so prosperous. Our readers know that parties raised money and built an expensive Central Block in the town whose upper rooms were leased to the lodge. A Royal Arch Chapter was gotten up; and the printing office and bank were put alongside and underneath the lodge in the same building; and below the printing office, a Young Men's Christian Association, a dancing school and a revival meeting, all three in the same room, were set on foot. God has not prospered the plot to put every interest of the town under the dark and pestilent shadow of the lodge. It has been forced, for non-payment of rent, to move back to its old incommodious quarters; and the hall, in the new and beautiful block, has been used for temperance gatherings. When the present generation are dead, their children will hallow the memories and plant flowers on the graves of those who have toiled, and prayed and suffered to save them from the fangs of anti-Christ, and the curse of a sacrilegious religion.

THE following doctrines and precedents for "THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST" can be found in Neal's History of the Puritans, Vol. I. page 248. They are the American creed:

1. "The Puritans hold and maintain the absolute perfection of the Holy Scriptures, both as to faith and worship; and that whatsoever is enjoined as a part of divine service that cannot be warranted by the said Scriptures is unlawful."

2. "That all inventions of men, especially such as have been abused to idolatry, are to be excluded out of the exercises of religion."

3. "To institute and ordain any mystical rites or ceremonies of religion, and to mingle the same with the divine rites and ceremonies of of God's ordinance is gross superstition."

The above ideas and truths, excluding all popery and lodgeism, were sealed with the blood of three hundred godly men in the short reign of Mary alone. They were and are the foundation of the whole American system of religion and government. This is what distinguishes us from other peoples and nations, and but for these ideas and institutions that have grown out of them, the stream of human emigration would not now be pouring on our coasts.

THE MALIGNANT NATURE OF FALSE WORSHIPS. — The (Roman) Catholic Review, an able and otherwise decent paper, attributes the obscene literature and its cognate vices to Protestantism, and adds:

"The wretched revolt against God and his church politely styled, The Protestant Reformation, has now brought its victims to this sad pass. Vice of the most detestable kind is rampant and threatens to destroy society. * * * There is only one power that can successfully cope with it, and that is the power of the [Roman Catholic] church."

This in the face of the well-known fact that when Luther began his work that church had priced and licensed the crimes of impurity, as Roman Catholic Paris licenses them now.

The explanation is, that all acts of worship not paid to God through Christ are paid to devils, who are 'unclean spirits,' and who protect their own. The intrinsic nature of all false worships is malignity and impurity. Prest. Finney said of the Masonic worships, "As soon as I was converted to Christ, my moral nature loathed it." And when ministers and churches come to have adequate ideas of the nature of these worships which the Scriptures everywhere call "abomination," there will be but one mind on the subject.

THAT GOD HEARS PRAYER no receiver of the Bible can doubt. And that answers are granted to faith, not to personal perfection in the praying, is shown by the imperfections of those whose prayers were signally answered. Why, then, do we not habitually and constantly, as exhorted by Paul, "in everything," little and large, "let our requests be made known to God." Do we say, "I did pray the very best I knew how, and it did no good." That we cannot know; for every accepted prayer is not an immediately answered prayer. The promise, "Ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done," is an "exceeding great" promise, but then we must ask "according to his will" as well as our own. And the two are not incompatible. For when we practice that perfect submission which is our "reasonable service," we then prefer to have things according to his will rather than any other way. And the "desires of our heart" are then conclusive and controlling with God. The difficulties in the way of prayer are theoretical rather than practical. They all vanish before a humble and childlike spirit.

OUR RELATIONS TO ROMAN CATHOLICS.

A book has been issued in Dublin, Ireland, by a prominent printing house (1877) which shows with great force of fact and argument that Freemasonry is one in organization and one in spirit the world over. And though the order manages with fearful craft to use its "natural and real enemies, as tools for their own destruction;" the lodge is a deliberate, formal and sustained conspiracy against all religion and all government, but its own; and is thereby "the vanguard of anti-Christ" of the last days. And there are thousands and thousands of members of the Romish church, who as sincerely abhor the lodge as we. Why not then unite with them in opposing it? The answer is, We do and will, so far as they will unite with us.

But we must remember that Romanism is the most secret of all secret societies and the mother and model of them all; that the lodge is a copy of popery and well transcribed; that Mazzini and Garibaldi, though Freemasons, were opposing the ideas and principles of the lodge, by the common mistake of "fighting the devil with fire;" opposing priestcraft and despotism by setting up Masonic priests and despots of their own. While Christ and his apostles opposed superstition and priestcraft in whatever forms they appeared. The argument for secret temperance orders is that the foe is wily and must be met by his own weapons. But shams will not exterminate shams. We must be followers of Christ, for it is his power and not ours by which society is to be regenerated and men saved. And haply other Luthers may yet spring out of popery and other Wycliffes lead simple men and women to Christ. While publicans and sinners whom priestism has crowded into the regions of infidelity may yet flock to him who had compassion on the multitude, "and the common people again hear him gladly."

GODLESS EDUCATION.

"The day has passed by when it could be declared that our schools must educate its children as Protestants because this is a Protestant country."—Independent.

And the Independent substitute for a Protestant education is an imaginary secular education divorced from all ideas of God and religion to which any tax-payers object; and as a portion of tax-payers are professed atheists, it would be as curious as monstrous to see a system of books and education constructed on the Independent's plan, with all ideas of God and religion left out. But admitting the embarrassments under which we labor by the influx of Romanists, Jews, pagans and infidels, is there no honorable and just way left to Christians but to establish godless education; a system of popular education which puts all gods and no gods, and all religions and no religions on a level before the minds of the pupils; and so cease to "bring up their children," so far as public school instruction is concerned, "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?"

It is admitted even by the Independent that our fathers established here a "Christian commonwealth." Legislatures, courts, laws, schools, mints, deeds, will, scontracts, marriages, funerals and graveyards even, all recognized the God of the Bible, and the religion of Christ. When did "the day pass" when Christians lost their right to worship, vote, teach, and serve God as our fathers did?

Now since by the blessing of God and the working of Christian civilization a vast country has arisen to which millions are flocking to escape the miseries entailed on them by other principles of government and religion, what have we to do but to adhere to Christ as our fathers did, and pray for the conversion of those who come?

Above all, since the vast majority of our people still wish the United States to be a Christian country, whence arises this super-serviceable zeal of the Independent and others, to dethrone God and cast out the Saviour and the Bible to accommodate minorities who either have no belief or a wrong one?

The Tammany Lodge.

The Tammany Hall rings so long the tool and shelter of the eminent Mason, "Boss" Tweed, has again fallen into popular disfavor if we may credit Mr. G. A. Townsend. He claims that the recent defeat of the Democracy in New York city, and the election of Mr. Cooper as mayor, was owing to the popular dislike of lodge rule under the Tammany chief, which has in years past run up the city debt to the present enormous sum of $230,000,000, and showed no inclination to retrench municipal expenses. Mr. Townsend gives a few facts in a letter to the Chicago Tribune respecting this society worth reading again:

The people of New York, thousands of Democrats among them, are disgusted with the system of Tammany Hall. It is the most ingenious by which the people were ever cheated out of their representation. There is a great society, like the Odd-fellows and Masons, called the Columbian Order or Tammany Hall. This secret society is not political in its character, and it owns the building called Tammany Hall, and has owned a hall of that name since 1792. The trustees of the hall are thirteen in number, so that there can be no tie in their body. Augustus Schell is Chief Sachem, or thirteenth man. A majority of these trustees, therefore, regulate the property, and seven votes control the institution, which has been by immemorial habit the headquarters of the Democratic political organization. Mr. Kelly, like Mr. Tweed, controlled the majority of these trustees, and therefore could refuse to give Tammany Hall to any other band of Democrats than such as he chose to let come there and hold their conventions. Meantime he was at work outside in the wards and districts to get up such conventions as he wanted. For every hundred Democratic votes in the City of New York one member is allowed on what is called the "Tammany General Committee." This Committee of 1,300 persons is not identified with the Tammany Society at all.

The Society lets the building to the Committee, and Kelly is therefore in a position to throw anybody out of Tammany Hall that does not suit him. Consequently when there is a bolt in the Democratic party the bolters form their own Committee and go into Mozart Hall or Irving Hall, or some other place close to Tammany Hall. The time has come when New York can no longer be governed by this dual contrivance of a society regulating a committee, and giving it the stamp of regularity.

—On his return from Worcester, Prof. C. A. Blanchard spoke in New York city on the national religious reform. The Christian Statesman says: "The address is spoken of by those who heard it as one of the most effective ever delivered on the subject in that city."

—A union Sabbath school near Albany, Missouri, as announced in the American Freeman, has its distribution of presents this year on New Year's day, instead of Christmas after the fashion of the multitude—a blessed innovation.

—Bro. Stratton of Wyanet, Ill., wishes to correct one point respecting the letter published last week giving an account of a secret temperance raid on that place. The Mr. Field mentioned is not a titled "Prof.," but an honest merchant of Wyanet and a strong Anti-mason. He spoke first in the same meeting against organizing a temperance lodge. We have reason to know that our correspondent had no intention of wronging anyone, but was not correctly informed.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Past Master Ronayne returned from Menomonee, Wis., last Friday afternoon, having started at the close of the third degree exposition the night before and traveling all night. Both were highly pleased with the meetings at St. Charles, Minn., and at Menomonee, regarding them as among the best. Both brethren show the effect of the severe cold weather, and have come back to warmer regions enveloped in the hairy disguise of splendid buffalo overcoats presented by the liberal-handed Capt. William Wilson, who noticed that the lecturers were exposed to the severities of travel and generously robed them in garments suited to their necessity. Elder Barlow reached Menomonee Thursday in time to share in the success of the evening.

From Our New England Correspondent.

Worcester, Dec. 14, 1878.

The energetic work of the indomitable Secretary and Agent of the National Christian Association, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, followed by the yearly Convention in this city, and the masterly exposition of Masonry by Ronayne, are bearing good fruit. Young men, just on the threshold of the lodge, are made to hesitate before entering into expensive bonds of secrecy, and old men are here and there recording their testimony against a system "that opposeth and exalteth itself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped." A forcible feeble defense of Masonry was indeed attempted after Ronayne's exhibit by the sonorous Worshipful Grand Prelate St. John, in the Universalist pulpit of this city, in the course of which he endeavored to combat the telling figures of Professor C. A. Blanchard in his memorable speech at Mechanics' Hall, November 14th. Nothing comes of it, however, but a deeper conviction of the inherent weakness of an institution in whose defense so little can be said of weight or significance.

A Connecticut Congregational pastor sends the following, with grateful acknowledgments for the report of Anti-masonic utterances at Worcester in November last:

I thank you much for sending them. I am very strong in the belief that ministers and churches should stand firm against these works of darkness. I am not clear as to the best methods of counteraction. There is a desire for a closer communion in a good sense, than our churches afford. In the primitive days of Christianity they had "all things common." We ought to have a holy and just communion in the churches now, just such as was exemplified by Christ himself and the Pentecost church. Would not labor toward this state of things do most to destroy all secret associations of injurious character?

Fraternally yours,

WORK TO BE DONE.

New Lisbon, Ind., Dec. 1, '78.

To the friends of the anti secret reform in Indiana:

We have a gigantic evil to contend with. An opponent that is thoroughly organized, and as "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," it behooves us to put forth every effort. The Master requires us to make sacrifices. Are we willing to forsake all and follow Christ? Remember that Christ says that if we love houses or lands, father, mother or children more than him we are not worthy of him.

We have an able lecturer in the field, and so far as I am advised he has given general satisfaction. I have been at a number of places where he has lectured and have everywhere heard his lectures highly spoken of by friends and neutrals, and our opponents very angry and alarmed. Dr. Cook is one among our best statisticians and is fully competent to the task assigned him.

He received for his services last year about $245. Now friends such meager support will not do. We must raise this year at least five hundred dollars for our State agent. Dr. Cook is a poor man and when at our State meeting had neither a horse with which to travel nor money with which to purchase one. I earnestly appeal to the vice president of each county and others interested in the good cause to bestir themselves in this matter.

The burthen would not be at all oppressive were it properly divided between us. If a hundred men will pay five dollars each the amount will be secured; or if five hundred men will pay one dollar each, the same end will be reached. I will be one of the one hundred. Who will join me? Those who are interested in having lectures, and thereby strengthening themselves and the cause in their immediate neighborhoods, should go to work and raise, say $25, and send for Dr. Cook to give them some eight or ten lectures. His address is Albion, Noble Co., Ind. It is the especial duty of the vice-president of each county to take the lead in this matter. Friends, let us hear from you at your earliest possible convenience.

OBITUARY.

Dea. Harvey Meacham died Nov. 28, 1878, at the residence of his son-in-law, L. P. Parsons, in the town of Belgrade, near Mankato, Minnesota, aged 78 years, 3 months and 24 days.

Mr. Meacham was one of three brothers who emigrated with their families from Vermont to Illinois, arriving at the Indian trading post of Chicago in the winter of 1832-33. They shoveled away the snow and pitched their tents on the south side of the grove which took the name of Meacham's grove in the north part of what is now DuPage county. Selecting their claims side by side in that beautiful section of country they commenced the work of making their new homes. They were men suited to such work as laying a good foundation for society—Sabbath-keeping Bible-loving men. They were Whigs in politics, and in favor of the reforms of that day. They were identified with the anti-slavery movement, and united with the party, soon after their coming, that opposed the extension of slavery.

Not long after the settlement at Meacham's Grove Harvey Meacham was deeply afflicted in the loss of his wife, who was an estimable woman remembered with affection by all who knew her. His second wife, who now survives him, was the daughter of Wm. Dodge of Babcock's Grove. One of his sons was offered upon the altar of his country, dying in the army. Three sons are still living, two near Mankato and one in Illinois, also three daughters are left in Minnesota to shed their tears of affection at his grave. Mr. Meacham was for many years a deacon of the Congregational church where he first settled and is remembered as a man of sterling principles from which nothing could swerve him. He leaves a wide circle of acquaintances, who while they mourn his death may profit by the record of his exemplary life and Christian character. H. B. H.

Closing Days.

The plashing breakers on the beach seem to the listening ear
To waft a swift sweet plaintive dirge to the departing year;
The yellow leaves, whirl'd o'er the path by the sharp autumn breeze,
In eddying clouds are falling fast from all the rustling trees.

The frost-beads sparkle on the grass bright in the chilly dawn;
The mateless thrush his lonely meal seeks on the rectory lawn.
The laurust nus'gins to show her white and roseate flowers—
Sure token that have fled at last the summer's golden hours.

Bis kherries on the privet hang, the ash show clusters red,
Crowned with a scarlet diadem King Oak's majestic head;
The elms are orange, the queen beech is robed in russet brown,
And from the graceful pendent birch dun leaves come snowe.ing down.

Close in the furze the linnet lies, the lark's shrill voice is mute,
No longer from the cherry-bough the blackbird tunes his flute;
The white-throat and the nightingale to summer climes have flown,
And on the berried holly-bough the redbreast sings alone.

Ah, sweet and solemn are the days that mark the dying year,
Waking like music in the heart some slumbering memories dear—
Of times gone by, of friends long dead, of happy fleeting hours,
When our fond youth was one long dream of love and joy and flowers.

Burying Things.

Abraham, the father of the faithful, desired a burying-place, that he might bury his dead out of his sight. However loving and useful they may have been, and however dear to his heart, when once dead he wanted them out of his sight. When things are dead they should be buried out of sight. Dead people, however good and lovely they may have been are of no use to the living, and therefore need to be buried and should not be dug up and exposed to public gaze every few days.

What would you think of the man who, after burying a friend, or even an enemy, should dig up the body and drag it around through the streets, and even into private houses to the annoyance of people generally? You would think him very imprudent; yet the world is full of just such cases, and people having become used to it look upon such transactions with indifference.

One man has a difficulty with another; it is finally settled; both parties agree to bury the troubles of the past and endeavor to live in peace with each other. Soon we hear one of them say, "I can forgive but not forget." Here is where the trouble comes in; men are willing to kill trouble but not bury it; they want to drag the dead thing around from house to house, and thus annoy the people. Not unfrequently do they exhibit it at every house at which they call, and thereby disgust the more sensible class of people.

But then some of them are like the Jews of old; they whitewash their dead, unburied things, in order to make them take better and look more respectable. Then there are others who will embalm their dead troubles and preserve them for years. Of course they must show them to everybody that comes along I have known men who took pleasure in drawing some old, dead carcass out of the grave every time somebody would come to see them. One would infer that it was their delight to handle dead carcasses to the annoyance of visitors. May God speed the day when people will learn to bury their dead out of their sight, and then leave them buried.

There are also church difficulties that have been settled and buried, and that too to the joy of the whole congregation. But not unfrequently does somebody dig them up and drag them before the church again, endeavoring to render the living house of God the abode of the dead. Sometimes these dead carcasses are so disagreeable, as to disgust the whole body, and at times completely destroy the health and vitality of the entire congregation. Who wants to live where they are continually disturbed by the unpleasant odor of partly decayed carcasses? If you want to keep the church of God pure, do your utmost to keep dead matter out of it, and see that all difficulties are buried down deep, never to be resurrected again.

There are also things that ought to be buried alive—such as jealousy, ill will, malice, and every other evil that is of no use to either God or man. The quicker you can get them into the grave the better; bury them deep, stamp the dirt down well.

As a means of improvement, we want to think and talk more about the living and good of the future, and less about the dead of the past. Let your dead remain buried out of your sight, God will take care of them. Look to the future for life and happiness.—Brethren at Work.

A Beautiful Story.

Coleridge relates a story to this effect:

Alexander, during his march into Africa, came to a people dwelling in peaceful huts, who knew neither war nor conquests. Gold being offered him, he refused it, saying that his sole object was to learn the manners and customs of the inhabitants. Stay with us," said the chief, "as long as it pleaseth thee."

During this interview with the African chief, two of his subjects brought a case before him for judgment. The dispute was this: The one had bought a piece of ground, which after the purchase was found to contain a treasure, for which he felt himself bound to pay. The other refused to receive anything stating that he had sold the ground with what it might be found to contain, apparent or concealed.

Said the chief looking at the one, "You have a son;" and to the other, "You have a daughter;" let them be married, and the treasure given them as a dowry."

Alexander was astonished.

"And what," said the chief, "would have been the decision in your country?"

"We should have dismissed the parties and seized the treasure for the king's use."

"And does the sun shine in your country?" said the chief; "does the rain fall there? Are there any cattle there which feed upon herbs and green grass?"

"Certainly," said Alexander.

"Ah," said the chief, "it is for the sake of those innocent cattle that the Great Being permits the sun to shine, the rain to fall and the grass to grow in your country."

Winter Evenings at Home.

"Of all the spots that Heaven has blessed,
The dearest place is home:
'Tis there the fond heart loves to rest,
And never loves to roam;
Whilst love plays round the smiling hearth,
'Tis heaven's own bliss enjoyed on earth."

We have not been accustomed to put sufficient value upon home as a school of education, or to avail ourselves of half its privileges. Friends, little and big, is not home the pleasantest spot on earth? If it is not, where lies the fault? Have you not something to do with the matter? Set yourselves at once about the work of making it so. Be you father or mother, son or daughter, brother or sister, you are responsible in a greater or less degree for the character and influence of home.

"Summer is gone; the fair young flowers
Have faded in their bloom,
And the music of the fairy bowers
Is hushed 'mid winter's gloom.

"Our summer life hath its winter too,
And, 'mid its waning bloom,
We wait that spring, whose fadeless hue
E'er glows beyond the tomb."

But however pleasant home may be, one does not wish to remain always there. Our sympathies and wants extend beyond its beautiful and sacred, but narrow circle. Multitudes spend their evenings abroad. Where? oh, where! Shall we visit the ball-room, the theatre, the opera, the gay party, the fashionable concert, the haunts of dissipation, the frolic and the dance?

D. F. Newton.

Name of the Good Samaritan.

There are many to whom the pleasure of doing a generous deed is a sufficient reward. It is well that it should be so. There will be no lack of little deeds of kindness as long as it is true that it is more blessed to give than receive. And where this is true, the little deeds of kindness may come at length to resemble the little grains of sand in their number as well as in their unobtrusiveness. All that we can do to foster the spirit which tends to this end is work well done.

Oberlin, the well-known Lutheran philanthropist of Steinthal, while yet a candidate for the ministry, was traveling on one occasion from Strassburg. It was in the winter time. The ground was deeply covered with snow, and the roads were almost impassable. He had reached the middle of his journey and was among the mountains, but by that time was so exhausted that he could stand up no longer. He was rapidly freezing to death. Sleep overcame him; all power to resist it left him. He commended himself to God, and yielded to what he felt to be the sleep of death.

He knew not how long he slept but suddenly became conscious of some one rousing him and waking him up. Before him stood a wagon driver, in his blue blouse, and the wagon not far away. He gave him a little wine and food, and the spirit of life returned. He then helped him on the wagon and brought him to the next village. The rescued man was profuse in his thanks and offered money, which his benefactor refused.

"It is only a duty to help one another," said the wagoner, "and it is the next thing to an insult to offer a reward for such a service."

"Then," replied Oberlin, "at least tell me your name, that I may hold you in thankful remembrance before God."

"I see," said the wagoner, "that you are a minister of the Gospel; please tell me the name of the good Samaritan."

"That," said Oberlin, "I cannot do, for it was not put on record."

"Then," replied the wagoner, "until you can tell me his name permit me to withhold mine."

Soon he had driven out of sight, and Oberlin never saw him again.

Is it not a principal charm of the story of the good Samaritan that there is no name given, no clue to any person, nothing by which to locate the generous hand that did the deed, except the generous spirit which prompted it?

If you feel prompted to an unnoticed act of kindness, do not hold back because it will be unnoticed! Ask yourself—what was the name of the good Samaritan.—Church Messenger.

Canon Farrar, of London, in an address on temperance uttered these notable words:

"Gentlemen, no reform worth having was ever carried except in the teeth of clenched antagonists; and most reformers, though we build statues to them now, have had to

'Stand pilloried on infamy's high stage,
And bear the pelting storm of half an age.'"

The greater your wants, the greater God's goodness in supplying them; the greater your enemies, the greater the display of God's power in subduing them; and the greater your unworthiness, the greater his grace in saving you.

THE OLD YEAR.

Farewell, little children, the old year said,
I shall leave you to-night when you're snugly in bed;
But come, let us gather around the bright fire,
And converse a short time before you retire.
I leave you to-night, but with me I bear
A record from each—I have drawn it with care.
Now listen! each word you have carelessly spoken,
All promises made, and promises broken;
Each little unkindness you've felt or have shown
In action and feeling, in word or in tone;
Whene'er you've forgotten in warm, earnest prayer
To thank our great Father for his kindly care;
Whene'er you've forgotten his pardon to plead
For sinful desires and feelings and deeds;
Whene'er you've offended your father or mother,
Been fretful or peevish to sister or brother;
All the grief you have caused, all the sorrow you've given,
Are recorded by me—are recorded in heaven.
Kneel down, little children, in deep sorrow kneel
As you look o'er the record the old year reveals;
Ask pardon of God for all that is past,
On the mercy of Jesus your burdened souls cast;
Resolve that the New Year shall never record
So many offenses in thought, deed and word.
O, children, remember, and earnestly pray,
Whenever you're tempted to wander astray;
Pray for light from above to guide your young feet
O'er the rough road of life to that happy seat
On the right hand of God, where the happy ones claim
Peace, pardon and love in the Saviour's dear name.

"THE O. K. SOCIETY."

"Say, ma, won't you give me twenty-five cents?" said master Wilson as he came running home from school, quite out of breath. "The boys have formed a society and they want me to pay a quarter and join it; won't you give me the money, ma?"

"What kind of a society is it, my son?" said his mother.

"Oh, the boys don't allow—don't want me to tell much about it. But it is to help each other. If I join it the boys say they will not let any body else hurt me, and we will all stand up for each other in school and out of it, and everywhere. I think it would be splendid to have the other boys take my part when the teacher goes to pitching into me rough shod, or when some country boy gives me some of his impudence. Won't you give me the money and let me run back to the meeting?"

"What is to be done with the money collected from the members in this way?"

"Oh, we are going to get a nice pin apiece and have caps all alike so we can tell each other any where. It will be awful nice at the fair, and on show days."

"Why, Wilson, who are the members of this society, and what kind of boys are they?"

"Why, some of them are good boys, I know, for George Rogers is one, and Willie Barclay is another, and cousin James intends to join if uncle Ben will let him."

"Tell on; who else are members?"

"Dick Shores and Gus Wells and Harry Barnes."

"Hold on, my son, you have named enough. I want you to stop and consider this matter seriously for a little while. Do you not see that selfishness was your first motive in wanting to unite with that society? You wanted in this way to buy the favor and protection of a certain class of boys, and some of them the very worst characters. You would thus be tempted to impose upon your teacher and others in the expectation that you could defy opposition. Then to think how unmanly it is. It is a confession of weakness to combine in this way with others. It is as much as to say, I cannot take care of myself in society, I must lean upon others. A boy must have a very poor opinion of himself when he takes such a course."

"You will notice, my son, that in addition to selfishness and a lack of true manliness, the O. K. Society would bring you in close and frequent contact with the very worst in the community. You know that Dick Shores swears dreadfully and that he and Gus Wells go a fishing or hunting on the holy Sabbath very often. And as for Harry Barns, he has twice been convicted of stealing; and you have told me that he often boasts of his success in gambling. Wilson, do you really wish to join such a society and be classed with such boys? Remember that boys are known by the company they keep."

"No, mother, I do not want to go in with the O. K.'s, since you have showed me that it would not be right. I have often wondered why the church people and church papers had so much to say against secret societies. I suppose it is for the reasons that you have given, but I never understood them as I do you. I wish you would tell me more about them."

"Well, besides the reasons that I have mentioned, there are some others that are stronger still. One reason why our church opposes secret, oath-bound societies is because they require members to swear blindly to keep things secret which God's Word and their own consciences may tell them it is their duty to make known.

"Another reason is that it is using holy things for worldly and sinful purposes. An oath is to be taken only on solemn and important occasions, and then, as a part of religious worship and homage to God. For men to administer an oath who have no right to do so, and for men to take the oath and call God to witness in matters so trivial, is certainly a great sin for which they will have to answer at the bar of God.

"But I am afraid you would get tired listening if I were to tell you all the objections that might be given against such societies; they are fast becoming a source of great danger to our government as well as a great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel."—Little Preacher.

—Mrs. Lillies' Story of English Literature gives a curious fact in regard to table manners in old England which may not be generally known:

"The mode of eating required a great deal of personal cleanliness, I should think. Two people ate from the same trencher; and this until after Chaucer's day, was made of a huge slice of bread on which the meats were laid; old MSS. are full of allusions to manners of eating, etc., and there is an old volume of instructions as to how to keep one's fingers out of the gravy, and how to keep one's face clean at table! Later on, I rejoice to say, silver platters were introduced, but in Chaucer's time no such thing was known and fingers were used instead of forks!"

After dinner the minstrels usually came in; these men went from castle to castle, and sang songs which were long accounts of history or people; sometimes of the ancestors of the baron in whose hall they sat. Gradually these stories became well known, and about Chaucer's day, were used by the preachers in order to interest their congregations. About the same time some monks put them into book form and they exist to-day in Latin, and are, as you may imagine, curiosities of literature.

Six-year-old Nellie lives in Indianapolis, and went with the family to Senator Morton's funeral, which impressed her as a very great occasion, but only made her wish for something greater. On the way home, her feelings found vent: "Oh, it was grand! But, mamma, I'm so sorry I wasn't at George Washington's funeral!"

Little four-year-old Mary complained to mamma that her button shoes were "hurting." "Why, Mattie, you've put them on the wrong feet." Puzzled and ready to cry, she made answer: "What'll I do, mamma? They's all the feet I've got!"

THE CONNECTION.—By following the Home Readings through, one will get a complete view of all the events which transpired relative to the building of the temple. 1. "The Cessation in Building." That came about through the intrigues of the Samaritans in the Medo Persian court. They are styled, "the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin." When they heard that the Israelites were building the temple, they came and sought permission to help in the good work, on the ground that they too, were accustomed to seek God, just as did the Israelites. That sounds well; but the facts were that they were foreigners, brought into the country by Esarhaddon to take the place of the Israelites who had been carried away captive, and they, indeed, "feared the Lord," but they "served their own gods" also. 2 K. 17: 33. Their desire was to secure some of the influence which a share in building the temple would give them. This offer was promptly rejected. Then they began their machinations in the Persian court, writing to the king that if the city of Jerusalem and the temple were builded, he would be sure to lose his rule over the inhabitants. The result was that he ordered the work to cease. 2. "The Renewal." In the second year of Darius, Zerubbabel, stirred up by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, again assumed work on the temple, without waiting for the removal of the king's prohibition. The king's satrap, or governor, made enquiry into the rebuilding, wrote to his master concerning it, and preferred the request of the Jews to search among the records to see if the decree of Cyrus could not be found, which authorized them to proceed. 3. "The Permission." The decree was found, and Darius Hystaspes, out of reverence for his great predecessor, not only allowed the work to go on, but gave orders that they should be aided from the tribute exacted of the country, and that they be supplied with all the animals and materials necessary for their sacrifices, which in the aggregate were quite too costly for the people as yet to bear. The reason that he gave for his liberality was: "That they may offer sacrifices of sweet savors unto the God of heaven, and pray for the life of the king and his sons."

BIOGRAPHICAL.—"Haggai" (Festive) As our lesson informs us, he was a prophet, who, probably, returned with the Jews from their exile. His principal mission was to rouse the Jews once more to the rebuilding of the temple. The book which is called by his name has five messages to this end, each so brief that they are supposed to be only a short summary of the original discourses which he delivered.

"Zechariah" (Jehovah Remembered). In our lesson, after the custom of the Jews, he is called "the son of Iddo," though Iddo really was his grandfather, his father's name being Berechiah. He also must have been born in Babylonia, and have been quite young at the time of his arrival in Judea. Zechariah was priest as well as prophet. He had the same great object before him as did Haggai—the rebuilding of the temple. The book which is called by his name, and which was written by him, is devoted to prophecies and visions concerning the erection of the second temple and the coming of Christ.

"Darius." This is the Darius Hystaspes who obtained the crown of Persia after the death of Smerdis. His reign was a long one, from B. C 521-486. He confirmed the decree of Cyrus relative to the building of the temple, and permitted it to go on, helping with funds and animals for the sacrifices, as elsewhere we have shown. The rebuilding was resumed in his second year—the temple was dedicated in his sixth year.

"Artaxerxes (The Great Warrior). This refers to the second of that name, known as Longimanus, the son of Xerxes, whose reign was B. C. 464-425.

FREE MISSIONS.

—The members of the Chicago Christian Association last week packed and sent a box to Rev. Eli Tapley, of Columbus, Miss. The following note gives the particulars:

CHICAGO, Dec. 18, 1878.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Those of your readers who assisted in preparing a box for Rev. and Mrs. Eli Tapley, will be pleased to know that the box has been forwarded. Five persons contributed cash, and eleven contributed clothing. A rubber overcoat and cloth for a new wool dress were purchased with the cash. A low estimate of the value of the contents is $35 00.

The express company forwarded the box without charge. The Secretary of the Chicago Christian Association and Mrs. J. S. Whitcomb acted as a volunteer committee in packing the box and putting a valuation upon its contents.

—The sisters of the College Church, Wheaton, are also preparing a box for Mr. Tapley. This is the kind of mission work that is well pleasing to God.

—Miss Harriet Furguson, a graduate of Wheaton in 1871, started this week for Columbus, Miss., to engage in the work of teaching. She has been detained from this work for two or three months on account of the yellow fever.

—Mr. A. D. Zaraphonithes, of Athens, Greece, who studied several years at Wheaton and Union Theological Seminary, in preparation for missionary work in Turkey and Greece, lectured last Wednesday evening in the College chapel, Wheaton, on the manners and customs of those countries. He criticized frankly the policy of the American Board in Asia Minor, which seemed to be more to keep up the American Board than to extend the Gospel in the best way. He also paid a loving tribute of respect to Wheaton for the religious principles inculcated by its faculty, so strongly in contrast with Eastern institutions. His description of the Eastern manners was highly entertaining and instructive, being illustrated by a number of articles in common use in Armenia and Turkey. He was assisted by a young lady and three young men, all Armenians, all connected with the College, who, dressed in native costume, presented in a vivid manner various occupations of Eastern life. The lecture will be repeated in two weeks for the benefit of a poor Armenian family now living in the Eastern States.

—The interesting mission work presented by Bro. O. M. Brown, of Oberlin, before the Illinois State Convention, will be better understood from the following letter from Miss Frow, now with Mr. and Mrs. Norton, at Elichpoor, India. The United Presbyterian publishes the letter and commends it by saying:

"The honest way of securing funds for doing missionary or any other kind of church work, is to give it as an offering to the Lord, without any compromise with the flesh and the world. We publish the letter at the request of a correspondent who copied it from a newspaper, and commend it to all our readers." Miss Frow writes:

In the last mail Miss M—— wrote me that you had sent Mr. B——, of Oberlin, fifty dollars for me, raised by a strawberry festival. I was touched by the love that prompted it, for there is no earthly gift I prize more than the love of my dear friends, which is so doubly dear to me here. And I know they worked hard for it. But dear M—— the way of raising the money was so unscriptural, that for Jesus' sake I must refuse it. It has been a great trial to me to write this, from the fact that you did it in love for me, and I fear I shall offend some of my dear Winchester friends. But Jesus prefers "obedience to sacrifice." I know, too, I shall be misunderstood, but I will state my reason as briefly and clearly as I can. But I do not feel independent. In fact, I feel the most dependent creature living. I am in India, not representing any denomination or board, but in the name of Jesus only. We have simply made our wants known to him, and he has supplied our every need. But dear M——if we let any unscriptural way of supporting us get into our work, then God cannot prosper us. I desire more to have souls saved, than to be liberally supported. For what good will it do, if we only care to make ourselves comfortable in every way. The only way to have power with God and men is perfect obedience to the Word of God. It is true that he does not say, do not have "festivals," but he says its equivalent. I do not feel that God is pleased with the common way of raising money now-a-days for his cause. These fairs, festivals, etc., are only occasions for the flesh. I do not remember one I ever attended where Jesus had he been here in the body would have attended, nor should his children go where he cannot. The money that is given in such ways is equivalent to saying, "Dear Lord, I'll take half of this money and have a good time with it, and you can have the other half." I do not feel that this can be benevolence at all. Part of the money spent in self-indulgence and the rest, above the cost of the feast, given to the Lord.

I believe the Lord only wants free-will offerings. In Exodus 35:5, it says: "Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it an offering to the Lord, gold and silver and brass;" and in verse 21, "And they came, every one whom the Spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work of the tabernacle." I believe this is the spirit God wants in the churches to-day; nor do I believe that any one is able to improve upon the Bible plan, to-day. I believe he would rather people would worship him under trees than in churches built by such means. A native church in Africa, about which I know positively, just as it was near completion, was almost ruined by a windstorm. What did they do? They had, seemingly, spent all they could on it. No; they did not even appeal to the Board for help, or to others, but began selling everything of their own that they could spare, deprived themselves of many things and rebuilt it themselves. I have always felt it a rebuke to Christian lands. "God loves a cheerful giver;" and, I fear, much money that is professedly given him is an insult to him. The whole spirit of the Bible is self-denial, which was the ruling spirit of the life of Christ on earth, the Son of God. Can we have a higher example or authority? Many sinners quiet their consciences by "giving to the Lord" in this way, while their whole lives are equivalent to spitting in God's face. But many persons do it without a thought, because they have not proper light, because ministers sanction it. Worldly men see this in Christians and it often is a stumbling-block to them. I feel this very deeply and though we could use the money in many ways, yet Jesus will not be pleased, I know. We want what is freely given to the Lord. I know the dear people of Winchester did it for the love, yet I feel they have not had sufficient light. He will not let his cause languish where we obey him. He will not suffer hunger to come unless it would be more for his glory, which it sometimes is. He never betrays a trust reposed in him. I have not been provided for as might have been expected. I supposed it must come more largely from America, as I was better known there; but, with the exception of $3.60 which has already come, and $7.50 which I hear is on the way, my wants have been met from other lands. God be praised!

JENNIE A. FROW.

BAPTIST.

—The committee of publication of the Spring Creek Baptist Church, near Burlington, Iowa, have sent a letter of thanks to the Cynosure for its position toward their pastor, Rev. Joel H. Austin. The letter also contains a letter printed by them in the Burlington Hawkeye, answering the misrepresentations printed and circulated regarding the difficulties in their church. The committee have also printed the following protest of the church against the decision of the ex-parte council, of which Rev. Dr. Whiting was moderator:

PROTEST.

We protest against the council, first, as having been called contrary to all scriptural or Baptist usage; the persons issuing the call were at the time under charges by the church, "of false representation against the church and its pastor; refusal to fellowship the church, and falsehood." We protest, second, because the church was never notified of the time the council would meet; third, because the church was never notified as to what matters would be "submitted for final settlement." We protest, fourth, against being accused of being hasty in our action in excluding members who had publicly declared that they would not fellowship the church five months before their exclusion, and who had refused to support the church with their means during the present year, and some of whom had during this time repeatedly disturbed the meetings of the church in the most unchristian manner, the church during this time having used every gospel means to bring them back to the path of duty, but without avail The statement by said council, tha the action of the church was "prompted by passion and prejudice," is simply an untruth. We protest, fifth, aganst this or any other councils advising Baptist churches to receive persons who have been excluded from this church, without said churches first inquiring of this church why they were excluded, and by committee examining our records in regard to their exclusion. We protest, sixth, against ex-parte councils in general. First, as being unscriptural: The Bible nowhere sanctions them. In the Acts of the Apostles ex-parte councils are spoken of, but are in no case a part of the gospel economy. Moreover, they were all against Christ. See Acts vi. 9–15; ix. 23; xxiii. 1–30; xxiv. 1–21; xxiv. 21–29.

Second. They render a reconciliation impossible, because a church excludes a member for what it holds to be good reasons. An ex-parte council will only learn and reflect the views of the excluded member in the matter. Thus, for what the church would restore the excluded member, he will not then admit, and to what the latter party will agree the church will not and cannot honestly consent.

Third. They never in any case learn the whole truth, for men will ever look at things from a different standpoint, and arrive at separate conclusions, thus making the hearing of both sides a necessity to arriving at the truth.

Fourth. A church can never surrender its discipline to an ex-parte council; for that would be destructive of all discipline, produce anarchy in every church, and be subsersive of all gospel order.

We earnestly protest against all that is said by this ex parte council against the character of our pastor, Rev. Joel H. Austin, for the following reasons: Brother Austin was not before said council for the trial of character. He was never notified to appear before it by any person or persons whatever. There were no charges preferred against him. Three of the ministers sitting on said council, J. F. Merriam, J. C. Hurd, and T. J. Penny, were by every rule of justice disqualified from sitting on any council concerning Bro. Austin, they having voted to expel him from the Burlington Baptist Association without any charges having been preferred against him. Moreover, three of the ministers sitting on said council, J. F. Merriam, J. C. Hurd, and Rev. Davies, are known to be personal enemies of Bro. Austin. One of them, J. F. Merriam, has been for months writing to parties in Iowa, Illinois and New York, for any reports or rumors detrimental to the character of Bro. Austin, the said Merriam filling his own letter to one of his correspondents with the most outrageous falsehoods in regard to the character and actions of Bro. Austin, and the action of this church since Bro. Austin has been its pastor.

Another of them, J. C. Hurd, published an article in the Central Baptist of September 12, 1878, headed "Burlington Baptist Association," which contains falsehoods of the deepest dye, both against Bro. Austin, the Spring Creek delegation and the action of the association.

The rumors and reports obtained by Merriam, of which several letters were used by him before the Burlington Baptist Association (where he declared he could not vouch for them) constituted the "abundant documentary testimony" before said ex parte council. The "abundant oral testimony" was from persons who had been excluded from this church for falsehood and other charges, they having furnished the evidence over their own signatures that condemned them.

Finally, "pointless accusation is reviling, and a brother who is a reviler is classed with extortioners, drunkards and other vile persons (1 Cor. 6:10; 1 Cor. 5:11, and 1 Tim. 6:4,) and Christians are commanded to avoid them." "The action" of said ex parte council "is mere reviling and slander and all concerned in uttering or publishing it are guilty before God."

This church, knowing the character of Joel H. Austin since he has been our pastor, now nearly two years, regard him as worthy "of a name and place in the Christian ministry."

Whether the revilers mentioned above are thus worthy we leave all Christian people to judge for themselves.

Unanimously adopted and ordered published by the Spring Creek, Des Moines county, Iowa, Baptist church, December 7, 1878.

PRESTON CENTER, PA.

Elated with seeming success, the Preston Center Baptist church, led by its lodge pastor and his coworker (who says he is opposed to the lodge!) struck off the rule against secret orders from the church book with no opposition. After the change of time for the meeting, noted in the previous account, the members had no time to make a rally of such as were opposed to this piece of church jesuitry and hence kept aloof. So the first Baptist Lodge of Preston Center has now a quorum for business, and the deacons being both against the lodge, and so unendurable, they go and appoint two new deacons both Odd-fellows, and so they "go on their way rejoicing" in their transient victory. So accustomed is the pastor to the lodge usages that he sometimes forgets where he is presiding. Report says that in a recent church(?) meeting he inquired, "Is the lodge ready for the question?" Report also says that one of the converts recently baptized being inspired by the good creature of his former days, offered for his baptism a thank offering to his good pastor, who, being a Good Templar, he of course refused the drink. For the latter of these statements we do not vouch.

We are informed that there will soon be a church organized in this section on the basis of "No fellowship for the lodge," which will embrace the anti-secret members of the Preston Center church and others of the same views.

More when the occasion demands.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

Bro. Callender is a very careful man and so wishes it to be understood that as he has not had all his information first hand, he holds himself ready to correct whatever may be proven erroneous. May the Lord be with the brethren of Preston Center and strengthen them to go forward in the strait and blessed way of communion and fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ and separation from his enemies.

FREE BAPTIST.

—Elder J. F. Browne gave one or two lectures at Evansville, Wis., where he has been preaching, before he entered on his lecture work in Illinois. Mrs. Browne is comfortably situated at Wheaton, while her husband is away on his mission.

—N. F. Ravlin, "Grand Prelate," etc., of the Knights Templar, has been pastor of a Free-will Baptist church in this city. A few weeks since, however, he was deserted by a large proportion of his congregation, who were dissatisfied with his liberalizing Masonic preaching. He still continues to preach in a hall on the West Side on such topics as "Christianity vs. Religion," which was announced for last Sabbath. A Masonic invitation is extended to "all people outside of sects."

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. H. P. McClurkin, President of the Ohio State Association, assisted Rev. W. S. Fulton of Dresden, Ohio, and Rev. S .A. George of Mansfield, in the dedication of a new house of worship near Dresden, on Sabbath, Dec. 15th. The interesting services continued through that day and the next, when the great reforms represented by the National Associations of Chicago and Philadelphia were discussed, Bro. George giving an able address against secretism.

News of the Week.

—The thermometer stood at from 12 to 17 degrees below zero last Thursday morning in the vicinity of Chicago; in the city it was but 3 or 4 below. This was followed by a snow storm on Friday and Saturday making nearly a foot of snow on a level.

—In this city and in Janesville, Wis., there were two murder trials proceeding last week of wonderful similarity. In both cases a young wife and a hired man were on trial for the murder of the husband. In one case the man was shot while at the barn in the evening looking after a loose horse, in the other the body was found under his horse's heels where it had been placed to ward off suspicion.

—Bayard Taylor, American Minister to Germany, died at Berlin, at 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon. He passed away from life as though sinking into sleep. Until recently a decided improvement in his condition has been perceptible, and the tidings of his sudden death will arouse universal grief and sorrow, because the deceased gentleman, although only accredited a short time, was a universal favorite. The Emperor William, the Crown Prince and Prince Bismarck greatly esteemed Mr. Taylor, whose appointment as Minister to this court was extremely welcome to them.

—There was an alarm of fire in one of the New York school buildings the other day. There were 1,310 pupils in the building, as many persons as would be in a crowded theater. Had the alarm been in a theater there would have been a panic, and scores of people would have been crushed to death. In the schoolroom it was different. The principal, when the fire was discovered, gave the signal for dismissal. A teacher took her place at the piano, gave the usual signal to march, the pupils filed out of their rooms and, according to rule, marched down the stairways in single file. In three minutes the building was empty, and not a single accident had occurred. One little fellow fainted on the stairway; but, as the next boy picked him up and, without remark, carried him into the street, there was no excitement.

—A terrible and distressing affair occurred lately at Hillside station, on the Pennsylvania railroad, about 50 miles from Pittsburg. A young lady named Hotham, daughter of John Hotham, a well-known resident of Hillsdale, had been left at home with two younger sisters. About 8:30 o'clock her brother, Joseph, returned from a spelling bee which had been given in the neighborhood, and was mistaken by the young lady for a tramp, and shot dead as he stood on the porch in front of the door. The whole charge from the shot-gun which she fired at him entered his right breast, and the only words he uttered were, "My dear sister." It seems that Joseph tried to frighten the girls by passing himself off as a tramp, and succeeded so well that they did not recognize him at all. The poor girl who did the shooting has become almost insane with grief, and doubts are entertained of her recovering her mind.

FOREIGN.

—The report of the investigating committee on the West of England and South Wales District Bank shows that the whole capital and reserve funds have been lost, and there is a further deficiency of $1,500,000 for which the shareholders are liable. There is no possibility of the reconstruction of the bank.

—In a speech in the French Senate, M. Waddington, the Foreign Minister, said: "I am happy to say that, despite certain hankerings for more or less than the treaty of Berlin, all the cabinets, those having something to gain as well as those having something to lose by such divergences, have ultimately seen that the execution of the treaty on all sides is the only way of not jeopardizing the peace of Europe. A large number of its clauses are already carried out. As to Greece, you know that the initiative with which we are reproached is part of our traditional policy. To give satisfaction to Greece is to remove one of the most dangerous elements of the Eastern question, and it is to the interest of the Porte itself for the treaty of Berlin to have some durability."

—A telegram dated Galato (a suburb of Constantinople), at 3 P. M. Thursday, reports that the steamer Byzantine, from Marseilles for Constantinople, was sunk in a collision. One hundred and fifty lives were lost. Fourteen persons only were saved.

—Say-yid Jamuluddin, a native of Afghanistan, publishes in an Arabic paper in Alexandria an article on "The English and the Afghans," in which he expresses the opinion that the Ameer has a definite understanding with Russia, Persia, and Nawabs and Rajahs of India, for uprooting English rule in Asia. In case of a defeat in the present war, the writer thinks the Afghans may, from mere spite and hatred, offer their conutry to Russia, and thus precipitate a quarrel between that country and England. These views are very interesting, because they come from an Afghan who seems well posted as to the history of the struggle in Asia, and who is naturally interested in making the best possible showing for his country. He seems to take it for granted that the Afghans will meet with reverses.

—A dispatch from Peshawur says it is reported that General McPherson's brigade has occupied Jellalabad, Afghan. A correspondent at Dadur says General Stewart has sent pressing orders for all troops to advance as rapidly as possible. This probably means an advance on Candabar.

—Sojourner Truth, a colored woman over one hundred years old, lectured at Cooper Institute, New York, Friday night, before a small audience, on religious topics.

Home and Farm.

HOW HOUSE AIR IS SPOILED.

Hearth and Home gives some facts concerning the impure air of the home, which are worthy of attention:

The following facts will show how air in houses becomes contaminated:

1. An adult person consumes thirty-four grammes of oxygen per hour, a gramme being equal to fifteen grains.

2. A stearine candle consumes about one half as much.

3. An adult gives off forty grammes per hour of carbonic acid. A child of fifty pounds weight gives off as much as an adult of 100 lbs. weight.

4. A school-room filled with children, will, if not well ventilated at the beginning of the hour contain twenty-five parts in 1,000 carbonic acid, at the end of the first hour forty-one, and end of the second hour eighty-one.

5. The air is spoiled by the perspiration of the body and by the volatile oils given out through the skin. An adult gives off through the skin in twenty-four hours from 500 to 800 grammes of water mixed with various excrements, poisonous if breathed.

6. A stearine candle gives off per hour four-tenth of a cubic foot of carbonic acid and 0.03 pounds of water.

7. Carbonic oxide is a much more dangerous gas than carbonic acid, and this obtains entrance to our rooms in many ways—through the cracks in stoves and defective stove-pipes, or when the carbonic acid of the air comes in contact with a very hot stove and is converted into a carbonic oxide. The dust of the air may, on a hot stove, be burnt to produce it; or it may flow out from gas-pipes when the gas is not perfectly consumed.

8. Another form of air injury is the dust of a fungus growth which fills the air in damp and warm places. We call it miasma from want of a true knowledge of its character.

9. Accidental vapors are the crowning source of air poisoning. These are tobacco-smoke, kitchen vapors, wash-room vapors and the like.

10. When we heat our houses and close them from outside air, the heat turns the mixture into a vile mess unfit for breathing. The only remedy is ventilation. Now that it is cold weather, and our rooms are closed from the currents of outside air, let us look after the matter thoroughly, and do our best to prevent injury to ourselves from polluted air.

WINTER CLOTHING FOR CHILDREN.—Every one must remark that a favorite article of winter clothing is a comforter swathed around the neck. This is a great error; the feet and the wrists are the proper members to keep warm; the face and throat will harden into a healthy indifference to cold; but that muffler exchanged for an extra pair of thick socks and knitted gloves, would preserve a boy or girl really warm and well. Bronchitis and sore throat have declined at least fifty per centum since the absurd use of high collars and twice round neckerchief went out of fashion; and if the poor would take better care of their children's feet, half the infantile mortality would disappear. It costs only a trifle to put a thick piece of felt or cork into the bottom of a boot or shoe, but the difference is often considerable between that and the doctor's bill, with, perhaps, the undertaker's besides.—Green Mountain (Vt.) Freeman.

SIR A. COOPER'S CHILBLAIN LINIMENT.—One ounce of camphorated spirits of wine, half an ounce of subacetate of lead; mix and apply in the usual way three or four times a day. Some persons use vinegar as a preventive. Its efficacy may be increased by the addition to the vinegar of one-fourth of its quantity of camphorated spirit.

MUTTON CUTLETS.—Trim off all superfluous fat from each cutlet, dip them in an egg beaten up with a little oil, some pepper and salt, then cover them with bread crumbs, and let them rest for a couple of hours. Fry them in plenty of butter or lard to a light brown color. Arrange them in a circle in a dish, and pour some tomato sauce in the center.

A CURE FOR DIPHTHERIA.—Peal and chip some onions fine and stew them until soft, then thicken with Indian meal, put in bags, and place around the throat as hot as they can be borne. Change often till relieved. This remedy has been known to cure some distressing cases. Destroy those bags that have been used, burn or bury them, as they contain much poison.

POURING LEAD.—Many mechanics have been sorely tried when pouring lead around a damp or wet joint, to find it explode, blow out, or scatter from the effects of steam generated by the heat of the lead. The whole trouble may be stopped by putting a piece of resin, the size of the end of a man's thumb, into the ladle and allowing it to melt before pouring.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

Publishers' Department.

"TO THE WORK, FRIENDS!"

"Where there's a Will there's a Way!"

Hear brother S. Alexander, Leetonia, Ohio. He writes: "Hurrah for 10 000 subscribers for the Christian Cynosure on or before March 1st, 1879. If every subscriber would renew and send two additional subscribers the work would be done. Let me say, to the work, friends! for where there's a will there's a way. * * I will do all I can for the circulation of your valuable paper."

Gideon Preston, Syracuse, N. Y., sends ten subscriptions for one year each and writes: "Through the blessing of God I have obtained ten subscribers, new and old, for one year to help make up the list of 10,000 * * I intend to get all I can to subscribe for the Cynosure."

Samuel A. Pratt, Worcester, Mass., sends ten subscriptions for one year each and two for six months each on his own account, and three for three months each for a friend.

B. J. Flint, Waitesburg, Washington Territory, sends five subscriptions for one year each and writes: "I shall try to get some more subscribers."

John Lazenby, Jacksonville, Ill., sends five subscriptions for one year each.

A friend sends sixteen subscriptions for three months each and wishes to know whether we like his plan of securing subscriptions. We like it very much, some of our largest clubs have been secured by first sending the paper for three months after which it was easy to secure subscriptions for the year. Let us have thousands of three, or better still, of four months subscriptions.

L. H. Bohrer, Bloomington, Ill., orders two copies of the Cynosure for one year each to one address, and two copies to different persons for one year each.

Thos. Gibbs, Dora, Ind., sends one subscription for one year and ten for three months each.

Thirteen persons send two subscriptions each for one year.

F. R. Lord, Streator, Ill., writes: "Could Streator have five hundred Cynosures scattered among its inhabitants each week then would the chains that bind men soon be broken." Why cannot five hundred copies be sent each week to Streator?

Dea. E. Smith, Center Strafford, New Hampshire is getting up a club for the Cynosure. Nathan Green, Jr., Craigville, is trying to extend the circulation of the Cynosure. Harrington A. Biggs, Ro-Raymond, Ohio, writes: "O! our heart is in the work and our hands will be as soon as possible."

Hiram Gardener, Leoni, Michigan, expects to secure a club.

One lady orders the Cynosure as a Christmas gift for her sons.

Rev. Joel Martin, Hickory Corners, Michigan, writes: "I shall encourage every one to take the Cynosure as far as it is at all reasonable or practicable."

S. J. White, Lostant, Illinois, writes: "Let old subscribers on renewing send a copy for a few months to some friend."

James Haverfield, Cadiz, O., is expecting to canvass for the Cynosure soon.

"TO THE WORK, FRIENDS!" "Where there's a will there's a way."

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

The Committee on Church Co-operation and Missions appointed by the Illinois State Association is called to meet in the President's office, Wheaton College, Wheaton, Ill., on Friday, January 3d, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M.

J. F. BROWNE,

By authority of Bishop Milton Wright, chairman.

The members of this committee are: Milton Wright, J. Blanchard, J. B. Walker, J. M. Snyder, J. L. Barlow, J. F. Browne, Geo. R. Milton, A H. Hiatt, Amos Wheeler and E B Thompson.

MICHIGAN.

The next annual meeting of the Michigan State Christian Association opposed to secret societies will be held at Adrian, Michigan, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, January 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1879. The Convention will meet at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday evening and will hold day sessions during Wednesday and Thursday. Past Master Ronayne will attend and work the Masonic degrees, and other able speakers will also be present and address the Convention. Now, friends, let us have a general rally at Adrian and help once more to sink Freemasonry out of sight.

E. MATHEWS, Sec'y.

PAST MASTER RONAYNE.

From the State Convention, Adrian, Michigan, I go to Angola, Indiana; from Angola to Shade, Ohio. Friends in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania or New York desiring to have the Masonic degrees worked in their respective localities are requested to write to me at once, so that a regular programme of work may be made out.

E. RONAYNE,
104 Bremer St., Chicago, Ill.

CANADA.

Will friends of the anti-secrecy reform in Canada who desire to engage in active measures for instructing the ignorant and exposing the wickedness of the secret orders, write me at 231 West Madison street, Chicago.

My object is to ascertain what the people desire; and, should the facts warrant, to hold a convention at some central point convenient of access, and in connection with Bro. Ronayne and others to work the degrees and organize for systematic effort. Prompt responses are desired, so that if anything is done it may be arranged in connection with work in New England, to save time and expense.

Topics of the Time.

The New York Witness calls attention to a feature of the Roman Catholic work in the South which has apparently been overlooked. It says: "The Roman Catholic mission to the colored people of the South was doubtless intended to catch souls, for no attention was paid to the negroes, whether bond or free, by Rome until they became voters." It will be readily remembered that Romish influence, during our national struggle with the slave power, was notoriously in favor of the oppressors of the blacks, from the howling mob of 1863 in New York to the Pope in the Vatican. When the freedom and citizenship of the colored race was assured the Romish propaganda began its work among them. Let the statement of the Witness be remembered.

In Illinois alone over two million dollars are asked of the Legislature next year to maintain the public charitable institutions of the State. The remarks of Joseph Cook on the demands of socialism in another column, could have no better emphasis. The management of the socialistic, labor-union societies has also an amusing illustration in the developements of a late law trial in England, which showed that a man had been on a strike for nearly two years, but all the time drawing twenty shillings a week from the lodge fund. It was also shown that under the rules he could have drawn full laborer's wages, or twenty-two shillings. When asked by the magistrate why he did not take them, the surprised representative of the Kearney-Butler party ejaculated, "What, work for twenty-two shillings a week, when I could get twenty shillings for doing nothing!" Such incidents bring out the socialistic picture as a master's touch does a painting.

Few organizations compare with Jesuitism and the lodge in fastening upon and controlling popular movements to personal advantage. Twice has the temperance cause thus suffered; but now, in Iowa, the lodge promises to turn the tide of opposition to the rum demon into the black channel of political secretism; and a secret, oath-bound affair, called the "Black Ribbon" society will be a power to carry ambitious politicians into coveted office. A Hamilton, Iowa, paper quoted by the State Register of Des Moines, says that a league is being formed at the State capital of a political character, and with ritual, secret pass-words and signs. This is to be the grand lodge, and the State is to be thoroughly overrun by its agents and branch lodges formed in every available corner. The ribbon temperance movement under Mr. John A. Drew has had a great success in Iowa, and furnishes the material which this political lodge hopes to fatten upon. Iowa has too many patriotic and noble citizens guarding her liberties and honor to permit this desperate game of demagogues to prosper for a single day. Let it be stamped out while the flame yet flickers.

The commercial prosperity which has been gaining ground in this country for the past three or four years, and which is making specie resumption possible without a general crash, is attracting much attention abroad. The crushing depression in the manufacturing interests of Great Britain serves to call more general attention to our own vigorous condition. While English poor are suffering the severities of hunger and cold, there is less complaint in our great cities than usual from the needy poor. The commercial reports tell a wonderful story. Mr. Nimmo, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, reports that in November last the balance of our foreign trade was the unusual amount of nearly $32,000,000 in our favor, that, too, being one of the dullest months of the year. For five months beginning July 1st, our exports exceeded the imports by $113,904,084, an increase of nearly 100 per cent. over the corresponding months of last year. For the twelve months ending November 30, the excess was $309,309,741, which compares favorably with the amount of the year before, which was $140,723,629. It is estimated that for 1878 the balance in our favor will be $350,000,000, while previous to 1874 the balance of trade ranged from ten to a hundred and fifty million dollars against us. These reports make the year 1878 the most prosperous, so far as foreign commerce is concerned, in the history of the United States. There is yet another satisfactory consideration in these figures: while the world is becoming indebted to us, we are furnishing to other lands their staples, not their luxuries. Our farms and manufactories are giving to other nations the products and machinery which are most useful and needed by all ranks of society.

A triangular fight for the United States Senate is going on in Illinois between Richard Oglesby, the present incumbent; John A. Logan, his predecessor; and Charles A. Farwell, a former Representative from this city. All three are politicians and have beside some of the subsidiary qualifications which are too frequently joined to a political character. Oglesby is a drinking man, and with other members of the Indian commission was publicly accused of having been on a "high old drunk" at Omaha at the government's expense last fall. Farwell is a successful politician and is accused of profiting by public office. Logan, in the palmy days of Grant was with Ben Butler one of the grand dispensers of executive appointments. He has a large interest in the Inter-ocean of this city, which is his ablest advocate for office, and brought that paper under the control of the printer's lodges a short time ago after it had for months shaken them off. The Tribune last week published the following purported conversation between Logan and Farwell given by the latter to a reporter. From it may be seen the ground of Logan's political hopes. Farwell says, "As nearly as I can recollect I said to him, 'General, you lack three votes. How are you to get them?' He replied by asking me another question. 'Are you a Mason?' said he. I replied, 'No. I am not a Mason.' 'Well. then, said he, 'don't ask me. Get the caucus solid and I will show you that I will be elected on the first ballot.'" Reporter—"What did he mean by his inquiry as to whether or not you were a Mason?" Farwell—"I was puzzled to know what he did mean and said to him, 'Perhaps you expect us to buy three votes,' or 'Do you expect us to buy three votes?' He promptly replied, 'No, I don't expect votes to be bought.'"

THE RIGHT MUST WIN.

O, it is hard to work for God,
To rise and take his part
Upon this battle-field of earth,
And not sometimes lose heart.

He hides himself so wondrously,
As though there were no God;
He is least seen when all the powers
Of ill are most abroad.

Or he deserts us at the hour
The fight is all but lost;
And seems to leave us to ourselves
Just when we need him most.

Ill masters good, good seems to change
To ill with greatest ease;
And, worse than all, the good with good
Is at cross-purposes.

Ah! God is other than we think;
His ways are far above,
Far beyond reason's height, and reached
Only by childlike love.

Workmen of God! O, lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle-field
Thou shalt know where to strike.

Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when he
Is most invisible.

Blest, too, is he who can divine
Where real right doth lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye.

For right is right, since God is God;
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin!

—F. W. Faber.

"THE IMAGE OF THE BEAST."

BY D. B. TURNEY.

A vast variety of facts evince beyond any room for a reasonable doubt, that the image of the beast, as depicted by the powerful pen of the prophetic apostle John on the island of Patmos, denoted and symbolized Masonry, and I no longer wonder at the expression in Ronayne's Handbook, p. 166: "Freemasonry is the image of the beast."

While on a recent visit at the house of Mr. Jackson Brake, in St. Clair county, Illinois, I met for the first time with Rev. Richard Horton's able and unanswerable work on "The Image of the Beast," and a diligent perusal of the same has clearly convinced me of an error in my article concerning the great beast itself, which was published in the Christian Cynosure of August 24th, 1876, in which I substantially held Freemasonry to be the wonderful beast having the seven heads, ten horns, ten crowns, a name of blasphemy, and the number 666, because of the seven great abominations of organized secretism, and because the name of the order of Free and Accepted Masons as written in modern Greek is Preimasonri, which contains the number of the beast. The fact is, and I see it plainly now, that I judged the Masonic order to be the astonishing beast from seeing the image or artificial imitation of the beast so clearly manifested in that terrible institution; but failed to note that it was only his likeness which I saw, or that this likness to the beast observable in the foul fraternity was the very thing which constituted it the image of the awful beast in Revelation. But Mr. Horton's work has set me right on this point.

Mr. Horton appears to have conclusively established the fact that Freemasonry is the only institution in the wide world that fulfills in every particular all the specifications relating to the image of the beast, and every other interpretation is beset with insuperable difficulties.

As the Latin kingdom (hee Latinee basileia) is the only kingdom known to contain 666, so Freemasonry (Preimasonri) is the only artificial institution which is known to contain the same number, and accordingly is the only possible image of the abominable beast after the healing of his deadly wound. The number of the beast belongs to the Latin kingdom, and the same number is therefore represented in that artificial institution or fraternity which is the image of that corrupt kingdom which warred against the glorious gospel and shed the blood of the saints; and although the fatal fact may astonish adhering Masons very much, the figures in this case tell the truth. Freemasonry, as the image of the beast, has all the marks of the beast, even to the number of his name. The number of the beast being 666, his image presents the same numerical value, that it may be a correct representation or likeness. Thus, in Romaic or modern Greek, Preimasonri equals 666, that being the Greek value also of Lateinos or of hee Latinee basileia. Will Freemasons take warning? "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six."—Rev. 13: 18.

As 666 was the number of the beast, his image, to be correct, must possess the same numerical value, and sure enough it does, provided the Masonic organization constitutes that image. The position that the Pope was the image intended to be foretold by John, has been fully disproved since Scott, Clarke and Benson wrote their commentaries. These commentators wrote under the great disadvantage of darkness concerning Masonic development, before the secrets of that fraternity were unfolded and its history written; but we do not suffer under the same disadvantage. The light has come. The so-called secrets have been revealed by Allyn, Bernard, Richardson, Ronayne and many more. And Masonry, as fully developed and exposed, proves to be the only adequate image of the beast after the healing of his deadly wound.

The standard authors of the church, from Irenæus in the 2d century to Albert Barnes in the 19th, identify the base beast with the seven heads and ten horns as the Latin kingdom or Roman empire; the great commentators are also agreed that the beast with the two horns that spake as a dragon and exercised all the power of the first beast, was a prophetic symbol of the Romish hierarchy with its regular and secular clergy; but there seems to be a great deal of confusion as to what constitutes the image of the beast first indicated. Some wish to find the image in the Pope; others seek for it in the renewed Roman empire; while many leave the point in vague obscurity as a matter for the future to solve; but Mr. Horton takes up the subject, and after distinctly disproving the positions which would represent the image in question by either the Pope or the renewed Roman empire, proceeds to prove by arguments that are invulnerable that the image can be found in Freemasonry—an organization distinct from the Latin kingdom, yet an artificial imitation of that vast and powerful empire. Mr. Horton has sustained his interpretation by facts which are too forcible to admit of doubt. His work is published by W. A. Wallace and printed at the office of "the Cottage Press," Summerfield, Noble county, Ohio; and without money or price I would commend it to the attention of all Christians who "have been thinking some" of joining the lodge. Mr. Horton's style does not possess any great degree of literary excellence, but to the careful and patient reader he makes his points sufficiently plain to be understood, and rivets the conviction that the image of the beast is found in Freemasonry, this being the only institution which meets in every respect all the conditions of the case as specified in Revelation. And the comparative modern date at which Masonry arose and was made independent of the craft of operative masons, will assist us to identify it as the great image.

An artist of Chicago is at work on the image of an old man. When he gets the work done, it will closely resemble the old man, and his form and features will be properties of his image; yet his age cannot be transmitted to that image. It will have all the appearance of an old man, without itself being old. And when some little boy, deceived by the wrinkles and gray hairs, says to a playmate, "Here is a very old image," the artist will reply, "The age is not in the image, but in the man it represents. The image, being just finished, is very young, but it bears the signs of old age from being the image of an old man." I reason thus of Masonry. Its fictitious boasts of old age may deceive its deluded dupes, but the great antiquity of which Masons have so much to say does not inhere in their order, but in the Latin kingdom which it represents. To be the image of the old and bloody beast it has to appear vastly older than it is. How does it happen that writers of the seventeenth century were so ignorant of the order that they never allude in any way to Masonry or its secrecy? Why do Shakespeare, Butler, Milton, Dryden and Addison fail to even mention or in any way allude to Freemasonry? And is it not remarkable that the many writers of romance and of song, whose works were produced in the seventeenth century, have been equally neglectful or ignorant of the existence and influence of the fraternity of Freemasons? Since June 24, 1717—the date at which Anti-masons insist that Blue Lodge Masonry was made—the allusion of writers to the order have been such as were to be expected, provided the fraternity originated at the time and place specified; for the earliest printed mention of the institution which can be verified, was made since the setting in of the eighteenth century. The Freemason's Pocket Companion, of 1830, on p. 192, professes to quote from Robert Plot's Natural History of Staffordshire, "of a custom of admitting men into the sociciety of Freemasons," "that none knew but themselves, which I have reason to suspect are perhaps as bad as this mystery of the craft itself, than which there is nothing I ever met with more false and incoherent." But this quotation lacks verification. Masons would have us believe that Plot wrote between 1666 and 1696, and that he made the above mentioned allusion to their fraternity; but I do not find that they are willing to produce the proof for the alleged extracts from Plot's work. We wait for the proof.

DOCTOR OF DIVINITY.

DEAR CYNOSURE;—Without being aware of the fact, probably, you have honored me, if it be an honor, with the "D.D.," a title to which I have no claim. Having entered the ministry with a simple college and law education, without the training of a Theological School, I have escaped all honorary ministerial distinctions, except such as distinguish all, even the humblest minister of the Gospel of Christ. With your permission, now I am about it, I would like to add some few of the things which, for so many years, I have been accustomed to think and say in relation to this honorary ecclesiastical distinction.

That it had a place in the old ceremonial law, among the titles, Rabbi, Master, Teacher, Father, Ruler, Priest, High Priest, etc., is quite manifest. That it was abolished with the rest, by the Lord Jesus Christ when he took Moses' seat is to my mind equally so. In fact, I do not see how it is possible for an unbiased, intelligent person to read the law of the New Dispensation, as given by Christ in Mat. 23th, first twelve verses, without coming to this conclusion. Can language be plainer? "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master even Christ; and all ye are brethren." "Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master even Christ." "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant."

Old distinctions with their emblems, badges, "philacteries," "border garments," "uppermost rooms," "chief seats," went into the dust under the leveling power of the Gospel. I would like to argue this point in full, but you have not the room. The argument in a nut-shell, is this: "Doctor of Divinity" is an ecclesiastical title of distinction conferred by state and not by church authority. The College and Theological schools alike claim all authority to confer the degree from legislative enactment. No church, but the Papal, pretends to claim the right to confer it; and yet, if conferred at all, the church is evidently the body to do it. The prohibition here, however, is too plain to be disregarded directly. So whether understood or allowed, or not, independent of "the great and good men" plea it is essentially an acknowledgment of state over church authority, or an ecclesiastical evasion. So it seems to me, at least, written in perfect kindness. Without writing more, I enclose to you the following extract from a pamphlet of twenty-five years ago on this subject.

Fraternally, etc.,

ALBERT L. POST.

Montrose, Pa.

EXTRACT

From the Rev. W. L. McCalla's defence of his preamble and resolution adverse to clerical titles of distinction offered to the Synod of Philadelphia, A. D. 1853.

"There is actually less foundation for the doctorate than for the papacy, for the council of cardinals see and know the Pope and pay an ostensible regard to his merit.

"The same thing may be said of the vastly higher titles given to Freemasons and Odd-fellows. In the company of a dozen clergymen a distinguished D.D. declared to me that there were some parts of Scripture which none but a Freemason could understand. Then of course well educated D.Ds. out of the lodge can not understand those Scriptures which an uneducated infidel in the lodge can understand. Then his titles of Master and Royal Arch and Knight must give him a literary and theological distinction which soars above the D.D. by several important degrees, without insisting upon the forty-five degrees of the Masonic Illuminati of the last century.....But since the abduction of Morgan, Masonry has so declined that it threatens to leave the world in irremediable ignorance of the Scriptures; and Odd-fellowship, which is superceding it rises still higher in its grandiloquent titles and claims of honorary distinction. Under the apparent impression that the D.Ds. and Royal Arches and Knights are not grand and noble enough, they begin above them all and rise upon the ascending degree of Noble Grand, Past Grand, Grand Sire, Worshipful Grand Sentinel, Right Worshipful Grand Representative, Most Worshipful Chaplain and Most Excellent Grand High Priest; to which they or some other society may add Horses and Chariots of Fire, Principalities and Powers, Yankee Doodle and St. Patrick's Day in the Morning.

"Now begin with the D.D., who is ignorant of the Bible, and step upward through the degrees of Masonry, white and black, and continue rising through the improving degrees of Odd-fellowship, and say whether each step you scale the empyrean, is not as truly connected with increasing merit over the untitled Christian ministry. You answer yes, because you know that it has no more substratum than a transient 'chimera humming in vacuity;' that is, you know it to be a pious fraud, a humbug which has no substance, and which is as plainly forbidden by the Great Head of the church as the title of the pope himself.

On Reforming the Army.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

Obedience of orders is a military virtue. Under the slave-power the support of slavery was a virtue; and hence, West Point graduates, who had been carefully trained to obey orders, found but little difficulty, in some cases, in obeying the orders that sustained slavery. Still, military men must obey orders, or leave the service.

There is, however, a way of remaining in the service and disobeying orders too. Nay, one may strive to destroy the government which gives him office and pay, and still be honored by that government and favored by the people! The way to do this, is to join the Masonic lodge, which possesses sufficient power to sustain one in covert opposition to the government. There cannot be a safe or healthy tone of discipline in the service where sergeants may become Masonic high priests, and generals sustain the pious shams and indecent mummeries of the lodge.

Our army and navy, as well as our clergy, should be composed of honorable men, who will not play farces in the name of morals and religion. Men who make farces of these serious interests cannot be trusted with any other interests of society.

No efforts at reform, therefore, in the army and navy will ever effect the purpose desired, so long as the officers and men are allowed to swear allegiance to secret societies. The Masonic lodge is a foreign institution, and any officer who takes its oaths, swears allegiance to a foreign power, and neutralizes the oath that he takes to the Constitution of the United States. Masonic titles, being aristocratic, foreign and unrepublican, are prohibited by the Constitution; and no officer who accepts these titles can have a sufficient respect for the Constitution. An officer of the American navy should scorn to act any other part in a foreign country than that of representative of a Christian republic, whose dealings are fair, open and just. If he feels unable to represent us on this basis, but must resort to the low arts of secret collusion, thus making himself the representative of the Masonic lodge, with its solemn mockeries and tricky insincerities, he had better seek service under some other government.

As the articles of war are largely the work of John Quincy Adams, the American people who still remain in favor of the republic, should deliberate carefully before altering them. There is one additional article, however, which they might receive, and which, in fact, is necessary to invigorate all the rest. It is this—that no one shall receive or hold a commission in the military service of the United States who holds any office or membership in the Masonic lodge, or in any other form of secret association.

If, unhappily, the service has already become debauched to any considerable extent by the Masonic lodge, and officers are not willing to renounce their allegiance to it, then it might, perhaps, become necessary to fix some future date after which all officers remaining in subjection to the lodge shall be discharged from the army. They should have a fair, open chance to decide which they will serve, the Constitution of the United States or the Masonic lodge.

We would call the particular attention of the people to the course of action that is likely to be pursued by Congress on this subject, as one that will be very significative of its power or desire to accomplish a reform. It should be remembered that the army under its old organization has served the republic well; and perhaps the members of the government themselves, though they may produce a change, have become too much entangled in the meshes of the lodge to be able to effect a reform in any department of the public service.

Masonic Parades.

BY H. S. KIRK.

Some time ago while conversing with a gentleman from Lansing, Mich., he favored me with a description of the new State Capitol building just being completed, and of which he, as a citizen, seemed justly proud. He remarked that it would soon be ready for use, and expressed a lively hope that the citizens of the place would not be insulted by any display of Masonic tomfoolery on that occasion. Just what course will be pursued by the craft, time alone must tell; but of one thing be assured, Masonry will gain nothing by parading before a disgusted people who are too intelligent to be imposed upon. Therefore

Retire to your caverns, ye knights of the apron,
The people will follow such leaders no more.

May we not hope that the time of such parades is almost ended. Some years ago they were more frequent with us than at present. Two years ago at the dedication of the Masonic Hall in Orland, Ind., a minister of the Gospel acted as worshipful, and with his own hand poured the corn, oil and wine upon the altar of Masonry. But the murmurings of the people were long and loud, especially against a man who had been regarded as an embassador of Christ, and yet by his presence and example had led his flock into a heathen pow-wow which terminated in a dance.

Courage, my insulted brethren, for the beast shall be taken and with him the false prophets, for the Kings of kings hath judged and in righteousness made war. The armies that follow him "are clothed in linen white and clean, for the white linen is the righteousness of the saints." Christ shall draw all men to him. The omens are propitious. The time is at hand.

"For, God be praised, New England
Takes again her ancient place;
And again the Pilgrim banner
Leads the vaugnard of our race.

"The Eastern hills are blazing,
The Northern skies are bright,
And the far off West is turning
Her forehead to the light.

"Then, brethren, close up nearer:
Press hard the hostile towers
For another Balaklava
And the Malakoff is ours."

Faith in Christmas.

"We believe in Christmas," says the Congregationalist of 231 December last—"in the truths it commemorates, in the glad festivities it occasions," etc. And a contributor to its pages delights to notice that "the Christmas holidays are more generally observed than formerly;" while he seems to lament that "in America we sing no songs of welcome Christmas, and the little ones sing no Christmas carols," as in European countries. If in the most learned and refined society in the world, Paul's "spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry," would he remain unmoved, if now on earth, while "beholding the devotions" of professing Christians—yes, zealous Protestants—in all American cities during the Christmas holidays? We believe that apostle, like Lot, would "vex his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds;" their more refined but not less real adultery, equally offensive to a holy and jealous God. Rev. 19:2.

"Believe in Christmas!" and why not, on the same "infallible" evidence, believe in Martin-mass, Candle-mass, Michael-mass, etc.? Look into your almanac, heretic! and see how far you still come short in observing "sacred festivals enjoined by the authority of the holy Roman Catholic church!" Your observance of "Pasch and Yule" will not acquit you at the confessional. O, for the spirit and power of John Knox, to rebuke many of those who would stand upon his shoulders on centennial and tri-centenary occasions! [Absit blasphemia iterumque absit.]

"And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night." Luke 2:8. Now such is the simple narrative of the time and place of our Lord's birth; and they must be pitiably ignorant, or unpardonably wicked parents, guardians, teachers or ministers who would attempt to deceive credulous children by inducing them to believe that shepherds were in the field by night in the latitude of Judea, or that their flock would find pasture on the twenty-fifth day of December,—even supposing the popish festival to be lawful. The "faith" of the Congregationalist is worse than fancy.—Reformation Advocate.

Reform News.

The Minnesota State Convention.

St. Charles, Minn., Dec. 21, 1878.

Editor Christian Cynosure:—I herewith submit a portion of the minutes of our State meeting which assembled Dec. 11th, in answer to a call published in the Cynosure, and many of our State papers, for a convention to organize a State Association auxiliary to the National Christian Association.

Early in the afternoon as the train arrived from the west we were greatly encouraged by the appearance of so many earnest Christian workers, and soon teams made their appearance with men of more than ordinary courage who had come in open conveyances from thirty to fifty miles.

Very early the hall was crowded. Bro. J. P. Stoddard called the meeting to order. Bro. E. G. Paine, A. M. of Wasioja was elected chairman and Rev. Wm. Fenton of St. Paul was elected secretary. Bro. Hardie of Spring Valley made the opening prayer. The hymn "All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung. The chair then appointed the necessary committees.

Past Master E. Ronayne failing to arrive, Rev. J. P. Stoddard gave a powerful and convincing lecture upon the antagonism of sworn secrecy or Freemasonry to domestic relations.

Dec. 12th, 9 A. M. prayer meeting led by the chairman, prayers were fervent and the Lord seemed near.

After prayer meeting some business was transacted and Rev. Mr. Stoddard gave a lecture on Masonic satellites in which the thoroughly despotic and world-wide grasp of Freemasonry was exhibited in the most forcible and convincing logic.

Afternoon session opened with a prayer meeting led by Bro. D. F. Shepardson, followed by short addresses until three o'clock when E. Ronayne proceeded to discuss the question, "Are Masonic obligations binding?" In the evening he worked the first degree of Freemasonry. The attention of the audience was profound and respectful, while the base and wicked character of Freemasonry was overwhelmingly exposed.

Dec. 13th, 9 A. M.—Prayer meeting continued until business was taken up. Committee on permanent organization reported a preamble, constitution and by-laws which after considerable discussion were adopted.

Afternoon session.—The following resolutions were reported, discussed and adopted:

1st. Resolved, That it is the judgment of this Association that Freemasonry is a revival of the secret worship of the old Baal or sun-god of Egypt and Samaria, (the Hiram Abiff of the lodge being simply the Heregod of the mysteries), and that in fellowshiping its members as worthy of good standing in a Christian church we endorse a system of paganism which is utterly repugnant to God's Word and prostrates the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ to the debasing service of popularizing and giving respectability to one of the most dangerous enemies of the church and of Christian civilization.

2d. Resolved, That we hereby express Christian sympathy with our brethren who hold church connection in those bodies receiving adhering members of secret orders to their fellowship, and that we do earnestly exhort such brethren to be faithful in letting their light shine by admonishing and rebuking this great sin whether in the pulpit or the pews.

3d. Resolved, That we see reason for special thanksgiving to God in the establishment of schools for Christian culture, which bear a faithful testimony against the lodge system; where parents and guardians may send their children to receive a thorough training for work in the church of Christ and the practical duties of citizenship; and we commend all such to our friends for their patronage and support.

4th. Resolved, That we commend the earnest efforts of the devoted men and women of this town, State and whole country to suppress the sale and use of intoxicating liquors and to save the victims who have have fallen under the power of this tempter; and we do most earnestly call the attention of all such to the fact that the rum traffic finds its strongest ally in the lodge, through its influence in our courts and upon public sentiment.

From 3 o'clock until 6 P. M., Ronayne occupied the time working and explaining the second degree, and J. P. Stoddard gave us another lecture in the evening.

Saturday, Dec. 14.—No meeting until evening as all wished to have a little rest before the great and final tragedy. Long before the time appointed every seat was filled and the standing room was soon occupied. Gentlemen were charged an admission fee of ten cents, ladies free, consequently a great many Masons' wives were present, and Past Master Ronayne did his best, killing and raising Hiram to perfection, and seemingly to the entire satisfaction of all present; who no longer think it strange that Mr. Patch after taking the third degree last spring, went home and shot himself with his revolver, exclaiming, "I have revealed nothing;" or that Mr. Thayer, a few years ago, cut his own throat after being summoned to appear before the lodge for saying that Morgan's book was true. These two Masonic victims were much loved and respected by all who knew them, both being devoted Christians, and our Masonic newspapers attemped to make us believe that religious excitement was the cause of Mr. Patch's taking his own life. However, he had just come from the lodge.

Officers of the Minnesota Christian Association:

President, E. G. Paine, A. M., Wasioja.

1st Vice-President, W. F. Hillman, Mantorville.

2d Vice-President, Mrs. D. F. Shepardson, Oakwood, D. T.

3d Vice-President, Mrs. O. Young, Hamilton.

4th Vice-President, Wendel Vine, Viola.

Cor. Sec'y, Wm. Fenton, St. Paul.

Rec. Sec'y, Wm. H. Morrill, St. Charles.

Treasurer, E. S. Harvey, St. Charles.

Preamble and constitution are nearly the same as adopted in Ohio. The fifth resolution was a vote of thanks to our friends in St. Charles who entertained members of the convention from abroad.

Wm. H. Morrill, Rec. Sec'y.

Dedicated to the God of Truth —The Ohio State Convention.

New Concord, Ohio, Dec. 19, 1878.

Dear Cynosure:—As we delight in reading your reform pages, we wish others to know what we are doing in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Last Sabbath Bro. W. S. Fulton of Dresden, opened a new house of worship, five miles northwest of Dresden, erected by a few Reformed Presbyterians, aided by others in that vicinity. Bro. Fulton invited Bro. S. A. George and myself to aid him on this special occasion.

Besides the services of the Sabbath, day and evening, that were well attended and warmly received, we held special meetings on Monday at eleven and six, to discuss the reforms of the day, and especially anti-secrecy and national reform, as these reforms occupy a prominent place in the testimony of the Reformed Presbyterian church.

Bro. George delivered an able and instructive address against secretism, proving beyond a doubt that it is anti-Christian and anti-republican. Let me say here that if any of the friends around Mansfield desire lectures against the lodge, they would do well to call on Bro. George. He is an able lecturer and has studied the subject; is well posted and able to instruct the public—and will do it most cheerfully if called upon.

On Tuesday evening Bro. Fulton and I lectured against the lodge five miles southwest of Dresden, to a good, attentive audience. Two gentlemen left as soon as they heard what we were going to discuss. After the addresses, Bro. Fulton called on all who were favorable to the reform to rise—I think not more than one-half arose. Afterward we asked all who were in favor of having public discussions of secretism to arise. The great majority arose, but some manifested by their actions and countenances that they want no talk on this subject whatever. It is very easy to tell in addressing an audience on this subject, by the very countenances, who are cable-towed and hoodwinked. They can't laugh at anything that may be said; it is too serious a matter with them to hear their darling institution turned inside out, that their own families and their Christian neighbors may see what they are doing in the dark.

I hope Bro. Fulton and his people were greatly strengthened and encouraged by these meetings. We presented your claims, dear Cynosure. O, that the Lord of light would touch the hearts of many to send for you to visit weekly their homes, that thus your light may shine all around these places of darkness, is my earnest prayer. We are doing our best to keep the work alive in this part of the State.

We are anxious to have the State convention this winter at Utica, Licking county. I wish the friends would say through your columns when it will suit best to hold this convention. We need to come together, as the enemy is doing all he is permitted to do against the cause of the Lord of life and light. Speak, brethren Finney, French, Carson, Dickson, Moorehead, White, Brown, George and all who read this. When shall we meet at Utica to speak so as all lodge worshipers in our State can and shall hear? The Lord be with you.

H. P. McClurkin.

From the Indiana Lecturer.

Albion, Ind., Dec. 19, 1878.

Dear Cynosure:—I want to let the friends know that I still live and work. I have been as busy since our annual meeting as circumstances would permit, having filled twenty-four appointments since the meeting. This, I think, is doing pretty well when the fact is considered that I am now compelled to waste a good deal of time on foot and often working up my own appointments.

My last trip has been in Kosciusko and Marshall counties, where I found public sentiment largely in our favor. At Weimer church, U. B., I had a good audience and excellent attention and no money. At this place some of the brethren show a disposition to compromise with the devil who is saying to them, "I can help you a great deal if you will only worship me." It is a pitiful sight to see those professing entire sanctification willing to compromise with the devil on equal terms.

At Webster I spoke in the M. E. church to a good audience, acted in part as sexton, received thirty-five cents, and hope my work will not be eventually in vain. I found several young men of talent and the right sort of vim, who are preparing to fight on the right side in the field of reform. The M. E. minister feels right, takes the Cynosure, and I hope I got him to see that as the heroic treatment, as well as slippery elm poultices, has its place in physical ailments, so often we must reach a moral disease by total excision. If any of our lecturers come that way, stop a mile south of Webster and you will go away saying, "God bless John Humble and family."

From Webster I went to Stony Point, where Bro. Hinman spoke about a year ago. I had the kind care of Bros. Fred. Byrer and Town. We had a full house and excellent attention, a small collection and a fresh, green spot in memory that we had done some good. There is a much better feeling than a year ago, and from those who opposed my coming. I heard frequently the expression, "I am glad you came."

At Center church, south of Bourbon, I found the tallest Anti-mason I have found on this trip, I forget how many feet high, but if you leave Daniel Wood's grumbling I shall say it's your own fault. Here I had good audiences and attention. One Mason lost his jewel. He is also an Odd-fellow. One statement made he took especial exception to, and offered his bond with security for five hundred dollars if I would prove it. I accepted the challenge, but that was the last heard of the bond argument. If I should ever be under the necessity of proving the statement in order to satisfy our friends there, I may require Matt. Ervin to swear whether or not Odd-fellowism is ever used as a means of screening crime. The people in that neighborhood have put themselves on the right side, and one who has a clear record on the lodge books and off them, too, freely confirmed my statements; and makes no concealment of the abominations of the hidden things of darkness.

Near Plymouth at the W. M. church, I had the largest audience for two nights. The lodgeites went for the "mogul chief" at Plymouth, but he didn't come, so I was saved the trouble of plucking his feathers. On my way home I stopped at Bremen with Bro. N. Surface. I found him full in the work of the Lord. I found all well at home, and will go soon again and shall even try to fight a good fight, even if it is with little help. Yours,

S. L. Cook.

Harrison, Me., Dec. 16, 1878.

Brother Kellogg:—I realize that some information is due from us here in this State on the seashore where they could bury a perjured wretch at low water mark where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. I wonder at myself, since I loved the West so well, to be away on this eastern coast of America. When I came to this State I went to work distributing tracts, holding meetings and traveling over the country. When I came to a house I would throw out a tract; before I got out of sight some one would pick it up. I peeled birch bark and wrote on it, "Freemasonry is a humbug," inserting their oaths and penalties, etc.; then nailing them upon trees. Sometimes I painted on ledges beside the highway, always carrying tracts with me to distribute to the best advantage. It soon was known, however, through the country who was at work in this direction. I lectured sometimes and had good liberty, at others the wheels rolled heavily. So I have continued on as the way opened. Soon the Free Baptist ministers shut their doors against me. I opposed their receiving a minister from another denomination who was a Freemason, Odd-fellow and Good Templar. They got a rabid Freemason to examine him on Freemasonry. He (the candidate) told them in conference there was nothing in Freemasonry that would hinder a man from preaching the Gospel, and also said that Christ's name was used in their prayers in the lodge. They had in their council three Masons, one Odd-fellow, two "jacks," and one would-be Anti-mason, kept back by fear.

I continued moving forward until Bro. Stoddard sent word he would come. I then went to work and gave out appointments for three evenings; two of them we had a full house, the other time it rained powerful, yet the people were so anxious that forty came out through the flood. One lecture was delivered in Bridgton, which was very influential and instructive.

Now my brethren of the reform in this State, this is a large field to labor in, and almost as hard to subdue as our forefathers had when they came here with ax in hand to literally clear away the sturdy oak and the tall pine. What moral courage it requires when we look around and see the tall oaks of Bashan not only tall but crooked, spreading their branches over the fairest part of our land! If we do not overcome them they will overcome us. What we want is the sword of the Spirit, to go forth in the name of our God. "Every plant my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." If we labor we soon shall have something to carry on the work with. I find since Bro. Stoddard was here we have more sympathy, and there are five times as many who have their eyes open. Bro. Hinman is in New England; let us strive to do something each one in our own place, so that when he comes around we shall be ready to set him in the field now broken up ready for the good seed. We want a State convention as soon as may be.

I want every one in this State who is a friend to our cause and takes the Cynosure, to write, sending their address, the prospect of labor in their place, so we can carry on unitedly this great work of reform.

Menomonee, Wisconsin.

Menomonee is a thriving Wisconsin town of some three thousand inhabitants, sixty-five miles from St. Paul and the headquarters of an immense lumbering enterprise which has branches in Dubuque, St. Louis and other prominent points along the Mississippi. Capt. William Wilson is, I understand, the senior member of the now wealthy firm controlling this business; and the starting of the enterprise and its successful management is very largely attributable to the sagacity, perseverance and unflagging zeal of its original founder. The captain is well advanced in years, and so far as I could judge from a short stay in the place, universally esteemed for his noble qualities of heart and soul. He is called "the poor man's friend." A laborer with whom I conversed, not himself a pious man, remarked, "If there is a Christian in the world it is the captain." He is bold and perhaps sometimes impetuous and as daring as Peter after Pentecost in the utterance of his convictions. His son, T. B. Wilson, now in the prime of life, has inherited his father's principles and business ability; and, seconded by his quiet, excellent wife, is transmitting them to the next generation through his sons, who give great promise as young men of energy and enterprise.

Under the captain's generalship Menomonee has been the battle-ground of reform in northwest Wisconsin for years. The captain early took a decided stand against intemperance and secretism and has maintained an effective testimony against both. The readers of the Cynosure are aware of the recent attempts made upon the character and standing of Rev. W. W. Ames, and how utterly groundless the accusations proved to be in presence of the facts adduced in a legal investigation. During all this terrible ordeal Captain Wilson stood shoulder to shoulder with his pastor and it was through his efforts more than that of any one other person that the right was vindicated and a good man wrested from the grasp of his pursuers.

In company with Bro. Ronayne I visited this town and aided in working the degrees of craft Masonry last week. The attendance was fully equal to the capacity of the hall, and everything passed off successfully. Bros. Ames, Barlow and others who were present will doubtless write of their impressions and of the results following these meetings, but I wish to say a word respecting the Masons of this city. I saw several in the audience, whom I had previously met as Masons, and I was told that quite a number attended each evening. Their deportment was worthy and should receive the commendation of all so far as I could judge. They listened attentively and respectfully and although it was evident that some winced under the pungent treatment of the "Master," yet they witnessed the demolition of their strong fortress without resorting to any out-breaking demonstrations, such as have disgraced their "brethren" and the worshipful fraternity at some other points in Wisconsin. I know that those who attended were instructed and I hope and pray they may be greatly benefited by making a proper use of what they learned.

—Elder D. P. Rathbun is now living with his family at Clarence, Cedar county, Iowa, where he may be addressed for lectures. His hurt from being thrown from a buggy last fall, causing dislocation of the shoulder, yet troubles him, and interferes to a considerable extent with his work. He is giving some assistance to brethren May and Hall in revival work in Clarence. We fear he will be unable to assist the Indiana brethren this winter as they have been long expecting, but hope that healing to his body and grace to his soul may be given him. Bro. Rathbun has proven himself a useful worker in the reform, and it seems hardly possible to spare him from the ranks for many weeks.

—Bro. F. Byrer of Stony Point, Indiana, writes that Dr. S. L. Cook visited that place on the 9th and 10th of December and gave two lectures. The friends were pleased and several members of different lodges present went away thoughtful and much impressed with what they had heard.

The Lodge and the Encyclopedias.

Cortland, Ill., Dec. 21, 1878.

Editor Cynosure:—In the Cynosure of December 19th, is a criticism of Zell's and Johnson's cyclopedias which I think is timely and just. It is time these perversions and excisions of history and facts be made public, and the people made to understand that nearly all the late editions of histories and other works that have the least bearing on secretism are changed and perverted; and many times the lie is put in the mouth of the honest dead. Now I ask one more favor. Please tell the people through the Cynosure about the other cyclopedias; do they all ignore the subject or pervert, especially Chambers, as that is having a great sale just now? If there is one honest cyclopedia let the people know it. Yours for the truth. REV. M. W. JORDAN.

AN INCIDENT OF THE ABOLITION REFORM.

RANSOM, Mich.

Through the kindness of Father Ervin of Angola, I have had the privilege of reading your paper. Seeing in it an article "Forty-three Years Ago," speaking of what Mr. Garrison passed through in defence of reform in his day, made me think of an incident that took place in New York city a little before he was mobbed in Boston. A colored brother, who could not get into a school in this country had to go to England to be educated, and on his return was invited to preach by the pastor of his church. After meeting a mob broke all the glass and took desk, Bible and all the seats in the church and burned them in the street, because the pastor was anti-slavery. Slavery was sustained by leading churches, as secretism is to-day. I pray God to help the watchman to give the trumpet the sound for war against this greatest sin of the day, which is eating out the spirituality of the church. While attending the death-bed of a seceding Mason (my father-in-law), I asked some questions on Masonry. He said his dying testimony was: It is no place for a Christian, for there is no food for the soul there. Yours for the right, WM. MOBBS.

BOYDENITES.

MR. EDITOR:—I live in Vermont; am a constant reader of the Cynosure, and would like some one in Vermont to answer, if he can, the following questions, viz:

Was the man Boyden who got up the grange in Vermont a Freemason?

Did he act by the authority of the Grand Lodge of the United States?

He is said to have organized two hundred lodges of grangers,—are they to serve as so many husks to protect the Masonic ear of corn against some cold Anti-masonic winter?

It is said that this Boyden got fifty dollars a lodge, or ten thousand dollars from the grangers, without reckoning the pay that he might have got from the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, by way of refreshment after his arduous labor. Has any Cynosure reader in Vermont positive information on this point?

If one class of citizens get up secret societies have not another class a right to do so? Is a lodge of Masons any more holy than a lodge of tramps? Is the Masonic lodge anything else but a commune or club of socialists? FAIR PLAY.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Vice Templar, by direction of our Worthy Chief Templar, I here present our friend(s) for obligation (three raps, all rise). [An open Bible lies on the altar in front of the candidate(s)].

Worthy Vice Templar to Candidate(s). You will place your right hand upon your heart and assent to the following:

OBLIGATION, INITIATORY DEGREE.

I, —— ——, in a full belief in the existence and power of Almighty God, and in the presence of these witnesses, do solemnly and unreservedly promise that I will not make, buy, sell, use, furnish, or cause to be furnished to others, as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider, and that in all honorable ways I will discountenance their use in the community.

I also promise that I will not reveal any of the private work of this order to any one not entitled to know the same; and that in all things I will yield a cheerful obedience to all the laws, rules and usages of this order.

I also promise that I will not knowingly wrong a member of this order, or see one wronged; and, that I will do all in my power to promote the good of this order and to advance the cause of temperance.

Worthy Vice Templar to Candidate(s). Do you thus promise?

Candidate. I do.

Worthy Marshal and lodge in concert. We are witnesses of your solemn obligation.

Worthy Chief Templar. The Chaplain will now invoke the Divine blessing.

PRAYER.

Worthy Chaplain. Our Father who art in heaven, we now implore thy blessing upon this friend, who has just assumed a high and responsible obligation, and whose influence is henceforth to be united with ours to drive intemperance from the land. Give him strength to discharge every duty arising from this new relation, and grace to redeem every pledge. May he have strength; and in thy hands become an honored instrument in leading many to virtue and peace. Be pleased to graciously bless us, in this addition to our numbers and influence; and may our union prove a blessing to us and many others, and an honor to Thy great name; to whom be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

Past Worthy Chief Templar. This vow we have all taken. Let the fidelity with which it is kept by you, be your glory and your shield. Remember your vow.

Worthy Chief Templar. None but the brave dare take such a vow; but a true heart and determined purpose will accomplish much. Remember your vow.

Worthy Chaplain. A Templar's vow is registered in heaven; as you value your standing here and your peace in eternity, keep that vow sacred to the end of life. Remember your obligation.

Worthy Vice Templar. Your sacred honor is given to us that you will keep your obligation. He that is faithful in little, will be faithful in much. Your character is at stake in your own vow. Keep it, then, to the end of life.

Worthy Vice Templar. Marshal, you will continue to act as guide to our friend.

Candidate(s) are conducted around the room while singing the following, and are halted at its close in front of the Worthy Chief Templar and facing him.

ODES.

1. AIR—"Beautiful Star."

Hail! all hail! O friends of Right,
Keep the vows you've made to-night!
Let no purple wine be poured
As you gather at the board.
Destroying wine,
Destroying wine,
Wine, wine of the drunkard,
Taste not, O taste not the wine!

2. AIR—"Auld Lang Syne."

Come, friends and brethren, all unite,
In songs of hearty cheer;
Our cause speeds onward in its might,
Away with doubt and fear.
We give the pledge, we join the hand,
Resolved on victory;
We are a bold, determined band,
And strike for liberty.

The cup of death no more we take;
That cup no more we give:
It makes the head, the bosom, ache—
Ah! who can drink and live?
We give the pledge, we join the hand,
Resolved on victory;
We are a bold, determined band,
And strike for liberty.

Worthy Chief Templar (rising). Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. He that loveth pleasure shall be poor: he that loveth wine shall not be rich.

Past Worthy Chief Templar (rising). Be not among wine-bibbers; for the drunkard shall come to poverty, and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.

Worthy Chief Templar (standing). How exceedingly strong is wine; it causeth all men to err that drink it; let no drunkenness go with thee in thy journey, for it diminisheth strength; it maketh wounds!

Worthy Chaplain (rising). Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunken also!

Worthy Vice Templar (standing). He that contemneth small things shall fall by little and little. Show not thy valiantness in wine, for strong drink hath destroyed many.

Worthy Chief Templar (standing). Who hath sorrow? Who hath woe? Who hath babbling? Who hath contention? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes?

Worthy Marshal. They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine.

Worthy Chief Templar. Then look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder!

Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Marshal, you will now conduct this friend to our Worthy Chaplain.

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Chaplain, our friend awaits further instruction.

Worthy Chaplain. My friend,* the gems of truth which we have just given you, are from Divine revelation; treasure them up in your heart, and it will be well with you now and hereafter. Study well the volume from which they are taken, for therein are found words of eternal life. The Scriptures teach temperance in all things, and declare that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. In your hours of study, consult them; in your hours of reverie, meditate upon their teachings; and in the hour of temptation, look to that Word which was in the beginning, is now, and shall be evermore, for strength; and at the feet of the Son of God, learn the lesson of faith, hope and charity; for if you love them that love you, and do good to those who bestow their favors upon you, what do ye more than others? I charge you to love God and keep his commandments; let your hope be ardent, your faith strong, and your charity like the bounty of God, who sendeth the rain and the sunshine alike upon the just and upon the unjust.

Worthy Chaplain Worthy Marshal you will now

*NOTE:—These words in italic are not for emphasis but to call attention to them as words which though here used in the singular, will of course be in the plural when there is more than one candidate. Also when the one candidate is a lady "her" is substituted for "him" and when there is more than one of either sex "their" is used instead of "his" or "hers."

conduct this friend to the Worthy Vice Templar who will give him further instructions.

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Vice Templar, this friend is on his way to learn more of the teachings of our order.

Worthy Vice Templar. I welcome you on your way. Many have gone the same road before you, and we hope many may come after. You have listened to the voice of revelation, but temperance is not alone taught in the Scriptures. In nature we find no strong drinks—nothing that can intoxicate. The Almighty and All-wise prepared but one drink—pure water. This he furnishes bountifully, and sent it coursing through the earth, rushing down the hillside, glancing in the sunbeams, bounding through the valley, distilling in the dew and treasured in the mighty deep. Animated nature needs no other drink. Man alone, whom God made upright, is dissatisfied and has sought out many inventions. Placed at the head of all animate creation, man is the only creature that sinks below his element—below the brute—by yielding to his strange and acquired appetite. Think well of these things, and I charge you to be satisfied with the drink furnished by One wiser than we.

Worthy Vice Templar. Marshal, conduct our friend to the Past Worthy Chief Templar, who will still further advance him on his way.

Worthy Marshal. Past Worthy Chief Templar, I am directed to present this friend to you for further instruction.

Past Worthy Chief Templar. My friend, it gives me pleasure to assist you in advancing. You have heard the warnings of Scripture; you have listened to the teachings of nature; but lessons of temperance are not confined to these. History lifts its warning voice, saying, BEWARE OF STRONG DRINK! It tells of heroes, prophets, priests and kings, fallen by its power. It shows that neither genius, learning, position or strength are proof against it. Our own observation confirms this testimony. We have seen the tears of the widow and orphan; heard the low, sad wail of agony sent up by broken hearts. We have seen bright hopes and prospects blasted; the innocence of youth grown old with the deformity of ignorance and want; beauty clothed with rags and shame, and manhood shorn of its glory, each repeating daily the sad warning of the past—BEWARE OF THESE DRINKS! For protection against their deadly and seductive influences, and to hasten the hour when the means of intoxication shall be driven from our land, are we banded together here. [Steps down and takes the candidate by the hand.] I now welcome you to our lodge—our fraternal home. Abide with us. Here you are safe. Remain with us, for the destroyer can never enter here. Ever have before you the Divine rule, as though it were written in letters of living light, "Whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." Thus will you live to a good and noble purpose; the memories of the past will be pleasant and our future glorious. You will now accompany our Marshal to the desk of the Financial Secretary, and sign the constitution; then to the Worthy Chief Templar, for the closing ceremonies.

CLOSING INITIATORY ODES.

1. AIR—"America."

Long live our temple bright,
Offspring of truth and light,
Sent from above;
Long may our brothers stand,
And sisters—glorious band—
Strong pillars in our land,
Our pride and love!

2. AIR—"Old Hundred."

Now bound by honor's sacred laws,
Be faithful to our holy cause;
Let truth preserve each member's fame,
Nor curses blast our honored name.

Then welcome to our unionhood,
A cheerful welcome to the good;
Long live our order's great renown,
And happiness each member crown!

Stand firm in truth, while life shall last,
Nor let the blight fall on thy way:
Our hopes, may treason never blast,
Our trust, no Judas e'er betray.

3. AIR—"Lift your heads, the day is breaking."

To our noble cause forever,
Be a steady beacon light;
Let no word or deed e'er sever
Those who gather here to-night.
Firm in principles of temperance,
Turn the wine-king from his throne,
Keeping always in remembrance,
God, Great God, is king alone.

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Chief Templar our friend has traveled the circuit of our lodge, and now comes to you for the closing instructions and ceremonies.

Worthy Chief Templar. You have now undertaken a life-long work, and we expect that henceforth your labors and influence will be with us and for us; that you will be present at all of our meetings, and that our association here and elsewhere will be mutually pleasant and profitable. I charge you to consider well the lessons of this lodge. Of necessity they have been brief: ponder them in your mind, and as you advance in our noble order, they will be more fully exemplified and set forth.

We have signs of recognition, test and pass-words, grips and signals which I will now give.

The first sign of recognition is made by the challenging party, thus:

SIGN OF RECOGNITION.

Clasp chin with right hand, thumb under chin and forefinger over closed lips.

If the party you are testing is a Good Templar it will be answered thus:

ANSWER.

With forefinger of right hand describe an arch by drawing finger slowly from center of forehead over right eye just above eyebrow down to right temple and let it rest on temple a moment.

To which the first party responds thus:

RESPONSE.

Put index finger of left hand on left temple.

Besides these signs we have a word, which may be used as a test in addition to the signs, or in the dark, when the signs cannot be employed. It is the word Horeb.

Should you wish to use this you will give the party you are testing the three last letters of the word, without pronouncing, thus: r-e-b.

If the party is a Good Templar, he will give you the first letters of the word, thus: H-o.

The password and explanation are used for entering any lodge in our order, while in session, and is changed quarterly. It is only given by the presiding officer, in a whisper, and never by one member to another. For this term the password is ——, [Worthy Chief Templar whispers it in his ear] and the explanation is ——.

OUR MAIL.

Mrs. A. E. Tyler, Cochocton, N. Y., writes:

"I am pleased with the Cynosure. It has my hearty thanks and hopes for its success. God will prosper those who contend for such a good cause."

Guernsey Camp, Durham, Ct., writes:

"I wished very much to be at the Worcester Convention. Mr. Hinman I expect will be here to lecture before long. Durham is a hard place for any such a business."

J. S. Rice, North Pownal, Me., writes:

"Bro. Stoddard made a flying trip away down here in Maine a few weeks ago, and though there was no door open for him to give us a lecture, he gave us three effective sermons. It was a treat to see his face, and all that saw and heard him were much pleased with him. We shall all want to hear him lecture when he comes again, which he told us he would do."

J. C. Halsted, Windsor, O., writes:

"Our town is cursed with secret societies. We are in great need of Ronayne or some other man to lecture and open up the hidden things, that the people may know of these things which are done in the dark; and we purpose making such arrangements as soon as we can.

Thos. C. Radabaugh, Cambria Mills, Mich., writes:

"If we could get some good man to come and give us a course of lectures here, it would open the way for a good list of subscribers. The lodge here is shattered and toppling, and all that is wanting is a small push to send it crashing to earth; yea, to the bottomless pit, from whence it first sprang. Who will help me to give that push, in the strength of God?"

Ellen Ewing, Xenia, O., writes:

"The war in which you are engaged is surely a holy one. The fight is one in which I wish to have the privilege of taking part."

James Harrow, Riodell, Cal., writes:

"I live out in the mountains, fourteen miles from the nearest postoffice. If Bro. Ronayne could be here and work the three degrees it would stir up many to take a greater interest in so noble a work of reform. May the time be near at hand when truth shall victoriously triumph over error."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 2, 1879.

10,000 SUBSCRIBERS.—Rev. H. T. Cheever, President of the National Convention, writes: "The very best thing that can be done in New England for our cause is to procure the wide circulation of the Cynosure. It is the most available and least expensive power for good that we can command. Would that its circulation might be increased a hundred fold."

The special rate for the Cynosure till March 1st next is $1.50. The regular price is $2 00, which will be resumed after that date. Remember, $1.50 till March 1st for old or new subscribers.

VILE LITERATURE.—Satan crept into Eden as a snake. He enters families in a similar way. Below is a letter from a grieved father of a lovely family who wishes us to call Mr. Anthony Comstock's attention to a house in Brocton, Mass., which advertises "cards," "revolvers," and "notions," and sends lewd pictures and receipts for abortion to the young. Will Mr. Comstock see if this den of moral basilisks can be ferreted out? Here is the extract:

"In the circular there is no notice of anything but cards, and one of these filthy sheets wrapped inside. This circular is not the first nor the second that has come to my son, a lad of seventeen years; because he was agent last winter for the school children in sending for cards, and thus they got his address. This messenger of Satan comes to buffet me in the day of our trouble; having just buried our youngest son of twelve years of age, now comes this unclean devil to corrupt our second boy. "Woe is me that I dwell in Meshek." By the grace of God helping I can keep our boys out of the lodge and from the saloon; but what are Christian parents to do with this hidden, secret foe that steals secretly into hundreds of honest families, and corrupts and pollutes our sons and daughters?"

LODGE CENSORSHIP OF THE PRESS.—A remarkable instance is just reported in the Religious Telescope, which a few weeks ago printed a paragraph from Wayland's Moral Science in strong condemnation of secret orders. Prof. Lewis Bookwalter of Western College writes respecting it:

"In a recent number of the Telescope you gave a paragraph from Wayland's Moral Science, respecting the anti-social nature and tendency of all secret societies. The argument there advanced I, too, consider very strong; but there is a fact connected with it which I discovered some years ago. While the edition of 'Moral Science' in my father's library contains the remarks referred to, a later edition—one in my own library—has no such paragraph. It would be some satisfaction to me to know just how the alteration was brought about; whether Mr. Wayland himself made the change, and his reason for so doing; whether he afterward considered his position erroneous, or simply decided to remove an objectionable (to the Masons) though truthful feature, or whether the text was garbled by the publishers."

RENEWALS.

The publishers, who seldom say anything to us on the subject, tell us that many subscriptions expire this last month of the year; and sometimes good men need reminding that the "great doors of life turn on very little hinges." A hundred subscribers omitting a prompt renewal is a trifle, perhaps, to each one, but a more serious affair at this office. If all who have taken and loved the Cynosure for its teachings were taking it now, its list would show many more than the ten thousand wished for, to-day. Do not let us fail to walk together another year.

The tide of emigration is turning again and pouring by the hundred thousand on our coasts. These are but ripples. In them you may see the rush and hear the roar of coming millions. They are coming from lands where there are millions of acres lying waste; but they are ruled by priests and taxed by kings. They are fleeing from both, and yet bring both in their heads and hearts. The teachings of the Cynosure will cure them of both. It will send them to Christ instead of a human priest for salvation and to the ballot for government instead of a ring.

These old-world gods of idolatry in church and state are burrowing in the lodges of our beloved land, and priest and politician are courting their alliance. They are selling us and our children for eternity that they may tax and govern us in time. Please, good friends, let us walk together into this breach. The horizon of our reform is widening. New England is opening. God is calling in new voices and new hearts. We have hopes of a Ronayne for our German speaking population, who is as familiar with the summit of lodgery as Mr. Ronayne is with its base; and who assures us, as Bernard did, that it grows more abhorrent to God and man all the way up. He has leaped from its summit to assail it at its base. O, friends, will it not be a jubilee for angels to see our great country once thoroughly aroused to its danger and its remedy. Please, good friends, renew at once.

A NEW BOOK.

The legions of evil spirits who obey the "god of this world" are represented by Christ as "walking through dry places" when cast out of men. Like self-abandoned persons in the flesh they mingle their hateful presence wherever they can hide their agency and accomplish their designs; swarming, shifting, and perpetually trying new modes of mischief, like the rogues, thieves, bandits and burglars out of prison in our cities. As the Masonic lodges and Odd-fellows become unpopular, the temperance cause seems specially infested by these invisible agents of mischief. New forms of secret temperance orders are invented which are mere abstracts and compilations from the lodge.

The Cynosure is now giving the ritual of Good Templarism, which will shortly be issued in a cheap pamphlet volume. It is thought best by judicious persons thus to strip off the sheep's clothing from these young wolves, and pour in light on their weak and worthless rituals, as candle light obstructs the work of thieves. A new temperance order called "The Independent Champions of the Red Cross," has recently appeared, the secret ritual of which has been obtained by the publishers of the Cynosure. It is taken in large part from Freemasonry in its very words, with names of officers changed, admitting females and swearing its members to temperance. It is also a financial swindle. Its local lodges, called "encampments," are required to pay from their treasury 60 cents a head for each of their members to the Grand Encampment. The dues to each local encampment are three dollars for males and one dollar and fifty cents for females. For further degrees, one and two dollars for the different sexes. And when a member dies the whole body of members of his or her local encampment are taxed according to standing in a life fund from 75 cents to $1.25. Fee for admission by card $1 for males, 50 cents for females; fee for traveling cards fifty cents; clearance cards 50 cents. All we notice concerning benefits is this brief and vague entry:

"This encampment may provide in its by-laws for the conferring benefits on sick or disabled members."

This strange concern evidently belongs to the class of swindles along with mock-auctions, lotteries, etc., etc., with the added baits of secrecy, ceremonies and prayers. As these pests are all children of the lodge, and commonly invented and run by Freemasons who fail to get access to the funds of their own lodge, they are sheltered as training schools for the older and darker lodges, while the mock auction is suppressed by law. But the publication of their ritual, turning them inside out, exposes their tricks, shows their kindred, and enables parents to keep their children out of them.

Meanwhile, these swarms of night-born, sooth-saying contrivances, can only be successfully antagonized by the religion of Christ, and unceasing watchfulness and prayer. When the Hebrew commonwealth became "replenished with sooth-sayers from the East" they were soon swept into captivity under an iron despotism where the religion was all made up of such stuff. Let us be thankful that we have the light of their history and cleave to the Saviour whom they rejected.

—Elder Browne, State Agent for Illinois, is finding plenty of work and giving good satisfaction in Whitesides county. He wrote last Friday: "The Lord is opening the way. Have about three weeks' work ahead now. Had a rousing meeting last night in spite of threats of mobbing, etc." Let calls for work from all parts of the State come in.

—During this week and next our friends throughout Illinois will receive invitations by mail to subscribe to the State lecture fund, and the committee having the matter in charge wish to complete the work immediately, and report the full amount voted by the State Convention pledged. So, friends, have this matter upon your hearts; ask the Lord what he would have you do for his cause in this direction, and be ready to reply without delay how many shares you will take and when they will be paid.

—Rev. W. W. Ames sends us an interesting letter from Menomonee, Wisconsin, which will appear in our next. Read Secretary Stoddard's letter as introductory.

—Bro. C. T. Webb, of this city, whose low condition was noted a few weeks ago passed to his rest last Friday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard and other friends attended the funeral services on Tuesday.

—Gen. J. W. Phelps corrects our reference to his military history. Previous to the war he "held an independent command of several companies on the Rio Grande, and again during the war of several regiments." The circumstances connected with his removal were the most important charge against government officials. Gen. Phelps' integrity was not tainted with the odor of Butler's camp.

—The Watch-Tower published at Kinston, N. C., by J. T. Walsh, issues its December number altered from a magazine to a four-page, sheet form. The change is an improvement and also a saving in expense. Bro. Walsh has published many able articles against the lodge, and we are confident that he is a watchman who will never betray his trust.

—Last Thanksgiving day T. C. Strong, pastor of the Central Presbyterian church, Smithfield street, Pittsburgh, Pa., extended a special invitation to the Pittsburgh Commandery of Knight Templars to attend his services. They accordingly marched from their rooms in a body to the church, but left off their uniform.

—Some friend has sent us a copy of the proceedings of the "National Grand Lodge of the Associated Brotherhood of Iron and Steel Heaters of the United States," held in Allegheny City, Pa., May 6th to 9th, 1873. It appears from the report of Thomas P. Jones, of Chicago, "Worthy Grand Sire," that at that time it was but little over eight months since the first convention of this secret labor lodge met in Chicago, to organize the whole body of heaters into a Grand Lodge, a secret despotism reaching into every rolling mill, foundry and blacksmith shop—for its influence would be felt through all. Mr. Jones was the chief agent in completing this work, often working on it, he says, eight or ten hours on Sunday. The order at the time of this meeting numbered 392, in seventeen lodges.

—The State Register of Des Moines, Iowa, contains the following notice in its issue of Nov. 22d:

MASONIC.—Tuesday evening Capitol Lodge. No. 110 A. F. and A. M., expelled Samuel M. Good, a demitted Mason, for the gross un-Masonic conduct of visiting and officiating as Senior Deacon in what might be called a clandestine, humbug, Anti-masonic or exposition lodge, held by Edmond Ronayne, near Norwalk, Iowa, Oct. 4, 1878.

If thereby Freemasonry supposes itself done with Bro. Good it is a serious mistake. He is only set free entirely from its ensnaring power, and, if we mistake not, will be an agent under God of bringing many deluded blinded, Masons to the true light.

THE CHICAGO WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

Thirty or forty earnest Christian women with hearts full of love for God and home and native land and lives full of work for the purity and peace of humanity in consultation on the interests of temperance form a thrilling, hope inspiring picture. Their last monthly meeting, held Friday morning, December 27th, was full of reports of a most interesting and hopeful nature. Three Young Woman's Temperance Unions have been recently formed on the north, south and west sides of the city.

The average attendance at the Stranger's Home under the ladies care, has been eighty, twenty-one of whom have signed the pledge.

The visiting committee reported eighty-four visits made in the interests of temperance during the last month. The hospital committee report eight visits of great interest.

The annual appeal against offering wine at New Years is out, prepared by the gifted hand of Miss F. E. Willard. The juvenile temperance work is wisely pushed under the superintendence of Miss L. E. F. Kimball.

The large Executive Committee of the Woman's Union meets weekly and their daily prayer meetings at three o'clock every afternoon are a source of strength to the workers and of help for the fallen and suffering.

May the fearful deluge of strong drink be rolled back in answer to the persevering prayers and efforts of self-denying Christians.

WILL HE ANSWER?

Th following open letter appeared in the Leavenworth, Kansas, Daily Times of Dec. 11th. It is written by the pastor of the United Presbyterian church in that city, and for pungency and conciseness is a model. An honest attempt to answer these question would result much as did the examination of the Christian evidences by Lord Lyttelton, which changed him from unbelief and infidelity to faith:

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Dec. 10, '78.
Rev. W. N. Page, D.D., Past Dictator Knights of Honor:

DEAR BROTHER:—I see by this morning's Leavenworth Times, that you on last evening participated, with other gentlemen, in organizing a lodge of Knights of Honor. I am not familiar with the object and ceremonies of this order, but I presume from its name and officers that it is one of the many orders of the Masonic society, and knowing from the fact that you officiated as chaplain at the opening meeting in connection with the dedication of the Masonic Hall in this city, that you have advanced to high(?) honors in that order, I would like to have you answer through the Times, the following questions:

1. Can a Christian minister consistently belong to a secret oath-bound order whose oaths are administered by persons unauthorized by either church or state, and are therefore—to say nothing of their immoral character—void and blasphemous? Ex. 20: 7, "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

2. Can a Christian minister consistently have official connection with a secret order, or take part in its ceremonies, where a man who makes no pretensions to Christianity (I offer no affront to Mr. Chapin) is put forward to offer the prayers of the order, and where Christ, the only mediator between God and man, is excluded? Eph. 5:11. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

3. Can he come from the lodge-room of an organization stained with the blood of William Morgan and others, where the most sacred names of Jehovah and the most solemn passages of his word are travestied and coupled with the most impure and profane heathen rites, into the house of God, and there, with clean hands, conduct the public and Christian worship of the holy God? Is. lxii, 11: "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

These questions are not asked impertinently, but conscientiously, by one who desires the glory of God, not only inside, but outside, of denominational lines.

Yours, &c., F. M. SPENCER.

In one of his current lectures on Socialism, Joseph Cook says: "If I were a Socialist, I should be personally ashamed to ask for more help than America, when her laws are executed, now gives through the government to the average citizen. Here I am, unable, let us suppose, to pay more than a poll tax, and my wife becomes insane. The government watches over her, puts her into an institution and takes care of her. Here is a child of mine that I cannot educate. The government opens a school for him; pays his tuition bills; provides for him school books if necessary; and warms the house for him. Here is a child of mine that wishes to follow a certain trade requiring a technical education. The government gives assistance to schools peculiarly adapted to his wants. I have a child that is deaf and dumb. Massachusetts adopts him into her family, gives him a good room yonder in South Boston. attends to him as I cannot. I have a child that is blind. Massachusetts puts her hand on his shoulder, puts her hand in blessing on his head, guides him to her philanthropic institution for those who are sightless, educates him, places her best talent at his side, and improves his stunted mental perceptions until in the case of a Laura Bridgman they touch the Unseen Holy itself and commune with the world beyond sight. You have now done for you, discontented Socialists and complaining working men, as much as you can bear to have done and retain the proper spirit of self-help. All this is what capital regularly and willingly does for labor."

MISCELLANEOUS.

—There seems to be a great difference in the estimates as to the number of Indians in this country. General Sherman, in his testimony before the commission considering the question of the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, put the total number at 222,000, while Colonel Meacham sets the figures at 265,000. In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1876 the number is set down at 291,822. In the census report of 1870 the number is estimated at 313,712, while the census of 1850 fixes the number at 404,764. Schoolcraft, in 1850, set the number at 388,229, and in 1857 at 379 264. Various other estimates have been made, ranging from 471,036 by Morse, in his report on Indian Affairs in 1820, to 129,366, estimated by the Secretary of War in 1825. An average of all the estimates at hand, since 1830, makes the number 303,824, which is probably quite nearly correct. It is probable that efforts will be made in the next census to ascertain as nearly as possible the exact number.

—Mr. Mundella, member of parliament, in a speech at a banquet of the Sheffield Traders' Council lately, said that America was just recovering, after five years of unprecedented depression in trade, and her recovery was due to her boundless resources, for thousands of her artisans had been driven by trade depression to the cultivation of the soil. Now she was not only supplying her own people with goods, but exporting her manufactures to such an extent that she had become a powerful rival to England. It did not follow, however, that America's growth would be England's decadence, for he believed that England would grow with America's growth and strengthen with her strength. Still it was important that English workmen should be fully alive to the strides America was making, and should know that America had been able to export so extensively because of her labor-saving machinery, and that, owing to the improved state of of her patent laws, she could more easily utilize her inventions.

—Among the greatest engineering enterprises of the day is the new bridge of the North British Railway across the Firth of Forth. It is described as starting from abutments on the high ground overlooking the lowlands along the Firth. It will be carried in the form of a light lattice girder structure upon cylindrical brick columns to the edge of the deep water. In the two great spans, each 1,600 feet long, which are to form the central portion of the structure, there has to be faced one of the most difficult engineering feats imaginable. Regarding this portion of the work, the Scotsman says that at the point on each side of the estuary where the bottom begins to shelve rapidly downward there is to be placed an immense composite pier, consisting of four groups of iron columns firmly bedded on basements of masonry and securely braced together throughout their entire height. Over the tops of these piers will be carried immense chains, whose shoreward ends will be anchored to ponderous masses of masonry; and these, being continued over two similar piers placed on the island of Inchgarvie in mid-channel, will afford, on the suspension principle, such assistance as is estimated to be required in supporting the spans, which, of course, will also rest at either end upon the frame work of the piers. The height of the great 1 600 feet spans has been fixed at 150 feet, to reach which level the shoreward section will require, as in the case of the Tay bridge, to have a certain gradient, and when it is added that the piers will reach the height of 500 to 600 feet, some idea may be formed of the imposing appearance which the completed structure will present. Work has actually begun on the foundations of this magnificent structure.

My Guest of New New Year's Eve.

A guest unannounced and unbidden,
S ole into my chamber last night,
And the beautiful halo around her
Fill'd th' room with a soft mellow light.

She folded her wings and sat near me,
Then spoke of the swiftness of time,
And asked of the year that was closing,
Had mine been a chapter sublime?

She came to look over my record,
And ask for my noblest, best deed,
To inscribe upon tablets enduring,
Where saints of all ages might read

"Naught worthy to tell," I moaned sadly,
And tears wet my pillow the while.
She left me in darkness and sorrow,
And yet there was balm in her smile.

My eyelids were heavy with slumber,
My heart was o'erburdened with grief,
Away in the dream-land I wandered,
And eagerly sought for relief.

I ventured far up on the mountain
To a gate that was glowing in light,
And th' angel who'd sat by my bedside
Came out with a look of delight.

I asked her, "Can one with a record
Of commonplace duties to give,
Go in to the King in his palace,
Go in with the sainted to live?"

"God sees not as thou," she said sweetly,
"An act to the world all unknown,
And which thou hast long since forgotten,
Is a star shining bright near his throne."

"Come in, for to those poor in spirit
A welcome the Father assures,
And Jesus himself signed the title
Which th' Kingdom of Heaven secures."

A New Year's Incident.

One New Year's day I was going out to visit some of my poor neighbors, and thought I would take a sovereign to a certain widow who had seen days of competence and comfort. I went to look in my drawer, and was so sorry to find that I had but one sovereign left in my bank for the poor, and my allowance would not be due for two or three weeks. I had nearly closed the drawer upon the solitary sovereign, when this passage of the Scripture flashed vividly into my mind, "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this" (2 Chron. xxv: 9), that I again opened the drawer, took the money, and entered the carriage which was waiting for me. When I arrived at Mrs. A.'s, and with many good wishes for the New Year, offered her the sovereign, I shall never forget her face of surprised joy. The tears ran down her cheeks while she took my hands and said: "May the God of the widow and fatherless bless you; we had not one penny in the house, nor a morsel of bread; it is he who has heard my prayers, and sent you again and again to supply my need." You who pray for and visit the poor, and enjoy the blessedness of relieving their temporal wants and of speaking to them of Jesus, you will understand the gladness of heart with which I returned home.

In the country we had only one post daily; so when evening came on, and it was nearly 10 o'clock, I was not a little surprised at receiving a letter. When I opened it, how my heart beat for joy when I read these words from a comparative stranger: "You will have many poor just now to claim your pity and your help, may I beg you to dispense the enclosed five pounds as you see fit? and I have ordered a box of soap to be sent to you for the same purpose." These boxes of soap are worth four pounds. Thus did our gracious God send nine times as much as I gave for his sake, before that day had closed. (Read Prov. xi: 24; xix: 17; Luke vi: 38.)

Will you who read ask the same Spirit to guide you in every action? (Luke xi: 13.) Jesus will accept and requite, if not in the same manner, yet in the way most advantageous for you, and most redounding to his glory.—Ex.

A Thrilling Scene.

While the temperance crusade was sweeping through the State of Ohio, the Woman's Temperance League in the town of Stryker held weekly meetings for prayer and addresses on the subject of temperance. The first of these meetings was rendered memorable by a scene which those present will not soon forget. The room was crowded with people of high and low degree, temperate and intemperate, several of the more prominent saloon-keepers being present. After a short address by Mrs. Lindsey, the president of the Woman's Temperance League, as Col. E. D. Bradley was making some interesting remarks, the drunken husband of Mrs. Lindsey staggered toward the platform on which a number of ladies and gentlemen were sitting, pushing by his wife, who sprang forward, vainly trying to intercept him in his course. As he passed her she snatched a bottle from his pocket and placed it on the table beside her. Meanwhile the half-stupid husband turned and sat down, while a hush of sympathetic sadness fell upon the congregation, at a sight so pitiful and disgraceful. In a moment Mrs. Lindsey arose to her feet, and holding up the bottle before the assembly, exclaimed in tones that thrilled every heart:

"Here is the cause of my sorrow! Here are the tears—yea, the very life-blood of a drunkard's wife. Look at it, rum-seller! Here is the poison dealt out by you to the once loved husband of my youth; but now behold the remains—of what was once a noble and honored man. Love, truth, even manhood itself, has fled. Now behold him! And here is the cause."

She stopped for a moment, her wretched husband cowering before her, and nothing being heard but the sobs of the audience; then turning her pale, anguish-stricken face towards heaven, she exclaimed, with tearful emphasis:

"How long, O Lord, shall intemperance reign, blighting our dearest earthly hopes and draining our very life's blood?" Then, turning to the audience, she continued: "Can you wonder that I raise my voice against this terrible evil? Sisters will you help me?" Cries of "Yes! Yes!" came from almost every lady in the house. She sat down pale and exhausted. The meeting concluded, but impressions were made that will not soon fade from the minds of those present, who went away more determined than ever to fight against strong drink, that foe of human peace.—Ex.

Are Our Girls in Danger?

A lady uncorked a bottle of ale and gave her daughter a glass. "I don't let Aleck have any," she said, when remonstrated with, "for our boys are in the way of temptation; but the girls, of course, run no risks; they will never be drunkards."

"Are you sure of this?" asked her friend. "You cannot know that the street-car just passing your house frequently carries a young daughter of reputable, excellent people, who live a little above you, when she is so far intoxicated that the driver has to stop and put her off at her home."

We should know that the danger does not all lie in hovels where imbruted parents furnish little but drink for their children. We should realize that the women of America—respectable women too—are not far behind some of their gin-sick English sisters in their wretched enslavement to strong drink; that all the suffering and sin are not indirectly brought on through drunken male friends.

This was brought on my mind with new force on my last visit East, after an absence of six years.

"What has become of Beauty W.?" I asked, and a vision of the sweet, happy, youthful bride came before me as I saw her last. A look of pain clouded the serene face of my old friend. "Nothing could have happened to her," I added; "rich, and beautiful, and beloved, what could she lack?"

"Her story is too sad to repeat," was the reply. "O! if we could remember her as the Beauty W. that you knew. You recollect that her father always kept beer in the cellar, and sometimes used wine at dinner? Nothing was refused the only petted child, and last year—last year, she filled a drunkard's grave. Her honor, her delicacy, her pride, were all gone. Everything was overpowered by that torturing thirst for rum. For months she did not scruple to go into the lowest bar-room of the city and order and drink her whisky. And she has dragged other girls with her who bid fair to follow her into the depths into which she sank. Poor Beauty W!"

A silence like that of the dead fell between us, and my heart was filled with longing to guide the steps of the young away from the path that led our favorite to ruin.—Mrs. M. J. Telford.

Huber, the great naturalist, tells us that if a single wasp discovers a deposit of honey or other food, he will return to his nest and impart the good news to his companions, who will sally forth in great numbers to partake of the fare which has been prepared for them. Shall we who have found honey in the rock Christ Jesus be less considerate of our fellow-men than wasps are of their fellow-insects? Ought we not rather, like the Samaritan woman, to hasten to tell the good news? Common humanity should prevent one of us from concealing the great discovery which grace has enabled us to make.—Spurgeon.

Happy New Year!

I wish you a happy New Year,
Dear bright-eyed girls and boys;
May all its work and playtime
Be filled with wholesome joys.
May sweet rest follow duty,
And pleasure smile on work,
And may you give no quarter
To that ugly fellow—Shirk.

I wish you a happy New Year,
With health and true success,
And the best of all good fortune—
The power to aid and bless;
For he who helps another,
To carry life's hard load,
Will have the smile of heaven
For sunshine on his road.

I wish you a happy New Year,
With Faith and Love to guide,
And the sober angel, Patience,
To linger by your side.
Thus shall the days be peaceful,
The months be full of cheer;
Thus shall your life grow nobler
With the waning of the year.

Luther and Count Erbach.

On the north bank of the Neckar, extending along the banks of the river as far as Darmstadt, there is a forest known as Odenwald. On the steep western slope of this forest is the well-known and beautiful hill-road winding along from Heidelberg to Darmstadt. In this forest is the ancient castle Erbach. It was rebuilt about a century ago.

In Luther's time Count Eberhard of Erbach lived here. He was a straight-forward, and, in his way, a pious man. But he could handle the sword much better than the pen, and his impetuous disposition frequently induced him to draw the sword. Luther he hated most fervently. It is true, he had never seen or heard the Reformer, but his confessor, Johann Speckel, had constantly been telling him that Luther was an arch-knave, who was alienating the people from the holy faith, and stirring them up to rebellion.

Occasionally Speckel would intimate that a man of courage could easily put a stop to the abomination with a single blow. At last he openly told him: "Sir Count, if you and your men could embrace a favorable opportunity of seizing that arch heretic Luther and deliver him to the pope, you would be doing a particularly good work, and would aid in the salvation of many souls."

For many a day had these words been burning the count in his very soul, and when in the year 1518 Luther made his journey on foot from Wittenberg to Heidelberg, he arrived on the evening of the 8th of April at the town of Miltenberg, but a short distance from Castle

Erbach. That evening Count Eberhard was sitting with his wife at the bedside of their youngest daughter, Hildegard, who was sick nigh unto death. A messenger secretly brings him the intelligence that Luther would that night lodge at Miltenberg.

Instantly the count sprang from his chair and gave command to his soldiers to saddle and mount their horses immediately. His wife besought him with tears not to leave her alone in her great sorrow and affliction, but in vain. The count sprang upon his horse and dashed so furiously away that his horsemen were scarcely able to follow him. No one knew the object of the expedition nor whither he was going. Only Speckel knew it, and at the gate of the castle yard he had called after him: "He that loveth father and mother more than me is not worthy of me."

At eight o'clock the count arrived with his men at the gates of Miltenberg, which had been splendidly illuminated in honor of the Wittenberg doctor. The town itself was full of people, who had crowded in from the neighborhood to hear Luther's evening sermon, which he had held soon after his arrival.

The count was enraged when he heard the reason for such a crowd, and galloped rapidly down the streets. At the hotel of the Sword he was received with many a scrape and bow by the landlord, Nickel Uhrig, who saluted him with the words: "Well! well! Sir Count, has Luther brought you here too? Pity you weren't here a little sooner. The people cannot get through with praising the doctor." Still more exasperated by these words, the count demanded his room. His hard ride and the mental excitement at the bed-side of his sick daughter and on the way hither, had completely exhausted him. He therefore retired soon after supper to rest and sank into a deep sleep. When he awoke it was still dark, but as he found it impossible to sleep, he soon rose from his couch and advanced to the window. The chapel bell of the cloister was calling the worshipers to morning prayer. In the count's heart the anger of the preceding evening was no longer raging. His thoughts were at home at the bedside of his dying daughter, and his hands involuntarily folded in prayer.

Just then a candle was lit in the corner room of the house on the opposite side of the street. The count distinctly heard a deep, manly voice utter the words: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen." Then he heard how the same voice continued to pray with the strength and fervor that the count had never met with before, for the whole Christian church on earth, for the victory of the holy gospel over all its enemies, and so on in a similar strain. Strange feelings came over his heart while he was listening to this prayer.

At break of day he called for the landlord and inquired who lived in the house across the way. The landlord, who had come in carrying the breakfast on a silver tray, replied: "Whether I can tell you who lives there? Yes, indeed, I can do that. That is Luther, the arch heretic ——." "Luther!" said the count, in amazement. "Yes, sir, Dr. Martin Luther. Has your grace a message for him?" Receiving no reply the landlord went away, shaking his head very dubiously as he went.

For a while the count stood there in deep thought, as though he were rooted to the spot. Then, without touching his breakfast, he went down stairs, crossed the street, and entered the house, and the next moment he stood before Dr. Luther.

At his entrance Luther had risen from his chair, and now looked inquiringly at the tall, powerful man who stood before him in complete armor, gazing upon him as though he wished to read his inmost soul. After the doctor had repeatedly asked the stranger what was the object of his visit, the count exclaimed: "Sir, you are better than I! God forgive me for intending to harm you." And then he frankly confessed why he had come to Miltenberg and how he had been convinced by what he had heard that it was impossible for Luther to be a rebel or an enemy of the truth and of the holy church.

"God be praised," replied Luther, "who has subdued you by his word and Spirit, and not by any words of mine. I have been chosen of the Lord only to bring his word again to honor in Christendom. Go your way therefore in peace, Sir Count! He that begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ. If it is God's will, you shall yet behold miracles, how the Lord's word breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder, as he has done with you to-day."

After the count had taken his breakfast, he rode toward home again with his horsemen, who were not a little astonished, and who could not imagine what had been the object of their furious ride. As for Count Eberhard himself, the farther he went the more astonished he was to think how strangely the leaf had been turned. Luther he had intended to deliver bound into the hands of his enemies, the papists, and now his own heart had been bound by Luther's prayer, and the longer he carried these bonds the more he rejoiced in them. As he alighted from his steed in the castle-yard, his loving wife came to him with joyful news. Hildegard had had a very quiet night, had slept unusually well, and was now sitting up in her bed, playing, and joyfully waiting for her father.

As Luther had wished and prayed for the count, so it came to pass. The good work which the Lord had begun in his heart went on, and he that before had been a Saul, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the Lord, became a Paul, a disciple. He carefully saw to it that in all his domains God's word was taught in its truth and purity; and in April, 1521, when Luther confessed his faith before Charles the Fifth and the assembled representatives of the empire, among the princes and lords who stood on his side was also Count Eberhard of Erbach.—From the German.

If I were a Boy again.

A NEW YEAR'S TALK BY JAMES T. FIELDS.

Let me tell you, my young friends, some of the things I would do if I were a boy again; some of the too often neglected acts I would strive to accomplish if it were in my power to begin all over anew.

When we are no longer young, we look back and see where we might have done better and learned more, and the things we have neglected rise up and mortify us every day of our lives. May I enumerate some of the important matters, large and small, that if I were a boy again, I would be more particular about.

I think I would learn to use my left hand just as freely as my right one, so that if anything happened to lame either of them, the other would be all ready to write and "handle things," just as if nothing had occurred. There is no reason in the world why both hands should not be educated alike A little practice would soon render one set of fingers just as expert as the other, and I have known people who never thought, when a thing was to be done, which particular hand ought to do it, but the hand nearest the object took hold of it and did the office desired.

AT HOME IN THE DARK.

I would accustom myself to go about in the dark and not be obliged to have a lamp or candle on every occasion. Too many of us are slaves to the daylight, and decline to move forward an inch, without everything is visible. One of the most cheerful persons I ever knew was a blind man, who had lost his sight by an accident at sea during his early manhood. He went every where, and could find things more easily than I could. When his wife wanted a spool of cotton, or a pair of scissors from up stairs, the gallant old gentleman went without saying a word and brought it. He never asked any one to reach him this or that object, but seemed to have the instinct of knowing just where it was and how to get at it.

Surprised at his power of finding things, I asked him one day for an explanation, and he told me that when he was a boy on board a vessel, it occurred to him that he might some time or other be deprived of sight, and he resolved to begin early in life to rely more on sense of feeling than he had ever done before. And so he used to wander, by way of practice, all over the ship in black midnight, going down below, and climbing around anywhere and everywhere, that he might in case of blindness not become wholly helpless and of no account in the world. In this way he had educated himself to do without eyes when it became his lot to live a sightless man.

LEARN TO BE A MECHANIC.

I would learn the art of using tools of various sorts. I think I would insist on learning some trade, even if I knew there would be no occasion to follow it when I grew up.

What a pleasure it is in after life to be able to make something, as the saying is; to construct a neat box to hold one's pen and paper; or a pretty cabinet for a sister's library; or to frame a favorite engraving for a New Year's present to a dear, kind mother. What a loss not to know how to mend a chair that refuses to stand up strongly only because it needs a few tacks and a bit of leather here and there. Some of us cannot even drive a nail straight, and should we attempt to saw off an obtrusive piece of wood, ten to one we should lose a finger in the operation.

It is a pleasant relaxation from books and study to work an hour every day in a tool-shop; and my friend, the learned and lovable Prof. Oliver Wendell Holmes, finds such comfort in "mending things," when his active brain needs repose, that he sometimes breaks a piece of furniture on purpose that he may have the relief of putting it together again much better than it was before. He is as good a mechanic as he is a poet; but there is nothing mechanical about his poetry, as you all know who have read his delightful pieces. An English author of great repute said to me long ago, "Prof. Holmes is writing the best English of our time." And I could not help adding, "Yes, and inventing the best stereoscopes, too!"

PERSONAL HABITS.

I would keep "better hours," if I were a boy again; that is, I would go to bed earlier than most boys do. Nothing gives us more mental and bodily vigor than sound rest when properly applied. Sleep is our great replenisher, and if we neglect to take it naturally in childhood, all the worse for us when we grow up. If we go to bed early, we ripen; if we sit up late, we decay, and sooner or later we contract a disease called insomnia, allowing it to be permanently fixed upon us; and then we begin to decay, even in youth. Late hours are shadows from the grave.

If I were a boy again, I would have a blank book in which I could record, before going to bed, every day's events just as they happened to me personally. If I began by writing only two lines a day in my diary, I would start my little book, and faithfully put down what happened to interest me.

On its pages I would note down the habits of birds and animals as I saw them, and if the horse fell ill, down should go his malady in my book, and what cured him should go there too; if the cat or dog showed any peculiar traits they should be chronicled in my diary, and nothing worth recording should escape me.

There are hundreds of things I would correct in my life if I were a boy again, and among them is this especial one; I would be more careful of my teeth. Seeing since I have grown up how much suffering is induced by the bad habit of constantly eating candies and other sweet nuisances, I would resolutely shut my mouth to all allurements of that sort. Very hot and very cold substances I would studiously avoid.

Toothache in our country is one of the national crimes. Half the people we meet have swelled faces. The dentist thrives here as he does in no other land on this planet, and it is because we begin to spoil our teeth at the age of five or six years. A child, eight years old, asked me not long ago if I could recommend him to a dentist "who didn't hurt!" I pitied him, but I was unacquainted with such an artist. They all hurt, and they cannot help it, poor, hard-working gentlemen, charging as they do.

DON'T USE TOBACCO.

I would have no dealings with tobacco, in any form, if were a boy again. My friend Pipes tells me he is such a martyr to cigar-boxes that his life is a burden. The habit of smoking has become such a tyrant over him that he carries a tobacco bowsprit at his damp, discolored lips every hour of the day, and he begs me to warn all the boys of my acquaintance, and say to them emphatically, "Don't learn to smoke!' He tells me sadly, that his head is sometimes in such a whirl and his brain so foul from long habits of smoking he cannot break off, that he is compelled to forego much that is pleasant in existence, and live a tobacco-tortured life from year to year. Poor Pipes! he is a sad warning to young fellows who are just beginning to use the dirty, unmannerly weed.

Many more things occur to me that I would strive to accomplish if I were a boy again, but this chapter is long enough already.—Youth's Companion.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard delivered his popular lecture on Martin Luther at Peoria, Ill., last Friday evening. He remained over the Sabbath on the invitation of Rev. A. A. Stevens of the Congregational church, and preached in his pulpit.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard preached in the College chapel, Wheaton, last Sabbath and addressed briefly a Sabbath-school concert in the evening.

—The College church, Wheaton, will decide upon placing its name on the roll of the "Associated Churches of Christ" at its monthly business meeting next Saturday. The question presented by the revered Adam Crooks, when he said that the time would come when Masonic and Anti-masonic Christians could not walk together in church fellowship, will also be considered.

WESLEYAN.

—Elder D. P. Rathbun is engaged at present, so far as he is able to do anything, in a series of revival meetings at Clarence, Iowa, where he now resides.

—A subscription has been nearly completed by several enterprising brethren to buy Editor Stratton of the Wesleyan a type-writer.

—Rev. N. Wardner has been holding special meetings with the Syracuse church. The work is in a very encouraging state, believers are quickened and a number of conversions experienced.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Henry Avery has begun work with the College Springs church, Page county, Iowa.

—Prof. R. T. Cross of Colorado Springs, Col., has begun a new paper to represent the cause of Home Missions and Christian education in Colorado. It is called the New West.

—At the meeting of the Lemonweir Convention at Wautoma, Wis., besides several papers on topics related to church work, dinner and supper sociables were held in the Masonic Hall.

—Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs finished, November 24th, the thirty-second year of his pastorate of the church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn. He has been its only pastor.

BAPTIST.

—Elder Callender writes that in the case of the Baptist church at Preston Center, Pennsylvania, instead of the two Odd-fellows being elected to the office of deacon, as reported last week, they were nominated for that office with three other men, three of the five being elected. Whether the lodge men were among the number chosen he is not certainly informed.

—It has been ascertained that most of the authors of the letters and other documents, placed before the ex-parte council at Burlington, Iowa, some time since, are Freemasons. Bro. Austin, since the difficulties began, has received a threatening letter ordering him to leave the country. He is not inclined to show much respect to the menace.

—Almost one-tenth of the Cherokee nation are Baptists. The number is 1,503, and fifty-two of the number, including the chief of the tribe, are ministers.

—The evangelist A. P. Graves is holding meetings in Joliet, Ill., with prospect of great spiritual blessings.

—J. K. Wheeler a Wheaton graduate in 1873, and now a student in the Theological Seminary at Morgan Park has received a call to the church at Marengo, Ill.

—It is estimated that the Baptists receive an average of seventeen converts for each year of home missionary labor, and forty-three converts for each year of foreign missionary service.

—Dr. C. R. Blackall of this city, for a long time connected with the Baptist Publication Society and a very successful Sabbath-school evangelist, expects to remove to New York in March. The change will be quite a loss to Baptist interests in this city. Mrs. Blackall is treasurer of the Woman's Baptist Missionary Society of the West.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—The church at Coleta, Ill., have lately bought and fitted up a new parsonage for their pastor, Rev. N. F. Gardner.

—The wife of Bishop Castle of Philomath, Oregon, was at last reports lying at the point of death, having been declining from disease of the lungs for some time.

—The address of Bishop Wright at the Illinois State Convention has been printed entire in the Telescope. It is among the most valuable documents yet contributed to the reform, and there is a desire that parts of it should be reproduced in tract form.

—Revivals are reported in the Telescope at Highland, Virginia; Portage, Ohio; Poplar Grove, Michigan; Grafton, Virginia; Maple Grove, Illinois; Springfield, Pennsylvania; New Hope, Ohio, and Robeson, Kansas. From a part of these places 89 conversions are reported and 66 additions to the church.

—A new form of devil worship is reported by missionary Gomer at Shengay, western Africa. He writes: "The enemy has been very busy in many of the villages where we have been holding meeting. I have frequently told the people in these villages that God sent us, and that the Bible we bring them is a message from God and they must hold the word. On last Sabbath I visited some of the villages near Bomphetook. In the road near the towns I saw wreaths, or "cottas," as they call them, made of grass and leaves. I learned from Lucy Curtis that some people have been going round to the different villages, claiming to have a secret message from God to the people, and each person must pay for it two bottles of rum, one head of tobacco, and one barr in cloth. They came to Mannoh and made fools of several of the people; but some went to Lucy first, to know about it. Among them was the head-man for the town. He and his son are among the most faithful seekers. He is a country doctor; but in all things he consults Lucy first, to know if it is right. When he refused to pay for this secret message the people were very angry, and said that he, too, wanted to be a white man. All who get this secret must wear one of these grass "cottas," or wreaths, for several days and then leave it in the public road. They tell the people that whoever refuses to pay for this message from God will have to suffer greatly. I learn that some have had to pawn their clothes and other things. One poor woman had nothing but some empty bottles, which were refused, and the poor woman was sorely distressed."

FREE BAPTIST.

—A two day's meeting was lately held with the Hillsdale and Branch Free Baptist church, Michigan, in which the work of grace was revived and some souls brought to Christ. A good work of grace is in progress in the church at Scipio. The next session of Hillsdale Quarterly Meeting will be held the second Saturday and Sabbath in January with the Woodstock church, Lenawee county. A meeting to organize a new Q. M. will be held with the South Allen church two miles north of Elder H. S. Limbocker's, to commence Friday evening, Jan 11th, and continuing through Saturday and Sabbath.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Edinburgh U. P. Presbytery has adopted a resolution condemning the action of the government with respect to the Afghan war.

—The United Presbyterian Home for Orphan and Friendless Children was formally opened for the baptized orphan or half orphan children of the church who are destitute, in Pittsburgh on New Year's day. Friendless children who may claim the attention of the church will be received though not connected with it.

—Rev. J. M. Adair of Stone Valley, Pa., has sent a contribution to the Foreign Mission Board, with which is connected a touching history. Bro. Adair writes to the Secretary: "Enclosed please find draft on Union National Bank, Philadelphia, for five hundred dollars for the Board of Foreign Missions. This is the money left by Mr. James Barr, a young man of this congregation, who died several years ago, eighteen years of age. He requested that $2,000 of his share of his father's estate should be given—part for the purchase of a congregational library, and the rest to our foreign mission work."

MISSIONARY.

—The Rev. Dr. Gulick, of Tokio, Japan, writes as follows:

"Several copies of the Japanese Scriptures and other Christian books were some time since given by the Rev. Mr. Neesima, of the American Board Mission, Kiyoto, to the officer of the prison at Otsu. He passed them over to one of the prisoners, a scholar, whose crime was that of manslaughter. About six months ago a fire took place in the prison, when the entire body of prisoners, numbering nearly one hundred, instead of improving the opportunity to make their escape, assisted in putting out the flames, and remained to a man to be again imprisoned. Such a remarkable circumstance occasioned inquiry as to the cause, when it appeared that the scholar among them had been so impressed and convinced of the truth of Christianity, that he had taught it to his fellow-prisoners, and Christian principles, combined with his personal influence, had such power over them as to restrain them from fleeing when the doors of their prison were opened. The scholar was consequently pardoned, but he remained in Otsu to still teach the prisoners. He has opened a Chinese school for young men, where Christianity is taught, and it is said he is now preparing to reprint a Chinese commentary on the Gospel of John, with Japanese connectives, to render it more readable to Japanese scholars."

—The British consul at Tientsin, China, writes to the committee of the famine relief fund in Shanghai as follows:

"The officials treat the missionaries now with the most marked cordiality, and assist them in every way in their power. I shall have more to say on this subject before long. As for the people, Mr. Smith (one of the distributors) triumphantly tells us that they have at last 'opened their houses,' and that the distributors have, since last autumn, seen more of real Chinese life than all the other missionaries put together since China was opened to them. He is not exaggerating. The advent of the foreigner in all the places which have been visited is now hailed with delight, and the utmost courtesy and hospitality extended to them, not only by those who taste of their generosity, but by those who will never need it. The distribution of the funds your committee have so kindly sent by the brave and judicious band of missionaries now engaged in the work will do more really to open China to us than a dozen wars. That obdurate class, the literati and gentry, are beginning to modify their views with regard to foreigners, and are confessing that their efforts for the relief of the suffering millions is not only an example to them, but has really been the incentive which has produced Chinese action."

GENERAL.

A return of the religious communities and associations has just been drawn up by order of the French government. The census of 1876 showed the existence of a religious population of 158,040 persons, of whom 127,753 were women and 30,287 men. The 127,753 females are divided among 844 communities. They possess 259 central houses, 585 independent establishments, 3,137 branches; they own 5,527 private schools, and 10,951 public. The 30,287 men form a certain number of communities, of which nine only are authorized; some devote themselves to teaching and possess the character of establishments of public utility, but the remainder of them have no legal existence, and may at any moment be dispersed by an administrative measure. They have 608 establishments and 768 private schools. They also direct public. The unauthorized religious associations of the women are 602 in number, and present an effective force of 14,003 members. About 100 of these establishments have been formed since 1870. As for the similar unions of men, they possess 384 establishments, with 7,444 members. Some of them have their central house in France, but a considerable number, about 140, have their chiefs and directors in Rome. In the first rank among those associations is that of the Jesuits, which possesses no less than 57 establishments in France, with 1,487 avowed members, of whom 123 are in Paris.

Some Questions for the Cynosure.

1st. When the ritual of the Grand Lodge of Pa. employs the phrase "O Lord God," as it does, is it to be regarded as a valid recognition of Jesus Christ?

So affirms a Masonic Anti-mason Baptist minister. He says he don't approve of the lodge and yet "pleads for Baal." When Masonic works use the word Lord, with what bearing do they employ it?

2d. In the Cynosure of Oct. 31st, is the article headed, "Hail, Masonry Divine," published originally, if I remember correctly, in the Banner, addressed to "Brother Graham," I think. In this article the writer, in the most forcible and emphatic way, sets forth the claims of Masonry as a religion to save. This piece was read to an Anti-masonic (?) minister, who claimed that it was the work of Anti-masonry, and not the language of a real Mason. Now, if you can in any way send us the demonstrative evidence of the genuineness of this piece, and so stop the mouth of perverseness itself, and not put you out too much, please do so. Please explain a little further. What is the Banner?

N. Callender.

Reply.—1. The term Lord, or God, in craft Masonry, means always their "Grand Architect of the Universe."

2. The article was republished in our columns from the Christian Statesman. Its author we do not know. There are some parts of the article which seem too truly spoken for a Freemason. Will the Statesman give us the author's name? The Banner is a local paper, published, we believe, in Aledo, Ill.

—Good Templarism in Canada does not prosper in spite of the good cause of temperance which it professedly champions. It is reported that the lodges of the Dominion last year initiated 8,194 new members, and restored 386; in all 8,580 additions. This is more than balanced by: violators of pledges, 1,358; expelled for drinking, 879; suspended, 975; expelled for non-payment dues, 4,933; withdrew, 2,707; died, 97,—a total of 10,949, and a net loss of 2,369.

News of the Week.

—A prominent murder trial concluded last week in this city with an acquittal for Mrs. Clark indicted for the murder of her husband last summer. On a similar accusation, a jury in Janesville, Wis., convicted a Mrs. Mack of murder a few days ago.

—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Chicago water works with one engine has just passed. Now there are eight engines, two pumping stations, 430 miles of pipe, and the city consumes 50,000,000 gallons per day. The works have cost $8,344,000 and paid an excess of $1,000,000.

—Dr. Howard Crosby of the Society for the Suppression of Vice in New York city, says there are 1,739 less low drinking places than there were a year ago.

—The ten charitable institutions of Illinois estimate their expenses for the coming two years at a total of $2 027,000, being $1,400.000 for the four insane asylums; $320,000 for deaf, dumb and blind; feeble minded children, $195,000; soldiers orphans, $94.000; eye and ear infirmary, $47,000; reform school, $65,000.

—Major J. W. Powell looks at the Indian question from the ethnologist's standpoint, and holds that in the matter of lands, customs and belief we must deal with the Indian as he is, looking to the slow but irresistible influence of civilization to effect a change, or we must reduce him to abject slavery. He would deal with all Indians as they are dealt with in the Indian Territory, and not make any effort to convert them suddenly to the white man's way of doing things.

—In his speech in the Senate, on Southern elections, Senator Blaine said: "One hundred and six representatives in Congress were recently chosen in the States formerly slave holding. The Democrats elected one hundred and one, or possibly one hundred and two, and the Republicans four, or possibly five. Thirty-five of these representatives were assigned to the Southern States by reason of the colored population; and the entire political power thus founded on the numbers of the colored people has been seized and appropriated to the aggrendizement of its own strength by the Democratic party of the South."

—A general blockade of the railroads followed the storm of last week. Telegrams from New York last Wednesday said trains are blockaded on the New York Central and Erie roads west of Rochester, but there seems to be no interruption east of that point. No trains, it is understood, have left Buffalo to-day on either road, and the stock trains are blockaded there. The drifts are said to be six or eight feet deep, and each road has two hundred or three hundred men out working. In the northern part of the State the snow is very heavy. One train going toward Watertown has been stuck in a snowdrift fifteen feet high for two nights.

—The Supreme Court adjourned last week until after the holidays. Chief Justice Waite has decided, at the request of the President, to preside at the trials of persons indicted for intimidation, violence, and fraud at the recent elections in South Carolina. It is expected that the cases will be ready at the April term, and the President is desirous, for obvious reasons, that the highest judicial officer of the government should preside, and decide questions that will arise in the conduct of the cases. He believes the country will have confidence in Chief Justice Waite's impartiality, and respect his opinions.

—The Berlin government is not relaxing its precautions against the evasion of conscription, even to facilitate the departure of Socialists. One Mandl, a naturalized American, has been prohibited from lecturing in Berlin on the improved prospects of the Western States of America, on the ground that not only Socialists, but a considerable portion of well-to-do Germans would emigrate.

—Reports are full of the reappearance of the nihilist specter in Russia, and all sorts of demonstrations are apprehended. One is said to be planned for Dec. 26, the anniversary of the outbreak on the accession of the Emperor Nicholas in 1826. The police are busy everywhere tracking the conspirators, and within the last week a number of arrests have been made. Quite a raid is made against the students who wanted to present a petition to the heir-apparent. There is even a rumor that the government seriously thinks of closing the university for this year.

—It is stated that eighty persons were killed or wounded in the recent encounter between the militia and students at Kieff, Russia.

—A dispatch from Lahore reports that Yakoob Kahn has been proclaimed by the chiefs of one of the great Afghan sections. Opinion is divided as to his future course, but the defection of the Ameer's troops, who, at Jelallabad even, joined the British, will probably compel him to accept the terms if coupled with a guarantee against his father and the Russians. This might obviate even the temporary occupation of Cabul by British troops. A Quetta dispatch says the Governor of Candahar has informed the Ameer that opposition to the British is futile.

—A correspondent telegraphs that General Roberts of the force invading Afghan, convoked the principal inhabitants of the Kuram Valley at Peiwar and Ali Kheyl, and informed them that the Ameer's rule had passed away forever, and henceforth they must look to the Empress of India.

—It is stated that Russia's participation in Afghan affairs will probably be confined to offering Shere Ali the usual hospitality to royal visitors and maintenance.

—A special from Geneva, Switzerland, reports that great distress prevails in that country. There are 6,000 unemployed persons in Geneva.

—Germany is said to have so increased her railroad facilities Franceward that she can have 600,000 men en route for the frontier at one and the same time. Likewise she has in all sixteen bridges across the Rhine.

—A London cable dispatch says: "The steamship Emily B. Souder, which left New York on the 8th of December for Turk's Island and San Domingo, foundered at sea when two days out from New York. This news reached London from Kingston, Jamaica, telegraphed by Lloyds' agent, who states that two of the crew had just landed at Kingston. What became of the passengers, officers and remainder of the crew, is not known, but the seamen picked up believe that all others on board the steamer were drowned."

—A passenger by the steamer Granada, arrived from Panama at San Francisco, reports that as the Grenada was leaving Mazatlan, bound north, news was received of a severe battle between the forces of the clerical chief Lerma, and the national troops under General Escudero, military commander at Guadalajara. Lerma, with his Indians, had captured the town of Tepec in the name of the clerical party and there held high carnival for a few days. He also held the road leading from Tepec to the seaport of San Blas. Upon the advance of Escudero, Lerma marched out to meet him, but was totally defeated and most of his adherents captured, of whom eighteen were immediately hanged. The balance of those captured, claiming to have been forced into the rebel service, were allowed to go to their homes.

Home and Farm.

Cooking Meats.

Bread and meat should be among the simplest and least difficult articles of food to cook, but for lack of care or through unpardonable ignorance they are the most frequently spoiled. For the present we only propose to speak of meats.

Where there are no reasons for stringent economy and the choicest pieces are selected, there is no excuse if they are not so cooked as to give the highest gratification. For those who are compelled to choose the cheapest, not the best, there are many ways by which a little skill and a fair amount of good common sense can make even the poorer portions quite satisfactory. Indeed, sometimes the cheapest cuts give more pleasure than the choice joints that wealth provides, because the one is daintly dressed and finely seasoned, carefully cooked to a turn, and its plebeian origin skillfully covered by a good farmer's sensible wife, and the other ruined by the reckless carelessness of the expensive cook whom no one dare censure or direct.

Attention to the art of seasoning, a fair knowledge of the modes of making tough beef tender, nutritions and palatable, are important items in domestic education. Many housekeepers are very careless in giving their directions or in their own use of seasoning, and thus often spoil what might have been delicious. We say "careless," but too often it is the result of ignorance. The injudicious use of salt, pepper and herbs has ruined many a meal that should have been most excellent, and added the tortures of dyspepsia, the usual penalty for such ignorance or misuse of seasoning.

It is a common practice of cooks and often those who are called good housekeepers, to sprinkle salt over meat when just ready to be put over the fire. Now, to salt any meat before it is well heated through—or, better still, half cooked—will injure very materially the best ever sold in market, and certainly quite spoil a poor article, no matter whether it is steak, roast or stew. It will harden the fibers, toughen the meat all through, extract the best part of the juice, make it very injurious to the stomach and give no pleasure to the palate.

It is difficult to impress upon cooks, or careless, incompetent housekeepers, the simple rule that salt should not be used in seasoning meat or poultry until partly cooked, and on the contrary, that pepper and herbs, if used, should be added at an earlier stage; because all such seasonings release the best part of their flavor more readily by the action of heat, though not at so intense a degree as to evaporate and thus lose the most delicate part of their flavor.

Rapid cooking and intense heat are as injurious to meats as to the seasoning. Long, gentle cooking—simmering—is best for even the choicest of meats, except in broiling. Pepper, spices, herbs, if used, penetrate all through the meat when cooked slowly; but the best flavors evaporate under rapid cooking. A poor, cheap, tough piece of meat is hardly eatable, certainly not digestible, unless these precautions are strictly observed: but it can be made wholesome and delicious if they are properly understood and remembered. The French understand the power of slow cooking to preserve all fine flavors. If they had not such great fondness for garlic theirs would be the perfection of meat cooking.—Christian Union.

Publishers' Department.

A Happy New Year.

May all the readers of the Cynosure have a happy new year. Under the grace of God the Cynosure will do all it can each week to render your new year a happy one, bringing you each a fresh draft of invigorating truth and a strong, steady light revealing the right way and the wrong way, prompting the uncertain or innocently ignorant to walk in the right path.

S. P. Miers, Grand Blanc, Mich., sends nine new subscriptions for one year each and his renewal. He writes: "I shall get more if I can possibly."

L. W. Matthews, Lincolnville, Wabash Co., Ind., sends seven subscriptions for one year each, five for six months, and two for three months each.

Isaac Bancroft, Belmont, Wis., sends six subscriptions for one year each, all renewals, and writes: "I am deeply interested in getting the number up to 10,000. I think it ought to be done and can be if all will do what they can. I will try to do my part."

S. P. Poole, Bellvue, Mich., John Deen, Cedar Springs, Mich., and Geo. McKinnis, Pleasant Plain, Ia., each send four subscriptions for one year each. Mr. Poole writes: "I shall send more soon. We want the 10,000 reached and mean to do our part."

F. H. Ewing, Angola, Ind., sends three new subscriptions for fourteen months each.

J. P. Stoddard, three for one year each.

O. Sholes, Morrison, Ill., sends three subscriptions for one year each.

Robert Berry, Carbondale, Pa., sends one subscription for a year, one for six months and two for four months each.

Mr. Berry worked dilligently for these subscriptions and three of the names are of clergymen. The good which will result from that work, eternity alone will show.

C. Quick, Weston, Mich., sends two subscriptions for one year each and one for six months.

Nelson Daniells, Wauconsta, Mich., sends one subscription for a year and two for three months each.

Geo. W. Fast, Woodland, Barry county, Mich.; W. B. Loomis, Parshallville, Mich.; B. Williams, Warren, Ill.; A. J. Loudenbeck, Glidden, Carroll county, Iowa; M. R. Britten, Vienna, Walworth county, Wis. and A. L. Lamphear, Delavan, Ill., each send two subscriptions for one year each. Mr. Fast writes: "I will continue to solicit for the Cynosure; it is what the people need." Mr. Williams writes: "Every little helps." Let us not forget this and each do his part.

John W. Snodgrass, Hickory Green, Monroe county, Iowa, writes: "Will try to get some subscribers."

A friend sends the Cynosure to a minister and writes: "We want the Cynosure light to shine on his mind so that he may be enabled to open his mouth occasionally in condemnation of secrecy."

J. W. Thompson, Pemberton, Dade county, Mo., writes: "I am resolved to come down as heavily as possible on that TEN THOUSAND."

M. Mattheesen, Socorro, New Mexico, writes: "I shall try to get you some subscribers for your 10,000 when I get among people that can read it."

We are now fairly entered on the winter campaign. Let us all take hold with a brave good will to make it a successful one for the 10,000.

Next week the number of subscriptions will be reported so that each reader may know how much additional work on his part will be necessary to complete the list of ten thousand before March first 1879.

Books and Tracts sent two weeks ending Dec. 28, 1878.

J. F. BROWNE, Sec.

NOTICE.

I will, D. V., be in Marion, Grant county, Ind., Jan. 15th and remain in the county for ten or twelve days for work if the way is open. I should be glad to speak twice each day, afternoon and evening during my stay, if friends will make the appointments. Will Bro. Isaac Elliott look after the matter in Marion, Bro. David Thomas at Fairmount, Bro. Jeremiah Howell at Jonesboro, Bro. Joseph Bond at Bethlehem, and any others who are interested at points in the county. I desire also to visit Bunker Hill and Peru after leaving Grant county. Will Bros. Jennis and Crane maka a note of this and if they want bills send for them at Marion by the 15th. If the friends in Iowa get ready for their State Convention Febuary 4th, 5th and the Nebraska friends for the week follcwing, it will keep me moving and parties who want help must make an effort to keep me at work day and night while I am with them.

J. P. STODDARD,
Sec. N. C. A.

—Past Master Ronayne will be in Angola, Ind., in a few days, could not friends in contiguous parts of the State arrange for meetings at the same time and lessen expenses?

CHEERING.

Our publishers look cheerful like those facing the sunrise. I have not the details, they will be given in their place, but some letters have been handed us which, like clear glass, help us see further into heaven.

One says: "I renew my subscription for the Cynosure, and you may expect my name so long as I live unless reason fails. I give no money to any preacher who belongs to any secret society, nor give a vote for them. God being my helper I will work for the good of your paper and get names if I can.—G. CROOK, Concord, Pa."

Mr. Joseph Craig sends four names from Lima, Ohio. Richard Green sends three names, and says: "I will canvass for your paper this month and do what I can." Mr. Green is seventy-six years old. God promises a time when "The child shall die an hundred years old."

When I was twenty-six years old I lectured for the abolition of slavery in Fayetteville, Franklin county, Pa. That was many years ago. Do any of the citizens remember me? When I was in Fayetteville, Thad. Stevens was alive, and Ritner (Anti-Mason) was governor. At Chambersburgh I stopped at Noel's Hotel (stone building) who defended me from a mob. That night Mr. Noel sat till twelve o'clock at night telling me how he and Mr. Madeira helped fugitive slaves. There are no slaves now. God grant that soon there may be no lodge slaves.

Now here comes a letter from J. S. Yankey, with twelve names for the paper. Mr. Mosher sends $20 from Stillwater, New York, and says of his money, after directing its application: "If I can see it has accomplished any good, I shall be well repaid." Ira Greene sends eleven names from Rossville, Illinois. J. Shoemaker sends twenty-four names from Albion, Iowa, and says: "We prize your paper very highly. It does much good in our little town." Praise the Lord!

But I shall trespass on Mrs. Cook's department. When Prof. Blanchard had been speaking awhile against the lodge he said: "Father, there is one consolation. It brings us to be associated with the best men and women on earth."

Topics of the Time.

Howard Crosby claims that the temperance movement going on in New York under his direction, last year shut up 1,739 groggeries, nearly all of which had been licensed as hotels. Notwithstanding this and other agencies there were reported 200 arrests for drunkenness in that city on New Year's day, and over fifty women on the day after. In Washington city there is a decided improvement on the social customs of a few years ago. The correspondence of the daily press states: "It was a noticeable fact, and one that will call out universal commendation, that no wine was offered to callers, in any shape, at the receptions of the Cabinet or Speaker Randall. A punch-bowl of lemonade was substituted at some places. This is unusual, and not owing entirely to the good influences of Mrs. Hayes, for the Cabinet are all temperate men, and their wives are temperance women. It has been customary to find claret or champagne punch at nearly all New Year's receptions in Washington, and at many houses a buffet well laden with liquors has tempted callers heretofore. But the many who went to the farthest to-day, and tasted the most lunches, saw less wine than was ever offered before in Washington on a similar occasion."

There seems to be a very comfortable state of the public mind respecting the quiet way by which specie resumption has been brought about. Everybody was prepared for a day that two years ago was anticipated with more or less doubt. Perhaps the most significant event of the day was the closing of the famous "Gold Room" of New York, where the heaviest gambling in the country has been carried on for seventeen years; where not a cent has been added to the public stock, but whose wild speculations at the expense of public honor during the war make the closing of its doors a public gratification. Even the Greenback party has a certain satisfaction in the fact that paper money, being otherwise at par, is more valuable than coin because more convenient to handle.

The old year went out with a cold wave that swept across the country along the 42d and 43d parallels of latitude, sending the mercury down to twenty-four and twenty-eight degrees below zero in some parts of the lake region and covering New York and northern New England with snow drifts, in sharp contrast with the fine open weather of the first of December. What is the most remarkable feature of the season is that while Iowa and northern Illinois are covered with a foot or two of snow there is hardly two inches at St. Paul, Minnnesota, and the thermometer shows such contrasts as these: St. Paul, January 3d, "Five degrees below zero;" St. Louis, same date, "The weather is intensely cold. The mercury is 18 degrees below zero." While every thing is locked in frost at the south end of Lake Michigan, at the north the ice had not, ten days ago, formed so as to interfere with even sailing vessels. For the first time in many years the James river, in Virginia is frozen over. The city poor are first to feel the bitterness of this severe weather and the scenes about the offices of the commissioners for the poor are harrowing in the extreme. The universal demand is for coal, and the miners and dealers in this staple wish their facilities for marketing were doubled just now. Their harvest may be as short as it is good.

A review of the railway mortality in the United States for 1878 brings forward some instructive figures. Forty-eight roads with an aggregate length of 3,902 miles, were sold under foreclosure. Their capital stock was $151,616,700 and their bonds and debt $160,014,500, or a total liability of over $311,600,000. In comparison with the two previous years, while the mileage is nearly the same in each, yet the invested capital locked up during 1878 is nearly a hundred million more than in the two preceding. During last year, also, there were twenty-seven roads representing an investment of $92,385,000 in bonds and debt over which receivers were appointed. So that in one year we have seventy-five roads in which are invested nearly $404,000,000 which are paying no dividends and little or no interest. With such an amount of unproductive capital for one year's work it is no wonder that we suffer from "hard times," when we remember that this evil has been growing on us for several years, and represents but a single class of investments.

Masonic Ode.

TO BE SAID OR SUNG AT THE OPENING OF A NEW LODGE.

[From Webb's Monitor, New Edition.]

Behold they come!—the sly and mystic race,
With sacred symbols, and with wise grimace,
And awful solemn serio-comic face!
'Tis ten to one that the most pious there
Will crack a joke by uttering a prayer.
O merry Masons! ye are funny folk,
To seek salvation through a crafty joke!
Whose faith unshaken rests upon the lodge,
Whose hope seeks office through that artful dodge;
And whose great charity whate'er may come,
Always begins and always ends at home.
Or if ye give a sixpence to the poor,
Another goes for drink behind the door.
O merry Masons, put your aprons on,
And sing a hymn around the demijohn!

Why should ye weep, or put black mourning on,
Or run that rig upon the widow's son?
Ye need not weep, nor longer wail or moan,
Immortal life is yours through Ma-ha-bone!

If some high office you would fain pursue,
And fail, and fail, and know not what to do;
If cruel Antis have you on the hip,
Then try, my friends, the Enter'd Apprentice grip!
If that fails,—then try the second degree;
If that won't answer, there's the third, you see.
The mighty Master Mason's grip, 'tis plain,
Must bring you standing to your feet again.

Then weep not, Masons, neither wail nor moan;
Immortal life is yours from Ma-ha-bone!
And now, my brethren, since our labor's done,
We'll take refreshment from the demijohn.

Masonic Gregrees.

BY H. H HINMAN.

In Africa, as in all heathen lands, the tone of morals is very low. But in default of consciences superstitious fear becomes an accessory of government, and is often appealed to for the protection of life and property. A gregree hung on an orange tree will protect its fruit from theft. "Thou shalt not steal" has not come to be a part of the code written in the pagan's heart, but fear of the "medicine" and "the devils" that reside in the gregree is an important factor in his character.

Now Freemasonry, true to its pagan character, has its gregrees, and they are used with certain advantages. The square and compass fastened on the vest of a Mason protects him against all fraud and violence on the part of his fellow pagans. He says, "Behold my gregree, and remember how you swore that sooner than cheat, wrong, defraud or do violence to any one wearing this symbol, you would have your body severed in two," etc. "The gentleman who sits in the car seat next back of me has no such protection. Should you take his watch there would be nothing to fear but the uncertain course of the law; but touch not me for by this talisman I am sacred to all Masons."

Sometimes a lady dons the symbols of Adoptive Masonry to advertise the fact that she is a Master Mason's wife, sister or daughter, and this dreadful gregree is most awe-inspiring. Its language to all the great fraternity is, "This person is sacred. This character is inviolable. That meek-looking sister back there has no gregree, and even though she be the wife of a Mason you do not know it to be so. Consider then your opportunities. Take due notice thereof and govern yourselves accordingly."

A gentleman in Africa who had shot a man, told me his life was saved by putting up a gregree over his door. What wonderful things have not these gregrees done for E. K. Avery, S. J. Keith and Rev. H. Hayden of Connecticut? What a blessing they would have been to those poor sisters, Ellen Jewett, Eden Slade and Mary Stannard? Would it not be well to dispense with all law, all conscience and all other religion, and simply hang gregrees on our persons, our characters and our treasure? In other words, which is the better, Christian civilization or African paganism?

What does the word "Cowan" Mean?

We do not find this Masonic word cowan in the earlier editions of Webster. The reason is probably that Masonry had not assumed such an important place in public estimation as it has of late years; and the word was little known, or was regarded as a kind of thieves' lingo, not worthy of a place in a decent dictionary.

We presume that the word comes from a Greek word signifying dog; and its meaning as applied by Masons, is designed to include all who do not belong to the Masonic lodge.

By referring to the last chapter of Revelations, supposed to be written by one whom the Masons claim as a distinguished member of the craft, we find this verse, viz: "For without are dogs, and sorcerers [or poisoners] and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolators, and whosoever liveth and maketh a lie."

These characters, of which "dogs" take the lead, and may perhaps be regarded as the head and representative of all the others, are on the outside of the high walls of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, at whose gates stand angels; and "blessed are they who may enter in through the gates into the city."

Now by the word dogs, the sacred writer undoubtedly means that class of men whom we call cynics, who see no more difference between sacred and profane things than dogs would. It is a very bad class of men, and they are put at the very head of the list of exceedingly wicked persons by the writer of the Revelations. St. Paul, also, teaches us to "beware of dogs."

Is the New Jerusalem the Masonic lodge, with angels at the gates as tylers, to keep out all "cowans" and other profane persons?

If so, what a spectacle do the "sly craft" thus present, shutting themselves up in the holy city, illumined by Masonic light, and shutting out Christian people as so many dogs and profane persons! Is not this conceit a very cunning one? Is it the origin of the Masonic order or degree of "Princes of Jerusalem?" Only think, a set of red-nosed poisoners (poisoners of the the truth as well as of strong drinks) whoremongers, murderers, idolaters, and lovers and makers of lies (for Masonry is nothing but a mass of lies), taking possession of the city, and shutting out decent people as so many dogs! This is Freemasonry. It is a compound of impudence, falsehood and avarice, and makes use of the terms of the Bible and of the words of the law in order the better to circumvent and defeat all law, human and divine, except its own.

Freemasonry is a cynical sneer at the Christian religion. It is a foreign institution, and not

AMERICAN.

The Lord Jesus Insulted and Refused.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A short time ago I was examining the "Ancient Ceremonies" of Masonry as given us by the celebrated Masonic author, Daniel Sickels, in his Freemason's Monitor. In the funeral services I found, commencing on page 205, that beautiful hymn:

"Thou art gone to the grave but we will not deplore thee, Tho' sorrow and darkness encompass the tomb."

The Christian hymn book has the next two lines thus:

"The Saviour has passed through its portals before thee,
And the lamp of his love is thy guide through the gloom."

But that wouldn't be Masonic; the grave of Jesus must be robbed that the lamp may be set up at the grave of Hiram. Listen to them:

"The good has passed on through its portals before thee,
And the cassia blooms greenly to lighten the the gloom."

You will recollect that when the Fellowcrafts went in search of the lost Hiram one of them became weary and sat down to rest, and in attempting to rise he caught hold of a sprig of accacia, which yielded so readily that his suspicion was aroused, which led to the discovery of the grave, and the raising of the rotten, stinking Hiram. On page 202 (same book) he speaks of it as follows: "This evergreen which once marked the temporal resting place of the illustrious dead," etc. Now it is a well known fact that there are thousands of Masons who do not believe this "Hiram Abiff" story. And yet ministers of the Gospel will sing of that lying legend at the grave of a professed Christian—yes, at the grave of a brother minister—rather than of the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Whether the acacia does "bloom greenly" or not I am not able to say, not being acquainted with the shrub; but true or false, sense or nonsense, it must be altered to get rid of the hated name of the Saviour. And all through the hymn it is changed to get rid of the name of the Redeemer. The last line,

"Where death hath no sting since the Saviour has died."

is made to read,

"In the blest lodge above where the faithful abide."

But perhaps some Mason may tell us that there are scarcely two hymn books that have it exactly alike. We admit it; but the Masons only have changed it so as to rob Christ.

On page 205 we find the following: "Then let us improve this solemn warning that at last, when the sheeted dead are stirred, when the great white throne is set, we shall receive from the Omniscient Judge the thrilling invitation, 'Come, ye blessed, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'" While he was about it why did he not quote it correctly, "Come ye blessed of my Father?" (Mat. 25:24) Ah, that would have been an admission that Jesus is to be the Judge, and of course that would never do. These facts with a Christless prayer to open and another to close the services, would be sufficient, one would think, to show in what estimation the founder of the Christian religion is held by Freemasons.

J. G. MATTOON.

Evening Thought.

Do we really believe that there is a happy company of redeemed ones above? Yes, and there is joy in heaven when the sinner repents. What shouts! What praises echo! Whose are those voices which are so full of exultant melody? What is the song? The redeemed shall be a great multitude which no man can number, and their song is, "Salvation to God who sitteth upon the throne and unto the lamb."

"Yes," says the desponding one, wearily going onward, and whose feet step on slippery ground, "They can sing, but how shall I ever get there? I shall die on the way!"

"Fear not," salutes his ear, and as he again looks to Jesus his way is straight and the path is pleasantness and peace. How full of praise he is now! Would any one think that the object of his worship was "Fearful in praises!" The redeemed in heaven and on earth seem to have no fear, and yet there was seen the "great white throne, and Him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away!" Glorious in holiness! Fearful in praises! The judge of man, of every man, small and great, the living and the dead shall stand up before God—must appear before the judgment seat of Christ!

Justice will be done there! Not one shadow of wrong will be found in any one case from Adam to the the latest man of the race! Each will reap as he has sown. That law so little regarded now will be carried out. Those without law shall have justice, and be rewarded for well doing or "perish without law," and those who had the law shall be tried by it. And yet how wondrously the man Christ Jesus, once despised and crucified, shall appear as the glorified judge with all power as indeed he now has in heaven and earth! The law of faith in Him, oh, how precious then, how precious now! The cup of cold water will then have its rich reward! How strange that men who cannot discover all the laws even of matter should call in question the laws of God in his spiritual kingdom as revealed in his precious Word!

The law of electricity is only partially known and new developments are almost daily surprising the nations! Is the law of Faith in the Lord Jesus so limited in its power and effects that superficial sceptics like Ingersol can define its limits and scorn its power? Alas for the vanity of men! Truly the wisdom of such men is foolishness with God, who has chosen by the foolishness of preaching the good news of the Saviour's death, burial and resurrection for man, to save eternally from sin and all its dire consequence those who believe and obey him.

Blessed be the God of heaven for the glorious hope thus given to men! What a power in it to purify and win from the love of sin, and to increase the love begun in the believer's soul of Him who first gave himself for him!

Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him. *

Better Been Buried.

The well-known anti-tobacco man, George Trask, tells the following of himself:

"About fifteen years ago we gave a lecture in which we aimed to show that, as the common use of tobacco takes away desire for food, blood, muscle, health and strength, it must, without fail, shorten life, and if so, the habit would at last lead to the person killing himself, hence a breaking of the command of God, 'Thou shalt not kill.'

"As we closed, the preacher rose and said: 'I believe the argument in this lecture is final; I believe thousands who use tobacco are poisoned to death and cut short their lives. But I have a hard case to solve, and I wish Mr. Trask to solve it. I know a man within ten miles of this place, who smoked his pipe till the day of his death; and he lived to be 104 years of age.'

"We confess we were puzzled. The question was to the point and the people laughed at our expense. At last we hit upon the Socratic style of reasoning, and questions helped us out of the trouble. Sir, I asked, are you sure the old man lived and smoked till he was 104? 'Yes,' he replied. How did he look? 'He looked like an Egyptian mummy.' Had he moral feelings? 'O, no; he seemed to have no sense of God or religion whatever.' Did he manifest any public spirit? Did he like good schools, good roads, good order and the like? 'O, no; no more than a mud turtle or oyster.' Had he a family? 'Yes, a large one and a mean one — altogether too large.' Did he love his family? 'No, I think not.' Did he hate his family? 'No, I think not.' All in a word—did he love anybody or hate anybody, dead or alive, in this world or in any world? 'No, I think not.' Well, well, brother, the conclusion of the whole matter is simply this—the old man was dead fifty years ago, only you did not bury him.—Selected.

Supreme Circle of Honor.

Another secret temperance order is announced in the columns of one of our exchanges, under the name of the "Supreme Circle of Honor." It was instituted at Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 11, 1878. The objects of the society, as stated by the "Supreme Secretary," are:

1st. Mutual assistance in business and in procuring employment.

2d. To create greater love for home, country and God.

3d. To teach obedience and fidelity to the laws of our country and laws of our creating.

4th. To bind together by the ties of friendship, cemented by brotherly love, the members of the order in one common brotherhood for the advancement of the temperance cause.

None but a white male of the full age of 16 years can be admitted.

In common with others of its class, this new order carries all too plainly the "marks of the beast." Clannishness condensed is the essence of its title if it means anything at all. It arrogates to be not only a "circle of honor," implying the opposite in all other temperance people and organizations, but to be "supreme" over all, pretending to exist to "create greater love for home, country and God," to teach patriotism and to push onward the cause of temperance, while it excludes the woman who makes the home and through it the country, and has done more for the cause of temperance than all the secret temperance orders the moon ever shone upon. It also excludes the black man, who of all others would most enlist the sympathy and aid of a genuine, Christian temperance society. If any man needs help to resist or overcome the drink demon, it is he whose will and self-reliance have been curbed and broken by centuries of murderous servitude under the lash of his white-skinned brother. But this new order comes along assuming to be "supreme," and from its mud-begotten aristocracy kicks out the negro whom Christ receives; kicks out the woman as beneath this "circle of HONOR," and ignores, with these, the entire temperance sentiment of the land outside its little snub aristocracy.

Is such an one a temperance organization? No. Why not?

Notice its objects, as stated by itself:

1st. Mutual assistance in business. (The second is utter bosh, and need not be uttered again.) 3rd. To teach obedience and fidelity to the laws of our country and laws of our own creating. Here we have the gist of the whole concealed under the specious cloak of patriotism, of "creating love for home" by dividing the interests of its members on the line of the sexes, of "creating love for God" by setting at naught his example who "in secret said nothing," and of teaching love for our republic by training young men to knuckle to the despotism of lodge government.

There were enough secret temperance orders, already, if that was the founder's object. The marks we have enumerated, with the fact that the official announcement of the order contains twice the words "to be known and hailed," (Masonic) and that a fee of ten dollars is charged for the charter of every lodge,stamps this "Supreme Circle of Honor" as but another of the feeders of the Masonic lodge, whose object is to maintain a few in a sham, titled nobility instead of really to work for the cause of temperance. Dr. Charles Jewett, the veteran temperance lecturer, says in his book that these secret temperance orders have put back the cause of temperance in the United States forty years. Of one thing we may rest assured. The principle of oath-bound secretism has no place in any reform movement, and so far as it obtains a place will always hinder the work. True reform work is always work for Christ, in the highest sense. Christ was our example in all things." He said nothing in secret, and commanded his disciples, "What I have told ye in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." We must follow our leader or lose his leadership and be entirely defeated. The weapons he has given us for our use in overcoming evil are prayers, faith and open and above-board work. Secretism is the weapon of the devil, and darkness the uniform of his army. Exchanging God's weapons for Satan's, no wonder the latter has worsted us in the fight, and those who might be Samsons for God are blindly grinding for his enemies in the prison-house, behind the bars of Masonic oaths.

The paganism of the lodge was forty years ago consigned to a merited grave. To the secret temperance orders is due the credit of exhuming its foul corpse and again corrupting the moral atmosphere with its presence. They are, as it were, the Sabbath-schools of the lodge, and as its fall approaches it will merge itself into these smaller orders, ready to spring forth again at the first opportunity. The only safety is to make sure work, destroy the 'works of darkness,' root and branch.—Am. Freeman.

Rev. Joseph Cook on Secret Societies.

It would hardly be possible, in the presence of the power of Mr. Cook, and his popularity as a profound thinker and astounding lecturer, to fail to ask his views upon a question of such importance as that of secret societies. Such an expression is not to be expected from his lips as from Mr. Moody, who is an evangelist. He must treat the subject in its broadest sense, as affecting the condition of society in America. Mr. Cook is not fettered and bound by the obligations of Masonry (the thought of the reverse is monstrous) or any other secret society, but is decided in his views in opposition to such organizations. Until recently he has not given any public utterance respecting secret societies; but his broad view of our national peril could not fail to recognize this monster evil.

One of the ministerial contributors to our columns has for some time been in correspondence with Mr. Cook upon this subject, and the following is an extract from one of Mr. Cook's letters: "In a republic where open discussion is protected by law, there appears to me to be no necessity of secret political societies. As to the Masons, their record is such that I have never been persuaded to join them. Had they acted always openly, their subjection to criticism would have improved their record. I am opposed to secret temperance societies, and especially to the secret clubs among young men in cities and colleges."

This great scientist knows well enough the record of Masonry, and fitly does he recognize the importance of its improvement by criticism. Since the improvement can not be made in the system, the criticism should be so applied as to warn men against the monstrous heathen snare.

In Mr. Cook's opening lecture in Tremont Temple, Boston, delivered on Monday, November 4th, before the largest audience that has yet greeted him at the opening of his lectures, he treated masterly the subject, "Infidel Attack upon Property." In a series of propositions, he shows "how large is the susceptibility of America to communistic and socialistic political disease." Two of these propositions are stated thus: "It is at present estimated that 1,500,000 voters belong to secret organizations in the United States. It is their avowed purpose to acquire political power, and to govern the country in such way as to cripple capital and promote the interests of manual laborers." The statement makes no distinction between the various orders, as will be noticed. These orders pretend to be organized for different purposes; but no broad and intelligent view can mistake as to their being parts of a great net-work, the fulfillment of whose destiny is not yet. The secret purposes of each and of all can be inferred from the developments made, from the means employed, and from methods resorted to, in order to conceal from the public eye and mind the real character and purpose of these organizations. There is in this country a combination of men banded together under the most solemn oaths, and controlled by despotic minds, which waits only for the auspicious moment to accomplish its work of destruction to our freedom and social order. In a recent lecture Mr. Cook has treated the subject yet more at large; but we can not notice it now. Some have tried to stigmatize the sentiment maintained and growing against the lodge as narrow, and unworthy the broadest culture. Each development of the truth shows more clearly that under the scrutiny of pure Christianity, and the investigation of true culture and broad principles of social order and government, these organizations must go down under the severest condemnation.—Telescope.

A celebrated heathen said: "I wrap myself up in my own virtue." A true believer has something infinitely better to wrap himself in. When Satan says, Thou hast yielded to my suggestions; when conscience says, Thou hast turned a deaf ear to my admonitions; when the law of God says, thou hast broken me; when the Gospel says, Thou hast neglected me, when justice says, Thou hast insulted me; when Mercy says, Thou hast slighted me —Faith can say, All this is true! but I wrap myself up in the righteousness of Jesus Christ.—Toplady.

New Year's Greeting from Past Master Ronayne.

Since my return from Wisconsin I have been so very busy working on my new book that at the end of 1878 I had not had time even to bid the readers of the Cynosure and all among whom I have labored during the year just closed a "Happy New Year;" and so, if I may not be considered too late, I would like to do so now. Eighteen seventy-eight has been an eventful year in the history of Anti-masonry. I myself have worked the Masonic degrees during the year 114 times, thus bringing Freemasonry in all its horrible wickedness before at least 55,000 or 60,000 people.

There are two main human agencies, however without which I am firmly convinced all our work would be useless, if indeed we could work at all, namely, the labors of the General Agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and the Christian Cynosure. The former is indefatigable, able, wise, and the right man in the right place, but without the extensive circulation of the Cynosure what can we accomplish? The God of the Bible never planted the miserable sham called Freemasonry, and hence we firmly believe it shall be destroyed because we have the word of the of the Son of God for it that "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not not planted shall be rooted out," but we must do our part and do it fully and well. We must always rely for success on the power of Almighty God that he will abase Hiram Abiff and exalt the name of his holy child Jesus, and while he honors us by using us as instruments to bring about this glorious result and so "prepare the way of the Lord," we ought to be diligent and energetic in our work. And there is nothing that we can do that will more speedily and surely accomplish the final overthrow of Freemasonry from popular power as to circulate the Christian Cynosure in every part of the land. I have not during the year made any individual effort to collect subscriptions, because I felt that could be better done by friends in the various localities where I have lectured and after people had time to reflect and calmly discuss the matter, but whether they have been as diligent in this respect as they might be I have no way of knowing. One thing is certain, however, those ten thousand subscribers must be had, and Stoddard and Rathbun and Cook and Hinman and Ronayne and every individual reader of the Cynosure must procure them. Friends, shall we be defeated in this effort? Victory has crowned every one of our efforts during the last four years since you and I first became acquainted and shall we fail now and so retire before an already conquered enemy?

And now with regard to my book. As I said above I am working on it almost night and day and we are rushing it through as fast as the printers and electrotypers can do it. It will comprise three main features:

First it will thoroughly discuss every part of Masonry—every ceremony, symbol and emblem—proving the whole thing to be a pagan philosophy.

Secondly it will compare Romanism and Masonry together showing the common origin of both.

Thirdly, it will compare both systems with the Bible. It will contain at least from 350 to 400 pages, and will have from 42 to 45 engravings showing every part of the Masonic institutions and every feature of the lodge when at work. It will be bound like the "Gospel Hymns," and I trust it will become an important element in our future discussions. Its retail price, when published, so far as I am now able to judge, cannot be less than $1.00. So far I have received about 250 subscribers and about $260. I shall get through with it this month if possible, and I want at least 500 subscribers at one dollar each by the time the book is published, as it will cost that, if not more, to bring it out. Each subscriber now receives two copies for $1.00, but after it comes from the press of course it will be supplied by Mr. Cook and others like all other books, according to their own special terms.

Friends desiring to aid me in this enterprise and at the same time to secure their books at first cost, will please send their names to me as below. They pay their money when they receive their books. Happy New Year to all.

Rev. Mr. Medbury's Essay.

Some weeks since a correspondent of the Cynosure referred to an essay read by Rev. Mr. Medbury before the Wisconsin Baptist Ministerial Conference, in very eulogistic terms. Being a Baptist I naturally felt an interest in what a Baptist minister in these latter days would dare to read before a company of fellow ministers on the subject of secret societies and so have been at some pains to procure a copy of the Standard in which it was published, Dec. 12th.

It is a very able production, but I am sadly disappointed in its studied endeavor to stand on both sides of the fence at the same time. The author evidently has the correct idea of the church, its mission, its superiority to lodge organizations, and its true position in regard to them—that of antagonism—and yet he gives away his case in the following heart-sickening manner: "Many excellent Christians are identified with all the various reform and benevolent societies (he does not say secret societies but covers them with benevolent) but are they any better Christians on account of their society complications? I think not."

Again he says, "It would not be wise or right to make their society relations a subject of church discipline. The anti secret society specialist has always proved a greater hindrance to the cause of Christ than all the societies." Close after he says: "Any membership in any society save the church should be discouraged by every Christ-like means."

Is not church discipline according to Matt. 18th Christ-like, being his own specific directions? And yet he tells us that church discipline should not be used in such cases.

Further on he says, "Organized fraternity implies a mutual agreement, a social compact, a yoke of fellowship, a merging and blending of identity and accountability which must make you another man's servant in a sense never morally safe outside the church of Christ." But still the church should not use its discipline to reclaim a wanderer on this "morally unsafe" ground, no matter how long or persistently he may wander. "O, consistency thou art a jewel!"

Again in speaking of personal Christian liberty, he says, "But this becoming all things to all men does not imply voluntary yoke fellowship and fraternal relations with avowed unbelievers On the contrary it is everywhere discouraged if not positively forbidden by every revelation of the mind of Christ to the church on this point." And now, behold what the church is directed to do by the revelation of the mind of Christ it is not wise or right to do according to the mind of Rev. Mr. Medbury. What is right in theory it would be wrong to put in practice!!

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

The impression made upon the mind in reading the essay is that its sentiments and reasoning are in the main correct, but the damaging clauses in respect to church discipline and anti-secret society specialists are sops thrown in to pacify the evil spirit of secretism. The fling at the only consistent advocates of what the essay concedes to be the correct and Scriptural principle in the matter, is but only another exhibition of the weakness of human nature under temptation.

The first Baptist was not that kind of a preacher. He laid the ax to the root of the tree and when that was destroyed the tree would fall. He was not so inconsistent as to strike the tree of evil heavy blows with one hand while he held it up with the other. There is no neutral ground on this question, and those who attempt to occupy such a place make themselves ridiculous; only the importance of the matter under consideration, when treated thus, calls for sorrow rather than mirth.

C. Quick.

Illinois—First Report of the New Lecturer.

Dear Cynosure:—God is manifestly with us in Whiteside county. In spite of the cold weather and Masonic opposition I have been enabled in the three weeks I have been here to deliver ten lectures and eight sermons, and have at this time Jan. 3rd, three or four weeks' work ahead.

Have lectured in Round Grove twice; once in Green's school-house, town of Ustick; twice at Union Grove Station; twice at Prairie Center; once in the Cowan school-house, Ustick, and twice in Unionville; sometimes to large, and sometimes to small, but always to attentive audiences.

The lodge has not failed to use its most common and persuasive arguments, private slander, public abuse through the medium of the press, threats of mobbing, etc., for which we thank God and take courage, well knowing that such arguments harm only the cause that employs them. We can well afford to stand such methods of warfare as long as our enemies can afford to use them.

On Sunday morning, Dec. 15th, I preached in the Baptist church, Morrison, by invitation of Bro. Russell, the pastor, who has treated me very kindly.

I had been invited by Eld. J. R. Heath to occupy his pulpit in the Protestant Methodist church in the evening, but before evening came he withdrew his invitation. On the evening of the 18th I preached in the U. B. church at Fenton Center, where Bro. J. L. Harrison, the pastor, had just begun a series of revival meetings. On the morning and evening of Sunday, the 22nd, I had the privilege of occupying the temporarily vacant pulpit of the Presbyterian church, Morrison, by courtesy of Bro. J. M. Snyder, one of the elders, who also kindly granted me the privilege of preaching there the following Lord's day. This offended the craft and on Monday Mr. Richard Ely, who acted as their agent, informed Bro. Robert Paley that I would not be allowed to occupy the pulpit on the next Sunday. Further, there appeared the same week an article in the Sentinel for which we have cause only to be thankful, since its abuse injures only the cause that begot it. God also proved himself more than a match for his enemies, when on the next Lord's day morning I was again permitted to speak in his name in the Presbyterian church. On the afternoon of the 22d I preached to the little band of separatists who worship at Bro. Paley's, and partook with them of the Supper of our Lord. It was good to be there. I preached again at Bro. Paley's on the afternoon of the 29th, and in the evening at the

M. E. church at Cottonwood, having spoken in the morning at the Presbyterian church in Morrison as before said.

My lectures have been mainly on Masonic oaths, and on the nature of the Masonic government, and its relation to the "outer and profane world."

Let us pray honestly and earnestly that God may bless the truth sown that we may see not only the sprouting germ, but "the full corn in the ear." J. F. BROWNE.

THE MENOMONIE, WIS., MEETINGS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I will not wait to see in your columns what I had hoped, an account of Bro. Ronayne's lectures here in Menomonie last week, from the facile pen of Bro. Stoddard, who was here to aid us with his presence and good counsel, or of Bro. Ronayne himself. Well may they say, "By the grace of God, we came; we saw; we conquered."

The friends of the cause here were well persuaded of one thing beforehand: either, that the Masons would stay away, and if possible induce the crowd to do the same thing; or, putting on a bold front, they would turn out, and the audience be large, leaning strongly to the latter opinion, because the Masons got such a stirring up for breaking their promise to come out and hearken to Stoddard a year ago, on the flimsy pretense that a special lodge meeting "previously appointed" kept them away. The broken promises were made on the very day of the lecture; and though the Master of the lodge declared the meeting was previously appointed, one Mason, at least, has bragged that the meeting was appointed to prevent them hearing Bro. Stoddard. That is the sort of "misunderstanding" between them about the matter. But the Master was favored with a standing invitation for himself and all his craftsmen to come and hear, if any more of our lecturers came along.

After declaring that "the attacks of Mr. Ames against Masonry were like the buzzing of a fly about a great, good-natured elephant, and would only increase the membership of the lodge," the editor of the Dunn Co. News and quite a number of other Masons came out to see the elephant tickled by Bro. Ronayne. The leading ones "planked themselves down" near the platform, for the full benefit of the pleasing operation. And they looked very good natured and joined in the roar of laughter as Bro. R. "punched them with a particularly sharp stick." He showed so clearly from Masonic authorities that Masonry is a Christless religion, and the ceremonies of the lodge a system of lies, tomfoolery and blasphemy, and is closely identical with ancient sun worship or old Baalism, that even infidels openly declare that Masonry and Christianity are in total antagonism with each other; and many men declare they never will be Masons if they must be put through such mockery; and many declare they believe every word he said was true. The stale and staple operations of the lodge will have no power of attraction for them now they have been permitted to see the elephant just as he appears in the lodge.

The good-natured fellows seemed, however, to conclude that Bro. R. was giving them a little too much of a good thing, and so after the first evening they took a back seat for the cultivation of good nature under a tickling more at arm's length. But Bro. R. can throw sharp sticks at long range, and so the elephant had a splendid opportunity for the exercise of serenity and equanimity. One of our Masonic editors has come out with the following quotation: "The Masons will never dare to hold up their heads again in Menomonie," and says "Bosh!" No attempt does he make to deny or answer Mr. Ronayne. The same with our other Masonic editor, but he quotes from an alleged address of George Washington to a lot of Masons, a few tame compliments, but omits to tell us that in a letter to a clergyman he declared that he had visited the lodge but twice in thirty years.

The Baalistic and totally anti-Christian character of Masonry is just what the churches and the people must be made to see. And when the ministers and editors shall see it and fearlessly declare it, the days of the lodge will speedily end. May the Lord hasten the good time.

Let Bro. R.'s new book be widely circulated and faithfully read.

A NEW AUXILIARY—YOLO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

GRAFTON, Yolo Co., Cal., Dec. 25, 1878.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I will inform the readers of the Cynosure, that we have had another course of lectures in Woodland by Rev. B. A. Hill, of Eldorado. Though the audience was not very large on account of the very severe north wind and cold prevailing all three nights, yet some came twenty-five miles, showing they have a heart in the cause. Bro. Hill made a good many strong points against Masonry, and gave opportunity to reply; though there were Masons present every night, yet they all kept silence. He also challenged the fraternity to bring forth a champion for a debate, but the challenge was not heeded. The last day in the afternoon, December 12th, we organized a county association auxiliary to the Christian Association opposed to secret societies, elected the proper officers, and voted to meet subject to the call of the president and secretary at Capay Valley, Yolo county, at which time a constitution and by-laws should be adopted; a committee was appointed to draft and report them. Several lively and telling speeches were made, especially one by an old soldier of the Cross. Members of the Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan, Dunkers, and United Brethren churches enrolled their names. United sentiment and brotherly feeling, a sense of duty and willingness to perform it in spite of the opposition and difficulties pervaded all. Three seceding Masons also joined the Association.

May God bless the cause, and may other counties now follow the example of Yolo, that by next spring we may have a large delegation to a State convention and California may follow in line with her eastern sister States in this great reform and cause of Christ. PHIL. BECK.

FROM SOUTHERN INDIANA.

OAKLAND CITY, Ind., December 30, 1878

EDITOR CYNOSURE—Dear Sir: The seed sown last July by E. Ronayne is ripening unto harvest. Some fell in good ground, and will bear an hundred fold. Some fell in doubtful soil and has experienced the denial of a healthful mental germination. However, some are bold to speak and work against the "powers of darkness" who before were too timid to acknowledge the dictates of conscience struggling for moral freedom. Thus the cause of reform is slowly but surely gathering to its support those who by nature and culture are willing to be guided by the holy injunction, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Occasionally one may be found who will scoff at what he pleases to call Ronayne's perjury. Of course this implies that Freemasonry has been revealed cleverly to the "profanes." But if he (Ronayne) has given the "dogs" and "cowans" the secrets of the "old handmaid," then by virtue of what code of morals is it that the enunciation of truth can perjure a man? Such an illogical accusation falls flat from the mouth of him who spews it out.

There are those among us who would have the church conform to the dictum of the lodge. These are they, who casting from them the memory of the gracious declaration, "I ever spake openly to the world," are longing for the interdiction of all but the Hierophant. Disintegration and decay is in the heart of that church whose ecclesiastics are gone over to anti-Christ. "He that entereth not by the door into the sheep-fold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber."—John 10: 1. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16: 15. "To require that a candidate profess his belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible or a state of future rewards and punishments is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry."—Chase's Digest on Masonic Laws, page 206. "These three degrees thus form a perfect and harmonious whole; nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more, which the soul of man requires."—Sickels' Freemason's Monitor, p. 98.

Can the Christian minister suggest anything more which the soul of man requires? "Except a man be born of water and the spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

Yours respectfully,
W. LEROY LEISTER.

WHERE DOES THE MONEY GO?

MR. EDITOR:—I have seen several statements showing that secret lodges take in a great deal more money than they pay out.

Now what becomes of this money? Do some of the members get up an inner ring among themselves, with a new grip not known to the rest of the members, and put half the funds in their own pockets? What prevents the officers of the lodge from doing this? If a few members of the lodge should play the same game upon the whole that the whole plays upon the community at large, nothing could prevent them from fleecing every widow's son. MORE LIGHT.

WHAT'S THAT HE'S DOING?

CAMERON, W. Va.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—In looking over a late number (Dec. 5) of the Cynosure, in your columns of religious intelligence, my eye fell upon a paragraph in which is the following: "He, (naming a clerical friend) is now laboring in the holiness work [italics mine] in New York." Now, I confess on reading this sentence it does not appear as if there ought to be anything "hard to be understood" about it. But after the tricky ways of this wicked world have pressed themselves upon one's notice a little he naturally feels that it is as well to be cautious (no reference to the Knights of Pythias) in the exercise of his gift of the interpretation of tongues. Noting that the brother's name is introduced by the prefix "Rev.," the reader might suppose that, whereas preaching is his regular business, that he improved any opportunities he might have had to preach the Gospel in the place of his sojourn. All this would be simple, natural and dutiful, since even the apostle Paul proclaimed his religion at various places in his travels, in some cases, indeed, without a formal invitation from the regular clergy of the cities he visited. But if that only was the meaning I could not say the term was happily selected. It appears to me to be the special work of all who take upon themselves the ministry of Christ's word to press upon all their hearers to come to Christ for salvation from sin and all its consequences. But the connection in which the terms are used above would seem to imply that something different was meant from the ordinary work of promulgating the precious Gospel.

Further, I do not perceive that there would be any special impropriety in saying of the most humble convert to the Christian faith who had turned from the world and its vanities to cleave to Christ as his only hope of salvation that he was engaged in a "work of holiness."

In short, is it to be engaged in a "work of holiness" to be doing anything different from the life of love and obedience characteristic of all God's people here below?

If not, is the difference a difference of degree or a difference of species in the thing itself?

CHURCH FAIRS IN ALLEGHENY CITY, PENNSYLVANIA.

ALLEGHENY, Pa., Dec. 25, 1878.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wish to put it on record that I am the "watchful gentleman" referred to in the United Presbyterian of December 19th, in which my "spirit" is said to be vexed by "trifles." And when those who know church fairs and "mum sociables" best, are pleased to call them trifles why should I "vex" my "spirit" attempting to give them either name or character? Dread of the faithful Cynosure is revealed in the sentence, "Does the Cynosure think that the publication of such peevish fault-finding will tend to edification?" If that which monopolizes a goodly portion of the Christian's time will not bear publication how must the participants have been edified with its enactment in the sanctuary? I am surprised that such "trifles" should occupy a large share of the attention of Zion's watchmen. You could hardly attend service in any one of the six churches in Allegheny and not hear a dissertation on their low and ebbing spirituality by the ministers who are first and last in promoting these ridiculous sideshows, that are doing more to draw the attention from stated ordinances, than any other influence. Even Christmas, a popish ordinance, usurping the time of the regular weekly prayer meeting—to Christians almost sacred—for the purpose of catering to the flesh, and impressing upon the youthful mind that it is better to sacrifice than obey.

Among my brethren I stand almost alone in this matter, and perhaps am in darkness; if so I hope the gentlemanly editor of the United Presbyterian who denied me the publication of this reply to his own item, will enlighten me, and give us all a word in favor of church fairs and festivals. THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

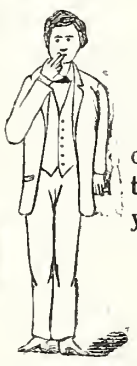
A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.



(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

[Usually the password and explanation form a sentence, thus: Our cause, pass-word, is onward, explanation.] In entering the lodge you advance to the outside door, and give the signal thus: Two distinct raps (sentinel lifts the wicket) and to the officer having charge of the door give the password. This will admit you to the ante-room, where you will clothe yourself in proper regalia, advance to the inside door and give the signal thus: SIGNAL: One loud rap; three lighter ones, and to the officer in charge give the explanation when you will enter the lodge-room advance to the center of the room, face the Past Worthy Chief Templar and give the salutation thus:

SALUTATION.

Raise open right hand, with palm outward and lay it on left breast over heart, and then let it fall gently but quickly to the side.

ANSWER BY P. W. C. T.

First and second fingers of right hand over closed lips a moment then hand drops to side easily and gently yet quickly, when you will take your seat.

In visiting a lodge, at the inside door you will give, in addition, your name and the number of the lodge to which you belong.

Should you wish to retire before the lodge is regularly closed you will advance to the center of the room, and facing the Worthy Vice Templar, give the salutation, who, if in order for you to retire, will give the response, when you will obtain the retiring password from the Deputy Marshal, give this to the Inside Guard and pass out.

Worthy Chief Templar. We have also a voting sign, thus.

VOTING SIGN.

Right hand raised perpendicularly.

Worthy Chief Templar. The Marshal will now give you the grip.

GRIP.

Grasp right hands naturally and press thumb on second finger between second and third joints. See cut.

Answer, same.

Worthy Chief Templar. The members will now form our circle of unity. (Three raps, all rise and form a circle joining hands around the candidate and officers; the Worthy Chief Templar, Right Hand Supporter and Left Hand Supporter on one side of the fountain or table on which are the glasses of water, the Worthy Marshal and Deputy Marshal with the candidate on the opposite side and in front of the officers named.)

Worthy Chief Templar. By the authority of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, I proclaim this person a member of this lodge; and he is hereby declared to be entitled to all the rights, privileges and protection guaranteed to members by our Constitution, by-laws, rules and usages. [The Right Hand Supporter and Left Hand Supporter hand the Worthy Chief Templar, Worthy Marshal, Deputy Marshal and candidate each a glass of water.] And in this pure element of water, God's only beverage, we mutually pledge a life-long fidelity to our sacred cause. [Officers and candidate drink.]

ODES.

1. AIR—"There's much good cheer."

Fill all your sparkling glasses high,
With health that wine can never buy;
Cold water, full of strength and life,
Will nerve our weakest for the strife.
Flash out a draught of water cold,
With cheerful faces, young and old,
'Twas given a blessing from the sky,
Then fill your sparkling glasses high!

2. AIR—"Sparkling and bright."

Sparkling and bright, in its liquid light,
Is the water in our glasses;
'Twill give you health, 'twill give you wealth,
Ye lads and rosy lasses.
Oh! then resign your ruby wine,
Each smiling son and daughter;
There's nothing so good for the youthful blood,
Or sweet as the sparkling water.

Worthy Chief Templar, to Candidate. Thus you are surrounded by friends upon whom you have fraternal claims; this circle which you see around us being the emblem of perpetual friendship. The union of hands signifies the union of hearts, and purpose and effort in our great work. Before you join hands with us we will invest you, as all worthy members should be, with proper regalia. [The Right Hand or Left Hand Supporter, or both, put the regalia on the candidate or candidates.] It is hoped you will ever wear this badge with pleasure and profit to yourself, and honor to this institution and the cause of temperance.

You will now take your place and form a part of our circle (Worthy Chief Templar and the Supporters resume their respective stations.)

Worthy Chief Templar. Now, as we stand united around our common altar, having plighted our faith together beneath our sacred standard, behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. May the pleasant ties that now bind us together be severed only in death.

ODE.

AIR—"Zion."

Hail we now our new made member,
Linked with us in friendship's chain;
Kind and faithful to each other,
Love will soothe our woes and pain;
Thus progressing,
Blessings follow in our train.

Worthy Chief Templar (one rap, recess.)

The candidate during recess is or should be introduced to each member.

CLOSING CEREMONIES.*

Worthy Chief Templar (one rap calling to order). Worthy Financial Secretary, what are the receipts of the evening?

Worthy Financial Secretary. The receipts are —— (gives amount.)

Worthy Chief Templar. Has the Treasurer received the same?

Worthy Treasurer. I have, Worthy Chief Templar.

Worthy Chief Templar. (Three raps, all rise.)

Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy officers and members, we are about to close this meeting. I thank you

*After the intermission at the close of the initiation, the regular order of business is attended to, the first item (7th. Order of Business) being Propositions for Membership; next 8th. Reports of Special Committees (Relief, sickness, violation of rules, etc.) 9th. Charges preferred and referred to proper committees. 10th. Report of Officers. 11th. Application for Degrees. 12th. Special business, such as election and installation of officers. 13th. Unfinished business from previous meeting. 14th. Communications and new business. 15th. for your presence and attention this evening: let us now listen to parting counsel.

Worthy Vice Templar. Brothers and sisters, let us not forget the principles enjoined upon us by our order. At our altar we have given our most sacred promises to abstain from all that can intoxicate, and by all just means in our power to banish intemperance. We desire the presence of all and shall expect you here at our next meeting.

Worthy Chief Templar. We must now separate, to mingle again in the pursuits and temptations of life. In your respective callings, shun the way of evil doers, and exhibit by your integrity that the labors and teachings of our lodge are not in vain.

We will now sing our closing ode.

CLOSING ODES.

1. AIR—"Sicilian Hymn."

Heavenly Father, give thy blessing,
While we now this meeting end;
On our minds each truth impressing,
That may to thy glory tend.
Save from all intoxication;
From its fountain may we flee;
When assailed by strong temptation,
Put our trust alone in thee.

2. AIR—"Cheney."

Great God! hear thou our prayer to-night
The foes of temperance may be brave;
Guide all our faltering steps aright,
Our fellow men from ruin save.

3. AIR—"Ward."

May friendship's chain be ever bright,
And charity and love increase;
May Providence protect the right,
Reclaim the wrong, establish peace.

Worthy Chief Templar. You will now give attention to the closing service by the Worthy Chaplain. (The Chaplain may pronounce a benediction, offer an extempore prayer or use the following:)

PRAYER.

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank thee for the privilege of the present meeting and for whatever good we may have been enabled to accomplish. Pardon, we entreat thee, whatever in our present intercourse may have been displeasing to thee, in thought, word or deed. Deepen every conviction of duty; and strengthen every earnest resolution of amendment. Accompany us to our several homes, and keep us and all our loved ones there, ever under the shadow of thy wing. Guide us by thy counsels while we live, and finally receive us into that temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

Worthy Chief Templar (one rap). The meeting is closed.

Degree Templar. Vice Templar, is the Guard correct in the degree word? (Vice Templar reports)

Degree Templar. The Vice Templar, with the Past Degree Templar will prepare for examination (three raps, all rise). [The members all march in line to the Vice Templar, give him the subordinate pass-word (1st degree word) then pass to the Past Degree Templar, and give him the word of the degree, then to the Degree Templar and give the degree salutation after which the officers report as follows:]

Vice Templar. Degree Templar, all are correct in the subordinate password and explanation.

Past Degree Templar. Degree Templar, all are correct in the degree word.

Degree Templar. Your duty is to give attention to all who make the proper signal at the outer gate of the Temple; to admit those who give you the password of the subordinate lodge; to see that members are properly clothed in regalia, and informed that the Temple is working in the Degree of Fidelity; that order is preserved in the ante-room and that candidates and visitors are made welcome. Be faithful to your official duties. (Sentinel retires.)

Degree Templar (rising). We meet here this evening for the purpose of conferring the Degree of Fidelity and transacting such other business as may properly be brought before the temple, and to aid in securing the prosperity and perpetuity of our noble order. Let us attend to these duties with true fraternal forbearance and charity; ever mindful that to err is human; to forgive, divine. The members will please sing our opening ode. (Three raps, all rise.)

OPENING ODE.

AIR—"Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching."

Brothers, life has glorious heights for our youthful feet to climb;
There are shining crowns that we may work and win:
Like excelsior, a cry, ringing down from summits high,
Sings to us through all the revel's wildest din.
Rise! oh, rise to nobler manhood,
Dash the tempting cup away,
And with purpose, firm and sure,
Let your vows for aye endure,
As you take the onward, upward, temperance way.

We will lose no friendly grasp, we will never turn aside,
From the youthful friendships formed and nourished here,
But with manly purpose strong, let us sing a grander song,
As we pledge anew in accents strong and clear.
Rise! oh, rise to nobler manhood, etc.

Degree Templar. You will now give attention to the Chaplain.

[The Chaplain offers an extempore or the following:]

PRAYER.

Chaplain. Our Heavenly Father, God of the pure in heart, we ask that we may be worthy the promise made unto the faithful in all ages, in all climes. We claim the promise of thy presence where two or three are gathered together in thy name. We want strong hearts to do the great work of self-conquest; we need faith to believe that thou art faithful to those who are true to themselves, and who make room for thee in their hearts. Let us praise thee in our lives, as well as with our lips, never doubting thy promises of reward to those who remain steadfast to the end. We ask that each heart may be strengthened here to-night; each soul be made more noble; and that all may dedicate themselves anew to this cause, and go forth truer men—truer women—because of thy rich blessing upon this meeting. And thine shall be the glory forever. Amen.

Degree Templar. This Temple is now open for its appropriate business (one rap).

Degree Templar. The Guard will now notify the members in the ante-room that the Temple is now open.

Degree Templar. The Financial Secretary will call the roll of officers; the Marshal will rise and respond.

Degree Templar. The Secretary will read the journal of the last meeting of the Degree of Fidelity.

[Applications, and balloting on candidates for Degree of Fidelity are next in order.]

Our Mail.

Mrs. S. McConoughey, Atkinson, Ill., writes:

"What are the ladies doing for Utah? I think as polygamy is a sin against God, and a crime against society, no polygamist should be permitted to vote or hold office in our nation. The Mormon women who voluntarily renounce polygamy should be provided for (and allowed to keep their children) out of the property of the polygamist."

R. M. Conway, Xenia, O., writes:

"I am thoroughly interested in this great and glorious work. Masonry appears to have a strong hold here."

Rev. J. R. Chambers, Ward, Kansas, writes:

"For eighteen years (half my life) I have been a steady opposer of all organized secrecy, and I am now more than ever convinced of its evil and dangerous character. I am doing all I can to keep the monster throttled, so far as the United Brethren church is concerned. To this glorious work I welcome the Cynosure, and bid it God speed in banishing Baal worship from the land."

S. B. Houston, McConnellsburg, Pa., writes:

"I am glad to know the reformation is making progress. May the day be hastened when secretism, like slavery, shall be one of the things of the past."

S. C. Kimball, Center Strafford, N. H., writes:

"The new religious caption, 'Masonic Churches,' is a capital hit and a true title. Long live the Cynosure."

Job Harman, Sen., Leasburg, Missouri, writes:

"I would be very glad if there could be a few lectures delivered in our county."

Mary Barney, Genesee, N. Y., writes:

"I am still doing all I can to spread the paper, sending them around as read, and urging the people to take it. I am more opposed than ever to secret societies."

Rev. S D. Stone, Clay Center, Kansas, writes:

"We prize the Cynosure highly in our family and look with pleasure for its weekly visits."

Rev. F.M. Spencer, Leavenworth, Kan., writes:

"I do not know what the Knights of Honor are, but the chaplain they have elected makes no pretension to religion."

S. L. Cook, Albion, Ind., writes:

"I am in Marshall county, and am having good attendance and attention. Some of the craft are greatly stirred, and say they will see whether or not I tell the truth. One member lost his 'jewel.'"

Joseph Catterlin, Kewanee, Ill., writes:

"I have been a subscriber ever since the Cynosure started, and I expect to be one as long as I live. The last number is worth one year's subscription. I commenced this war against Masonry more than forty years ago. I won't have to fight much longer, for if the good Lord spares my life until the third day of September, 1879, I shall be ninety years of age."

John Gould, Hampton, Iowa, writes:

"I take great interest in the news of the day, both as it relates to church and state. The priests of our town dare not say Masonry in the pulpit. They are afraid of their bread and butter or supplies being cut off. But I am not afraid to show my colors anywhere, in the church or out of it. I shall die soon. I am already eighty-three years old, and mean to die an honest, Christian man."

Henry de Jongh, Rochester, N. Y., writes:

"To all who desire to aid in the upbuilding of the Saviour's kingdom:

"A friendly appeal is sent from a congregation, few in numbers and of small means, who are in need of a place of worship. Wishing to serve the God of our fathers according to the Holy Scriptures, we dare not resort to such means as fairs, festivals and the like, but should any be willing to make a sacrifice for the cause of Christ, and contribute toward the building of a plain church for this True Dutch Reformed congregation, it will be thankfully received by H. de Jongh, 47, or J. H. Zonnerylle, 283 St. Joseph street, Rochester, N. Y. And the Lord of hosts the king of glory shall have all the praise. (Other papers please copy.)"

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 9, 1879

ELDER J. L. BARLOW.—This brother is chosen pastor of the Menomonie (Wis.) Baptist church, where he is to have Capt. Wilson for his parishioner. This rejoices us. Mr. Barlow is, every way, a respectable man and minister of Christ; a Baptist, devoted to the tenets of his denomination, who has for years co-operated with Christians of other denominations in turning men from lodge vanities to God. Rev. Mr. Ames, who leaves that church, and who has suffered a malignant persecution from Masons, will soon find some other field of usefulness where gentlemanly bearing, and real worth will doubtless be appreciated, and his success be all the greater, and his gold all the purer for the furnace he has been through.

REV. M. W. JORDAN, Cortland, Illinois, noticing the information we gave of the suppression of history by Zell's and Johnson's encyclopedias, asks for similar information concerning Chambers and others.

We have not at hand the means of greatly extending our list, and will thank those who have access to the books in question to give the information asked by Mr. Jordan. If we have a secret army of Masonic, Mormon and papist spies mutilating books, suppressing and falsifying history, bribing publishers, etc., etc., it is time the American people were awakened to the fact. Poisoning wells by night is less dangerous and less dishonorable. Will Prof. Bookwalter find and give the name of the party who mutilated Wayland's Moral Philosophy.

JOHN LEMLEY, who formerly owned and sold the Golden Censer, Rockford, Ill., is accused by the purchasers of that paper of representing himself and family as in a poor and suffering condition, while he is worth many thousand dollars, deposited in bank and loaned on mortgage. The facts are given and his funds described with minuteness and detail which leave little or no chance of mistake or error. As beggary, predicated on false statements of poverty and want, with harrowing appeals to the sympathy of pious and benevolent persons, is a crime against human charity, and calculated to destroy confidence in human nature itself, it is to be hoped that Mr. Lemley may be led to repentance and restoring the money thus criminally drawn by false pretences from piety and compassion.

REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER has compiled and issued a very neat volume entitled "The Autobiography of Deacon Ichabod Washburne," late of Worcester, Mass. Mr. Washburne was exceedingly interesting in conversation and the sketches of his early childhood, given by himself, are an intensely interesting narrative. I began to read it to a grand-daughter of twelve years, and had gone but little way before her attention was fixed and her whole mind engrossed in the story so that she was unwilling to have it broken off. And the religious experience of Mr. Washburne is so quietly inwoven in the narrative that the mind is insensibly borne along to Christ. The son of a sailor, who died of fever caught by relieving a ship in quarantine, at the early age of twenty-eight; an apprentice boy; mechanic; Senator; and philanthropist who gave thousands in charity, his life is full of instruction and well worth purchase and perusal. D. Lathrop & Co. send it, post paid, for one dollar.

THE NEW INFIDEL DEPARTURE.—The (Chicago) Inter ocean gives a column to "A Preacher that was Located," calling on Dr. Thomas, Swing & Co. to head a new society to be called "Our Society," in which there is to be neither creed nor rule, but each is to believe and do what he likes. And the writer assures these men of backing and support in the following style: "These advanced thinkers can safely obey their consciences, for such is the love of God's truth to-day, that in every considerable town there are Liberals, Unitarians, Universalists, infidels and atheists to insure any man who will strike vigorous and effective blows at the orthodox churches, a good living salary." This article seems to be no hoax, but the writer is in downright earnest. We will endeavor to give the whole of this extraordinary article in next week's Cynosure. It confirms what we have said more than once, that these men (Thomas, Swing & Co.) are the drift-wood in the advance wave of apostacy spoken of by Paul as preceding the coming of Christ.

PRIMITIVE BAPTISTS, MISSISSIPPI.

Do not fail to read in the Religious Intelligence of this number the very striking resolution of a body representing twenty-one churches in the State of Mississippi. We think it surpasses all the literature of our reform, and as emanating from the old, original white population, and from a people whose most prominent characteristic is firm adherence to their convictions, their action is an epoch in the reform. We hope Mr. Tapley's advice will meet their approval.

From Mr. Tapley's letter.

I would say to the brethren of the Primitive Baptist church, I rejoice to see your bold stand against secret orders. I hope that many other churches will follow your example in this respect. The churches which have determined to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness" are forming a national union. This union or alliance is called "The Associated Churches of Christ." The churches which join this alliance do not change their denomination, customs or doctrines; but only pass a resolution to unite with this alliance and forward their names to the Christian Cynosure. Will the Rev. J. C. Johnson, A. J. Coleman, N. Eubanks and other Baptist ministers send forward a list of all their churches which have resolved to keep free from all secret orders and wish to join the Associated Churches of Christ. I hope many of you will take the Christian Cynosure. It is an excellent paper, worth a great deal more than the money it costs.

ELI TAPLEY.

CHICAGO LAW AND MEDICAL SCHOOLS.

We were aware that Judge Booth and others connected with the Law School, were skeptics and unbelievers in the Bible, and that some of the medical professors were in the same predicament; but we were not aware that the students in some of these schools amused the classes by mock prayers to God, and that they are wont to speak of the necessity of a law regulating and (of course) licensing abortion to prevent the too rapid increase of population, and the nuisance of tramps. Such things are now said by one and another to be done. A medical student informs us that mock prayers are no novelty in the College where he is matriculated; and a graduate from the Law School last June, undertook to prove to us that the religion of Christ had not improved, but injured the system of law and jurisprudence among men. And that Christianity is not a part of the common law of England and the United States; or that it is so only in a remote and special sense, is said to be the doctrine taught by the law professors! They might as well teach that there is no such book as Blackstone.

What must increase pain and astonishment is that these law professors are in the catalogues of Chicago and Evanston (Baptist and Methodist) universities as a part of their regular faculties of instruction.

We hesitate not to say that if the facts stated in this article are true and without exaggeration, the pious Baptists and Methodists in Illinois and States adjacent, who have given their hard earnings by thousands on thousands to these universities, would turn from them with loathing as nests of infidelity where lawyers and physicians are intellectually and morally debauched and sent out to corrupt the villages where they may locate.

Will the evangelical ministers of Chicago inquire into these schools that these abuses may be corrected or shown not to exist, at least not to the extent alleged?

POPERY AND WORLDLING PROTESTANTS.

Of all reformers with which earth is cursed,
Those who reform reformers are the worst.

Leonard Woolsey Bacon, son of the ablest and most zealous Puritan in the world, Dr. L. Bacon, of New Haven, seems to have inherited nothing from his father but his love of dissent from reformers, while he claims to hold their principles. Young Woolsey began his ministerial career by taking charge of a Presbyterian church for which he wrote a liturgy and read prayers. This farce over, he has "swung round the circle," affecting a lordly independence, shunning every cross and truth which the world's heart opposes; and showing his bravery by attacking reforms and exposing their weaknesses and defects.

His last assault is made in the Christian Union on the "Old Catholic" movement in Germany, by which he merits, and doubtless enjoys the praises of the Romish press. The drift and tenor of his Christian Union letter is to show that Leonard Woolsey Bacon had the sagacity to see and predict, in the face of rejoicing Protestantism, that Dr. Dollinger's Old Catholic movement was a failure from the beginning. If he was paid by the De propaganda fide he could not belabor the dissenters from popery with a more hearty good will, or shun more cautiously any word or thought which would offend "THE MAN OF SIN."

The facts are, that the "Old Catholics," who had too much sense and manhood to vote the Pope infallible, had less light and faith than Luther, Huss or Wickliffe, though they too leaned on the civil arm; and, now that the radical party on which they leaned is gone out of power, the "Old Catholics" are to be deprived of their State stipends, and their ministers, still called priests, are to be thrown on God and the people for support. This is sifting them; throwing off from them their priests whom popery has made ignorant, and the burghers and politicians whom popery has made infidel. And as Leonard Woolsey Bacon sees things, not in the light of faith, but of worldly policy, he hails this furnace-trial of the "Old Catholics," not indeed as having any bearing for or against Christ, but as proving Leonard Woolsey Bacon more sagacious than the mass of Protestants who hailed the escape of the Old Catholics from the blasphemy of infallibility and the hell of the confessional.

Gideon's thirty-two thousand shrank to three hundred, and by this worldling's arithmetic Gideon's movement was an ignominious failure. We shall see what we shall see. The Old Catholic movement purged of hireling priest and infidel politician, may find strength in its weakness. And the Romish party which will not get back their state stipends, will be more or less crippled by the loss, and the people have some rays of light let in their Popish dungeon.

"As Cold Waters to a Thirsty Soul,"

"So is good news from a far country." A letter just in from good Bro. Beck, from Grafton, Yolo county, California, encloses three important papers, viz.: his report of the work, a letter from Bro. Lathrop, Hollister, San Benito county, and a letter from a young man in San Francisco, Henry Campias. The report appears in another place.

FROM MR. LATHROP TO MR BECK.

DEAR BROTHER:—"You once sent me a large lot of tracts. I read them and bought more. I have since sent one of a kind to a young man in San Francisco, who I think will turn out a good lecturer. He is a good looking man and a good talker. He finds eight more Antimasons to read them in turn; that makes ten times read. That is seed sown on good ground. I will send you his letter to me. I would not be surprised if he should prove to be a useful man among us. I never saw him but once; that was while waiting for the ferry boat to Oakland. As I sat down by him, he observed I wore a blue ribbon. "Yes," I replied, "I have been a temperance man from childhood; and what is more I am a rabid Antimason." He replied, "That is my fix." He said that a short time ago he took that side in a debate in a lyceum in Oakland against all the rest and fought it through alone. The question was, Is Freemasonry opposed to Christianity? After it was over he was highly complimented in the local paper the next day. He said his stock of knowledge for the fight came from a gift once received from somebody of one copy of the Cynosure, and two or three tracts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 25, 1878.

L. B. Lathrop, DEAR BROTHER:—I thank you for the papers and tracts and your kind letter, which came to hand last week. I have been so very busy that I could not find time to write. I have read partly the pamphlets. I like them very much indeed. I have also lent them to different parties and they feel astonished at such revelations. One lady told me that Masonry was a curse to the country, and that she didn't believe in them. Another lady said, "Why don't the ministers preach against them?" I think the reason is that the majority of them belong to the order. There are eight persons who are decided Antimasons. I am endeavoring to let them all read the tracts you sent me in turn.

And now a word about the lecturing business. My mind has been considerably stirred up about it, and I must be well posted in regard to the workings of the order. I should like to have the books you mentioned in your letter. I shall get them in time. I am willing to devote my time and talent in a cause that I know to be right. God will reward the just, and he will give grace to the humble, and he will protect the upright. Masonry is a terrible foe and an insidious enemy. I believe in exposing the wicked doings of the order. There must be a source of shame attached to it to render secrecy a necessity. I should like to hear a course of lectures, and to see this thing stirring up the minds of the people. Write soon. I will be glad to hear from you as soon as convenient. I have postponed my journey to New Zealand for the present.

In conclusion, we may be assured that He who clothes the lilies of the field and feeds the fowls of the air will not forget to make provision for His people. Let us ever look with hope and longing desire to that country where the glory of His presence shall be an everlasting light. Good night. From your brother in hope of life.

HENRY CAMPIAS.

—Elder J. F. Browne came in from his work in Whitesides county last Friday to attend the meeting of the committee on church co-operation and anti-lodge missions. He was in good health and full of hope and zeal for the work in this State. Let him be followed by our prayers.

—Bro. William Fenton of St. Paul, Minnesota, writes that he will respond to calls for lectures so far as he is able. He attended the Dodge county and State conventions and spoke with good effect.

—Bro. Hinman is one of the busiest of our reform workers. From Dec. 19th to 31st he spoke at Avon, Symsbury, Weatogue, Bloomfield, and Windsor, Connecticut, and Chicopee Falls, Mass., beside visiting several other points. At one or two places he was locked out. But we will not too much anticipate his report which waits for our next. Bro. P. Bacon of Weatogue, writes:

Bro. Hinman has been lecturing several times in this vicinity and has awakened quite a revival of Antimasonic interest, and many of the people seem to be hungering after that kind of truth. I hope that he may be invited to labor in every town in Connecticut. I trust all our friends will send for him. I assure you he is a power in this work.

—Secretary Stoddard and Bro. Ronayne attended a meeting in the Swedish M. E. church, corner of Oak and Market streets, Chicago, January 3rd. The evening was intensely cold, but an audience of from 100 to 150 persons were present. The exercises continued about two hours and were deeply interesting. The pastor, Rev. C. G. Anderson, spoke a few very appropriate words at the close, expressing much satisfaction and the hope that other and similar meetings might be held. This is a vigorous, working, temperance church, with a membership of three hundred, only two of whom belong to the Masons and one to the Odd-fellows. They have a fine church property and a man of God to go in and out before them, who is not willing to allow the lodge to dictate to the church of Christ as to whether secret societies shall or shall not be discussed in the pulpit. Bro. Anderson says the Swedish Methodist church in America is comparatively free from the lodge leprosy, and only one of their ministers so far as he knows is a Mason, and that one is on the Pacific coast. This is encouraging.

—Kindred to the churches of Alabama reported in our religious department, is one in Westmoreland, Oneida Co., N. Y., of the same denominational connection. Organized at its outset upon the basis of "No fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," it has maintained a faithful and unflinching testimony up to the present time. Rev James Bicknell has been its pastor for forty-three years, and the words from his brethren in the South will greatly cheer and encourage his heart. Doubtless there are many others scattered among the different States, who ought to swell the numbers of this great anti-lodge movement and add their names as a testimony to give strength to the cause. Let us hear often from them of the dealings of the Lord with them; and also have the pleasure of placing their names on the roll of the Associated Churches of Christ. Write, brethren, for your paper, and cheer one another in this battle-day of the Lord.

1879–80.

PLANS FOR THE NEXT YEAR'S CAMPAIGN.

CHICAGO, January 2, 1879.

Bro. Barlow and others have spoken through the Cynosure of greater want of system in carrying on our reform work. Their remarks were timely, in a good spirit, and contained practical hints. There are some difficulties which these brethren mentioned, and there are others still which a more general experience in the field work would have suggested. I do not deem it necessary to enumerate these obstacles, but simply to say that in my judgment they can be readily overcome. As an advance step toward this very desirable end, I recommend the following programme for State meetings for the fall and winter campaign of 1879–80: Wisconsin, September 2, 3, 4; Minnesota, 9, 10, 11; Iowa, 16, 17, 18; Nebraska, 23, 24, 25; Kansas, September 30 and October 1, 2; Missouri, 7, 8, 9; Illinois, 14, 15, 16; Indiana, 21, 22, 23; Michigan, 28, 29, 30; Ohio, November 4, 5, 6; Western Pennsylvania, 11, 12, 13; Eastern Pennsylvania, 18, 19, 20; New Jersey, 25, 26, 27; Connecticut, December 2, 3, 4; Massachusetts, 9, 10, 11; New Hampshire, 16, 17, 18; Vermont, 23 24, 25; Maine, January, 6, 7, 8, 1880; Rhode Island, 13, 14, 15; New York, 20, 21, 22; and the National Convention in Washington, D. C., February 20, 21, 22, closing up the series of conventions with the third degree by Edmond Ronayne in the national Capitol, on the evening of the birthday of the "Father of his Country." Such an arrangement would enable the National Secretary and General Agent to attend and assist at all the State meetings at a comparatively small expense, and would give to all who desired ample opportunity to secure the services of Bro. Ronayne at much less expense. It would also enable interested parties in each State to make the necessary business and other preparations and to thoroughly advertise by bills and through the local press. County and local associations could arrange to hold meetings and appoint delegates to State associations, and each State could provide for a representation at the "Nation's Heart," which is very desirable and which to me seems entirely practicable. With our present constituency and with the added results of more than one year's labors, we shall be able, with the help of God, to meet all the requirements of a great national gathering which will challenge the respect of politicians and ecclesiastics throughout our entire country.

To meet the inevitable expenses, I would further recommend that each Anti-mason throughout the country send at least one dollar to the treasurer of his own State Association to aid in defraying the cost of the conventions and other expenses in such manner as should be ordered by the executive committee of the several States, and a further sum of twenty-five cents to the general treasurer to be applied by the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association in paying expenses of the National Convention and the general field work.

I make the above suggestions which to me seem practicable and which would if carried out give great enlargement and tend to strengthen and systematize our work. This would not interfere with meetings to be held during the remainder of the present season, nor with the arrangements or work of any one now in the field. Bro. Hinman could go right on with his work, organize State Associations, hold conventions, etc., and so could other brethren on other fields. If friends in Canada should respond favorably, as they are beginning to do, their field could be visited during the spring or summer months, and States that have not yet held annual meetings this season need make no change in their plans.

If the above plan should meet with favor and be informally adopted it would require time to settle the details and this is one reason why I begin thus early. Will friends generally and especially officers in anti-secrecy associations give their views on this plan through the Cynosure, or write me at 221 W. Madison st., Chicago. Respectfully yours,

J. P. STODDARD.

The Clear Vision.

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

I did not dream. I never knew
What charms our sternest seasons wore,
Was never yet the sky so blue
Was never earth so fair before.
Till now I never saw the glow
Of sunset on yon hills of snow,
And never learned the honghs designs
Of beauty in its leafless lines.

Did ever such a morning break,
As that my eastern windows see?
Did ever such a moonlight take
Wierd photographs of shrub and tree?
Rang ever bells so wild and fleet,
The music of the winter street?
Was ever yet a sound by half
So merry as your schoolboy's laugh?

O, Earth! with gladness overfraught,
No added charm thy face hath found;
Within my heart the change is wrought,
My footsteps make enchanted ground.
From couch of pain and curtained room,
Forth to thy light and air I come,
To find in all that meets my eyes
The freshness of a glad surprise.

Fair seem these wintry days and soon
Shall blow the warm west winds of spring,
To set the unbound rills in tune,
And hither urge the blue bird's wing.
The vale shall laugh in flowers, the woods
Grow misty green with leafing buds,
And violets and wild flowers sway
Against the throbbing heart of May.

Break forth my lips, in praise, and own
The wiser love severely kind;
Since richer for its chastening grown
I see, whereas I once was blind.
The world, O Father! hath not wronged
With loss the life by thee prolonged;
But still, with every added year,
More beautiful thy works appear!

As thou hast made thy world without,
Make thou more fair thy world within;
Shine through the lingering clouds of doubt,
Rebuke its haunting shapes of sin;
Fill, brief or long, my granted span
Of life with love to thee and man;
Strike when thou wilt the hour of rest,
But let my last days be my best!

Sam Bowen's Dream.

[From Illustrated Temperance Tales.]

"It's true, Joe," said the plowman to his companion, a lad of about eighteen, as they were plodding their way homeward with their horses after the work of the day was done:

"As true as if I read it out of a book to you; and since I've begun I'll tell ye the whole matter. Well, now, you was asking me at noon why I gave up my beer last harvest, and I told ye it was along of a dream I had; and so it was.

"I remember my old grandmother used to say dreams come from the devil, but I do not believe it—leastways my dream came from a very different quarter, I reckon, the one I'm tellin' you on.

"I daresay it's no news to you that I was a pretty hard drinker not so long ago. Aye, I was one, surely—I liked it. I thought it done me good, and I'd got so I could take a sight more than most men without seemin' a turn the worse for it. And when I'd got that far, have it I would. My wife she used to say, 'Sam,' she'd say, 'there's better than half your money gone afore I see the color of the rest of it; you've been at the Spread Eagle every night the last month! I do keep up my head,' she'd say, 'and never let the neighbors say a word about you in my hearing, but talk they will, and come to want we shall, if you keep on like this.'

"'Let 'em talk,' says I, 't'aint no manner of matter to me. And as for you and the children, you none of you know what it is to go dry over such work as I've got to do. Potterin' about the house you want nothin' but a drop of tea chance times. Don't you start naggin' at me, or it'll be the worse for you.'

"So I used to shut the missus' mouth pretty quick, and when I'd had a taste of that sort of talk I never used to hurry myself home of a night for a good bit for fear she should think I paid any heed to what she'd said. Well, things went on like that for three or four years, but they didn't improve, I can tell you. The young'uns got bigger and wanted more clothes, and my wife used to speak up to me more than I'd a mind for, for I'd got to be as touchy as I could be; and the parson he must needs have a word with me, too, and I put up my back at that in a hurry. Says I, 'a man that earns his own money has a right to spend it how he choose.'

"'Surely not,' says the parson, 'not if he's got a wife to keep goin'.' That dinnin' at it about the wife and children right down provoked me, and especially comin' from him, 'cause I knew well enough he and his wife had helped my missus more than once the last winter, and that made me feel savage like at him, so I says:

"'Look here, sir, you wouldn't like any one to come worretin' you about your wife. I don't ill-treat mine that I know of, and as for you talkin' of me givin' up what I work hard for just to find her with smart clothes, why I'll do that at no man's biddin'. You gentlefolks talk of givin' up and givin' up, you don't know nothin' about givin' up yourself.'

"And I was going off as sulky as a bear, for I'd had a little too much then, though it was only noon time; and then I knew, too, I'd spoke a heap of rubbish about my missus; she never wanted smart clothes, poor soul!

"That was the temper I was in when I went by the Eagle, and just as I was passin' out come John Clarke, and hollers out, 'You won't do no more cuttin' to-day; it's going to rain like old boots. Come along in and have a pipe and half-a-pint.' So in I went, and a regular day we made of it. I up and told 'em how the parson had been preachin' at me, and how I giv' it him, and my mates they made as if I'd done a mighty clever thing, and first one stood treat, and then another stood treat, till we all got a little beyond ourselves, and then we had a row. I could never rightly tell what it was all about, but we got knockin' one another over, and shyin' the pots out of the winder, and as luck would have it, one of the pewters caught a horse that was passing on the flank, and the poor brute bolted and upset the trap down the road by the pond.

"I made off home rarely frightened, I can tell you, and a whole lot of us was summoned for the Saturday after for bein' drunk and disorderly. 'What am I to do?' says I to the landlord. 'O, swear you wasn't drunk,' only just havin' some fun, larkin' like. I'll stand by you together, and do you stand by me. We've got a rare sharp lawyer; he'll see you poor chaps ain't put upon.'

"'Who'll pay the lawyer?' says I.

"'Why,' says he, 'I've a capital landlord and brewer, too, at my back; two of my landlord's cousins and my brewer's father-in-law are on the bench; they'll work the thing for us!'

"And so they did, sure enough.

"Some of our lot got fined just a trifle; I didn't though, and from that haysel to harvest, me and the landlord was better friends than ever.

"I mostly lived at the Eagle out of work hours, for you may guess my home wasn't a very comfortable place by that time! There used to be a young chap hangin' about our bit of a garden of an evening time, that I didn't particular like the look of. I'd a sort of notion he was after Lydia, my biggest girl—a pretty lass she was and is—and yet I very well knew the young fellow's father would never stand that, and I kept thinkin' that some night when I felt tolerable steady, I'd tell him to take himself off, and not come where he wasn't wanted; but the first time I began upon him he behaved so pleasant-like, and asked me to take a glass of something at the 'Eagle' with him, so I hadn't the heart to say my say at him.

"And a good many was the drinks I had with him that summer, and just about then my friend the landlord began to pull a long face at my long score, and so I was glad of the young chap's pocket to fall back upon, and wholly gave up the notion of tellin' him to take himself off. My wife didn't say much to me knowin' it wasn't no use. She looked very bad, poor thing! I couldn't shut my eyes to that, and I couldn't be off knowin' neither that the children never got to school because they'd no shoes nor clothes to go in; still I never looked to mend matters by stintin' myself, and bad as things were they might have got worse, only then come my dream.

"It was one of the first days of harvest. The sun had used a many of us up, but I'd kep' at my work till night, though I don't think I'd eat three ounces of food all day. Drink! ay, that I did like a fish, as one may say. I'd had a pull in the morning before I set to; then the master he was always free with his beer in the harvest-field, and I don't know that what he gave me would have done me so much harm if I could have left off with that. But I couldn't. I finished off at the 'Eagle,' and by the time I got home I didn't know my own doorway.

"A neighbor gave me a shove into the house, and my wife she helped me up stairs, and I suppose I fell sort of stupid like on the bed—not the first time by many that I'd done the like."

Obey.

Among the first lessons taught children from the Bible, those relating to parental obedience seem especially to claim attention. When the fact that God requires children to obey their parents is well established in their minds a very important object is gained. Will they not listen with fearful attention, with filial confidence, when told that God says, "Hearken unto thy father that has begotten thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old;" "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right;" "Honor thy father and mother (which is the first commandment with promise), that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth;" "Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing unto the Lord!"

Then, when reminded that obeying their parents is not only right, but well pleasing unto the Lord—that with it is connected the promise of long life and well-being!

"Promises of life eternal, of a crown that never fades,
Of a kingdom full of glory, which no sorrow e'er invades," and that disobedience is connected with fearful denunciations—when told these things, will they not feel that, with all the heart, they will seek to render cheerful and ready obedience?

Parents, if you do not begin with God, Christ, and the Gospel—Satan begins with his creed and practice, the first article of which is atheism. The child's mind is given to you to furnish, not to keep unfurnished, and you are bound to furnish it with such principles and pictures of faith, such articles of truth from God, that by and by it can be trusted safely to make its own selection. You are bound to educate the habits, tastes, feelings, judgment of the opening mind aright, and you cannot do it in the neglect of God's Word.—D. F. Newton.

Grieving the Holy Spirit.

How difficult it is to put things exactly on their former basis when you have had some misunderstanding with your friend! If you have insulted him, and he has forgiven you, it is not easy to look him in the face just as you formerly did. It is sad to have brought to light the possibility of falling out. If the thing has occurred repeatedly, the memory of it will sadden and straiten your intercourse. Then grieve not the spirit of God. Sooner let the sick passenger insult the generous oarsman who is struggling to save him from the breakers. Sooner let the captive quarrel with the benevolent stranger who is laying down a fortune for his ransom. Sooner let Hagar revile the angel who points her to a fountain where she and her son may drink and live. Oh, grieve not the Holy Spirit of God!—Bowen.

The great art of conversation consists in not wounding or humiliating any one, in speaking only of things that we know, in conversing with others only on subjects which may interest them.

Prof. Henry Reed most truly observes: "We marvel often at finding how, under the light of wise criticism, new beauties are made visible to our minds in books the most familiar.

Childrens' Corner.

Baby and the Snow.

Little feathery flakes of snow,
Dancing, sparkling as you go,
Filling, darkening all the air;
Crystal flakes so pure and fair.

Down they come, the pretty flakes,
Whitening stoops like frosted cakes,
Sprinkling, silvering all the ground,
Falling, falling all around.

Tumbling, floating, here they come,
Baby mine, you shall have some;
Hither bring your little cup
And steady, steady, hold it up.

Down it comes, so bright and fair,
Powdering baby's golden hair,
Flecking the chubby little arms,
Trying to steal our baby's charms.

Pinking cunning finger tips,
Kissing red-ripe tender lips,
As in the snow our baby stands,
Holding up her little hands.

Pling, drifting round the feet
Of our precious baby sweet—
Pure as the snow our baby there
May she always prove as fair.

A Little One's Love.

The Poughkeepsie Eagle tells an affecting story of a little child between two and three years old, whom a lady found walking on the streets, evidently lost and crying bitterly. Taking her by the hand the lady asked her where she was going.

"I'm going to find papa," was the reply of the child between sobs.

"What is your papa's name?" asked the lady.

"His name is papa," replied the innocent little thing.

"But what is the other name?" queried the lady. "What does your mamma call him?"

"She calls him papa," persisted the little one.

The lady took the child's hand and led her along, saying—

"You had better come with me; I guess you came this way."

"Yes, but I don't want to go back, I want to go to my papa," replied the little girl, crying afresh as if her heart would break.

"What do you want of your papa?" asked the lady.

"I want to kiss him."

Just then a sister of the child came along looking for her, and led her away. From subsequent inquiries it appeared that the little one's papa whom she was so earnestly in search of, had recently died. In her loneliness and love for him she tired of waiting for him to come home, and had gone to find him and greet him with the accustomed kiss.—Ex.

"Thank You."

Baby was already for his bath, this morning, when mamma found she had forgotten the sponge. She said to her little boy Fred, "Please go get the sponge."

"Soon he came bounding back with it, his face all covered with smiles; and, after throwing it into the water, looked up into his mamma's face as if expecting something. The look was not understood: so he said, "Thank you."

How many times have I seen people receiving favors thanklessly, and felt like preaching them a little bit of a sermon, as my little four-year-old Freddie did me this morning.

Children, do you need any such sermon? Are there any of you who are not little thank you children? If there are, let me ask you to try the experiment of expressing your thanks for favors received, and see how much good feeling it will bring. You will find that even among your own companions it will pay to show, by these little words, that you appreciate their acts of kindness.

I remember this trait in one of the greatest, dearest, and best men I ever knew. He never failed to thank one for the smallest deed of kindness, no matter how poor and humble he might be; and his pleasant face always spoke his words of thanks so plainly that one could but delight to do him a favor.

Then, if it seems rude to forget to be thankful to our own kind friends how does it appear when we forget to thank our heavenly Father, the giver of all good? Does it not seem as though no one would ever forget to thank him?—Well Spring.

Keep your Eye on the Mark

A light snow had fallen, and the boys of L—— desired to make the most of it; and as it was too dry for snowballing, and not deep enough for coasting, they thought it would do very well to make tracks in. Near by there was a large meadow, and it was proposed that they should go to a tree which stood near the center of the meadow, and that each one should start from the tree to the boundaries of the meadow. The proposition was assented to, and they were soon at the tree. They ranged themselves around the tree with their backs toward it, and started, each one retracing his steps to the tree. After they had returned, they each looked back to see how straight the tracks were.

"Whose is the straightest?" said James Allison to Thomas Sanders, who was first at the tree.

"Henry Armstrong's is the only one that is straight at all," said Thomas.

"Why," says Jacob Small, "how could we all contrive to go so crooked when the meadow is so smooth, and nothing to turn us out of the way?"

"How happened you to go so straight, Henry?" said Thomas.

"I fixed my eye on that tall pine tree on the hill yonder, and never looked away from it till I reached the fence," answered Henry.

"I went as straight as I could without looking at anything but the ground," says James.

"So did I," said another.

"So did I," replied several voices at once.

It appeared that no one but Henry had aimed at a particular object.

They attempted to go straight without any definite aim, but they failed. Men cannot succeed in anything good without a definite aim. General purposes, general resolutions, will not avail. You must do as Henry did—fix upon something distinct and definite as an object, and go steadily toward it. If you wish to be Christ-like, look at him, and you will by so doing learn to copy his ways and follow his example. Ever keeping your eye fixed upon the "mark," press forward that you may obtain the prize at the end, which is eternal life.

Reader, if you have never given your heart to Jesus, never followed him, I beg of you to seek his mercy and forgiveness before it is too late. Seek him without delay.

"For now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation."—Young Pilgrim.

[From the International Lesson Quarterly.]

The Book of Nehemiah was written for the most part by himself, but a portion was added subsequently, and it gives a list of priests and Levites for nearly two hundred years. The main history in the book covers about twelve years, from B. C. 445 to 433, being the twentieth to the thirty-second year of the reign of Artaxerxes. It is a history of service for God, and in the seven hindrances of Nehemiah we may find our own; and in his separation we may see the path of success.

The places mentioned are Jerusalem and Shusan (or Susa). This was one of the most important cities of Persia, 250 miles southeast of Babylon. It was the winter residence of the king, and after Darius it became the capital (see Dan.. viii, 2; Est., i, 2).

The persons are Nehemiah, the cupbearer, appointed as governor. He was the son of Hachaliah (and not the same mentioned in chap. iii, 16, or Ez., ii, 2), His character, his work and his devotion challenge admiration. Artaxerxes (called Longimanus, the long-handed), began to reign B. C. 465, and reigned forty-two years. During his reign Egypt was conquered and added to his possessions. His father, Xerxes, was the Ahasuerus of Esther. The queen here mentioned was Damaspia. The Governors were the Viceroys (now called Pashas) who ruled the countries under the Assyrians and Persians. Asaph was probably a Jew, who had been appointed keeper of the king's forest, as no one was allowed to cut the trees without permission.

The time of this lesson was B. C. 445 It was seventy years after the events of the last lesson, and ninety years after Zerubbabel first went to Jerusalem. The dedication was B. C. 515, in the reign of Darius, the son of Hystaspes, and he was followed by Xerxes, the Ahasuerus of Esther, which book comes in chronologically here, and from which we get the history of the Jews in Persia for a long period. Xerxes was succeeded by his son Artaxerxes, B. C. 465 and in the twentieth year of his reign Nehemiah was permitted to go. A relative of Nehemiah's brought him grievous news concerning the sad condition of Jerusalem, which moved him to pray for deliverance. The month Nisan, or Abib, was the beginning of the Jewish year (Ex. xiii, 4), and was the same as the latter part of March and the first of April. He began to pray in the month of Chisleu, about November or December, and the interview with the king, recorded in our lesson, occurred about four months later. It is probable that Nehemiah started at once. It is always time to do God's work, especially when the walls seem to be broken down.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

Name any other subjects or servants mentioned in the Bible as asking favors of kings. What wife risked much in asking a favor from her royal husband? From what city was a wise woman sent to ask a favor of David? Mention three passages in which courage is commended. Three in which cowardice is reproved. What does the Bible say of the effect of sadness? What of the good effect of mirth? Of whose sepulchres was Jerusalem the city? How late does the Bible speak of David's sepulchre as known? Whom did the people of Jerusalem kill, and then build sepulchres for them?]

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., Jan. 4, 1879.

—The meeting of the committee on church co-operation and missions met in the President's office, Wheaton College, on Friday evening last. Elder J. F. Browne was chosen secretary. As little preparation had been made for the meeting and the attendance not large, small progress was made. An important resolution was adopted, however, as follows:

"Resolved, That we hereby recommend all Christians who desire to aid missions in the South free from the lodge, to aid Rev. Eli Tapley, of Columbus, Mississippi, as a missionary of Jesus Christ; and that funds be sent to him directly or through the publishers of the Cynosure which shall be reported through that paper."

The committee will meet again next Monday evening in the same place.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard preached in the Chicago Avenue (Moody's) church in this city last Sabbath evening.

—Five new members were received last Sabbath by the College church, Wheaton. The morning discourse by Prof. C. A. Blanchard preceding the celebration of the Lord's Supper, was a very able discussion of the doctrine of holiness and review of the common objections to it. In the evening two confessed Christ for the first time. The congregations of this church are about as large as before the separation of what is now known as the Congregational church a year ago. At the business meeting on Saturday the vote to place the name of the church on the roll of the Associated Churches of Christ was unanimous, and the testimony against tobacco, etc., was made more emphatic.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Reformed Presbyterian congregation of Beaver Falls, Pa., Rev R. I. George, pastor, opened their beautiful new church on Thanksgiving day with a sermon by A. M. Milligan, D D., of Pittsburgh in the morning, and a sermon by Prof. J. R. W. Sloan, D D., in the evening. The church was densely filled both morning and evening with very attentive audiences. The church is a perfect gem and no mortgage on it; the congregation small but spirited; the pastor earnest, able and universally beloved.

BAPTIST.

—Rev. E. Tapley, sends the following important item from Columbus, Miss.:

The following resolution was adopted by the Buttahatchie Primitive Baptist Association (white) composed of ministers and delegates from 21 churches convened in Fayette county, Alabama, on the 11th, 12th and 13th of October, 1878:

"Resolved, That we will not hold in our union any church or churches who hold in their fellowship any member or members who will not renounce every secret order or clan, political or religious, whether past, present or to come; or that hereafter claims or expresses by word or act any interest therein, directly or indirectly, whether for oath or honor's sake, or personal interest or fraternal advantage of such; whether at home or abroad, sick or well, in adversity or prosperity, or in any other condition, or for any other cause not herein mentioned, we must not—we can not—we will not fellowship or commune with them."

I am informed by a prominent minister of this denomination that two other Associations have passed resolutions excluding all members of secret societies, and that the Primitive Baptist church stands opposed to secret orders. The above resolution is taken from their printed minutes.

—Elder J. L. Barlow returned to this city from Menomonie, Wisconsin, last Thursday to get his wife and household effects. He has been with great unanimity elected for the pastor of the church over which Bro. W. W. Ames has watched for twelve years, and which is, under God, the fruit of his labors. Elder Barlow starts for his new home about the middle of this week. May God's blessing go with him.

—The Spring Creek Baptist church, Burlington, Iowa, whose pastor has been subjected to so unwarrantable a Masonic persecution, is prospering in its proper work. Bro. Austin writes: "God is with us as a church. A few Sabbaths since I baptized one and others are awaiting baptism. Our prayer meetings are very spiritual and a joy to our hearts. We have no extra meetings."

—The holy fires of separation from the sins of the lodge yet burn among the Baptist churches of New York. The breath of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus is kindling the flame. The following newspaper item has been sent us: "A Baptist church in Wyoming county has lately expelled eight of its old and prominent members on account of their connection with Freemasonry. There has been a long and bitter contest in this direction, and the recent expulsions are in conformity with a sweeping resolution disfellowshiping Freemasons."

FRIENDS.

—A synopsis of the reports presented at the late meeting of the Executive Committee of the Society of Friends on Indian affairs, in Cincinnati, are of great interest in their statistics of this work.

At the beginning of the year seven agents of the Society of Friends were nominated for the 16,043 Indians put under the Society's care. All but 754 of these Indians are in the Indian Territory, where they belonged to twenty-seven tribes and bands. During the past year two of these seven agencies were consolidated, and, with a third one, were taken from under the supervision of Friends, and were put in charge of agents nominated by prominent politicians. Four agencies thus remain under the Society's care, one for the Osages and the Kaws, one for the Quapaws and several other small tribes in the northwest of the Indian Territory, one for the Sacs and Foxes and a few other small bands, and the fourth for the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes. These four agencies control 11,010 Indians.

Of the whole number of Indians under the Society's care (16,043), 2,666 are children of school age. Of these 973 are enrolled in twelve boarding schools and three day schools. Of those enrolled, 430 read English more or less perfectly, and a smaller number work the rules of arithmetic and have some knowledge of geography and other branches. All the pupils receive industrial training, and many are learning farming and cattle raising. In all of the schools the Bible and the Christian religion are taught.

The Indians enumerated above, own 12,999 cattle and 18,025 hogs. They occupy 1,135 houses, and have, during the last year, cultivated 18,426 acres, producing 440,540 bushels of corn, 15,200 bushels of potatoes, and 5,820 tons of hay.

The Society makes the point that the closest investigation of their agencies has shown no frauds, the only irregularities being due to the fact that the agents did not fully understand the regulations of the service, and in these cases the errors have been promptly corrected when the rules were better understood. On the whole, the Society says their agents have done their work well.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—On the last Sabbath in December, Bro. C. L. Blanchard of the College church, Wheaton, preached in the pulpit of the Congregational church, Tonica, Ill., lately occupied by Bro. Henry Avery, now of College Springs, Iowa. On the following evening he gave a temperance address in the same place.

—The Congregational ministers of Chicago in discussing popular amusements at a late meeting, generally agreed that cards, billiards, theaters, dancing, etc., were not evils in themselves but had become evils, and that the line of true reform lay, not against amusements per se, but in overcoming evil with good.

—The Boston Congregational Club celebrated Forefather's day with a grand feast. Both the banquet and the sentiments were a travesty on the Pilgrims, if it was not intended to ridicule them when one speaker said that we were indebted to the Puritans fer Christmas.

—Rev. Dr. Budington, for nearly a quarter of a century pastor of the Clinton avenue church, Brooklyn, has resigned. He has been suffering from an operation for the removal of a cancer from his lip, and is compelled to cease from work.

CHURCH OF GOD.

—At the last meeting of the standing committee of the Northern Indiana Eldership Elders J. Martin, J. Bowman, C. Bortner and J. S. Shock were chosen as a new Board of Publication, and it was determined to hold regular quarterly or communion services on all the circuits in the eldership.

—Elder J. W. Lowman, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the organ of this Eldership, while lately on an evangelistic tour was locked out of a church at Log Bethel. He gives this reason for the affront: "Here, for the first time since I commenced preaching, I was locked out of the house. The meeting house was unlocked until my appointment was announced, or about that time, when a man by the name of John Booker went and locked the house and took the key home, and although earnestly solicited by several parties to give up the key, he utterly refused to do so, or open the house. We are told that he gave as his reason for locking me out, that I was opposed to secret societies, and was tearing down the church. I was locked out of God's house then because I was opposed to secret societies. This did not discourage me in the least, for I have met worse things than that since I have been opposing Baal worship. This only shows what would be done if the power was in the hands of the apron tribe."

GENERAL.

—Samuel B. Wells, known as the "missionary policeman," died in New York not long since. He had been a member of the police force for sixteen years, and served nearly all the time in the worst districts in the city, improving his opportunities to admonish and advise the degraded characters with whom he came into contact. In early life he was a Methodist preacher.

—The English revisers of the authorized version of the New Testament completed Dec. 13th their second and final revision. The company have held eighty-five sessions and have spent 337 days on the work, having commenced in June, 1870. The total number of the company is twenty-four, and the average rate of attendance throughout has been fifteen. There now remains the consideration of any further suggestions that may be made by the American company, and the adjustment of some questions which have been reserved till the end.

—So remarkable has been the growth of public sentiment in Japan favorable to Christianity that one of the leading Japanese printing offices in Tokio has recently published a specimen number of what may be called the Christian Advocate, a newspaper which it proposes to publish in the interest of Christianity. The enterprise is entirely independent of Christian missions, and projected solely from a business point of view, it being the opinion of the publishers that the paper will pay its way and yield a profit.

—Bro. Philo Elzea of Marengo, Ill., started last week from Wheaton for Nebraska in his own conveyance. He expects to lecture as the way shall be opened in the course of his journey, and hopes to reach Nebraska in April. We hope to hear reports of his work, and request the friends along the way to write.

News of the Week.

—On Saturday afternoon a fire broke out in the basement of the fine building on Dearborn street in this city, the north half of which was occupied by the Post Office, the remainder by General Sheridan's military headquarters, the Chicago and Alton general offices and several law offices. An elevator shaft took the flame to the high mansard roof in an instant. Nearly the whole fire department was called out, and after about two hours conquered the flames. The damage from fire was confined to the upper stories. Other parts of the building were drenched with water. There were a number of narrow escapes but no damage was done to any human being except from frost. The mails were safely removed and the loss to government will be small. The cold was so great that water froze or turned to spray on leaving the hose pipe, and firemen exposed to the water were frozen down so as to require an ax to chop their feet loose.

—Friday at 4:15 ten convicts in the Anamosa Penitentiary broke out of the stone-cutters' shed and made a desperate effort for liberty. This is the new and unfinished second prison in Iowa, the yard being enclosed only by a board stockade. One convict was shot dead by a guard, and another shot through the bowels, and will die. The remainder escaped from the yard, two of whom were shot by guards, both dropping with a broken leg. Five others were soon recaptured.

—It is stated that the street-cars used in Bombay, New Zealand, Java and the South American countries, and many of those used in Russia, Germany, France and England, are manufactured in the United States. The cost of transporting a car from New York to London is $125; to New Zealand, $250.

—The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette declares that it is probable that Marshal MacMahon will be nominated for a second term as president by the Gambetta Republicans. This is on the theory that the peasantry do not quite trust the Republican leaders, and that the Monarchists and Bonapartists can make no combination against MacMahon. According to this correspondent the Gambetta platform is to re-elect MacMahon for four years.

The Amalgamated Society of Engineers, which opposes any increase of the hours of labor, has, according to the last annual report, £225,000 on hand. This union, numerically and financially, leads all other trades unions of the kingdom.

—M. Inkidt Roodebecke, manager, and M. Fortampe, president of the Bank of Belgium, are finding that defrauding the bank, as they have been convicted of doing, to the amount of 20,000,000 francs, does not pay; for they have just been sentenced—the former to fifteen years' solitary confinement in prison, and the latter to one year and a fine of $1,200.

—Recent reports show that there are 25,000 colored emigrants from the United States in Liberia, doing well as farmers and artisans. There are 750,000 native inhabitants, who are being brought under the influence of civilization. The four States of Liberia are Montserado, Grand Bassa, Sinoe and Maryland. The constitution is modeled after that of the United States, but Attorney General Davis explains that none but colored men are allowed to vote.

—Some months ago the Secretary of War appointed General Marcus J. Wright, formerly an Adjutant General in the Confederate army, an agent of the War Department to collect official and private documents bearing on the war of the rebellion, to be added to the collection of rebel archives now being compiled under the direction of the Adjutant General of the army. General Wright has proved very efficient in this undertaking, and has already secured many papers of great historical value. Among them are nearly all the telegraphic copy books of the Confederate commanders during the first year of the war; also the order books of the Adjutant General's Department. General Wright has also arranged with Jefferson Davis to make copies of such official and private papers as he may have in his possession, many of which relate directly upon the plans and intentions of the Confederate leaders, and disclose to a great degree the confidential correspondence of the President of the Confederacy.

OBITUARY.

WEBB.—The funeral services of the late Charles T. Webb were held at his residence, 518 Park avenue, Chicago, Dec. 31st, 1878, from whence his remains were taken to Whiteside county, Ill., his former home, for interment. Bro. Webb was born in Lewis county, N. Y., June 1st, 1812, and died Dec. 28th, 1878, in Chicago. He was converted and united with the M. E church when 14 years of age, and continued in active membership to the time of his decease. He was honored and beloved by his brethren and often filled offices of trust in the church to which he belonged. He was a warm friend of the slave, an active advocate of the Union when it tried men's souls to stand for the right, and always in the front ranks of the temperance reform. He was induced to unite with the Masonic lodge in 1867, and took the third degree on the 10th of January, 1868 an act which he ever afterward deeply regretted. He never returned to the lodge after receiving the "sublime degree," for the ceremonies and oaths, and in fact the whole thing was exceedingly repulsive to his religious tastes and convictions. While attending a quarterly meeting at Fairfax, Iowa, in 1870, his convictions were so deep that he could not pray, and under the terrible pressure of remorse and guilt he rose and renounced the hidden things of lodge dishonesty, confessed his sin and faithfully warned others against the hidden snare. This was the signal for a most bitter and unrelenting persecution, which followed him to the day of his death. Yet nothing daunted, he stood firmly by his convictions and fearlessly defended the right. When I last conversed with him he expressed the conviction that his opposition to the lodge had cost him heavy pecuniary losses and that his opposers had sought his death by means which failing in immediate results, had nevertheless caused his suffering and which a few days after resulted in his death. He leaves behind a devoted Christian wife who sought by every means in her power to mitigate his suffering and cheer his heart during the lingering agony of his last sickness. He seemed to have a presentiment that his hour had come. After a brief but fervent prayer he said to his wife, "What if the messenger should come?" She replied, "Charles, could you say, Welcome death, thou end of fears?" Instantly he responded, "I am prepared to die." He then requested his wife to sing one of his favorite hymns. She began, "O sing to me of heaven," Instantly in a clear voice he joined in the next line, "When I am called to die." These, although he lingered for some hours, were his last audible utterances and he passed tranquilly away, a smile still lingering upon his face. A post mortem examination confirmed the opinion of physicians previously given, that his stomach had become so deranged as to cease entirely to perform its functions. The case of Bro. Webb, along with many others should be an admonition to all who oppose the craft to be careful to know who prepares and who has access to the food they eat. The deceased leaves five children, nineteen grandchildren, two great-grandchildren and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. While every friend of our reform work who reads these lines will, I am sure, deeply sympathize with the bereaved, and catch some portion of that spirit which inspired his weeping wife, when she exclaimed, standing near the lifeless body of her companion, "I feel as though I wanted to spend my life in opposing the terrible institution of Masonry."

VENTILATION OF SLEEPING ROOMS.

If a man were to deliberately shut himself for six or eight hours daily in a stuffy room, with closed doors and windows (the doors not being opened even to change the air during the period of incarceration), and were then to complain of headache and debility, he would be justly told that his own want of intelligent foresight was the cause of his suffering. Nevertheless this is what the great mass of people do every night of their lives with no thought of their imprudence. There are few bedrooms in which it is perfectly safe to pass the night without something more than ordinary precautions to secure an inflow of fresh air. Every sleeping apartment should, of course, have a fire place with an open chimney, and in cold weather it is well if the grate contains a small fire, at least enough to create an upcast current and carry off the vitiated air of the room. In all such cases, however, when a fire is used, it is necessary to see that the air drawn into the room comes from the outside of the house. By an easy mistake it is possible to place the occupant of a bed-room with a fire, in a closed house in a direct current of foul air drawn from all parts of the establishment. Summer and winter, with or without the use of fires, it is well to have a free egress for pure air. This should be the ventilator's first concern. Foul air will find an exit if pure air is admitted in sufficient quantity; but it is not certain pure air will be drawn in if the impure is drawn away. So far as sleeping rooms are concerned, it is wise to let in air from without. The aim must be to accomplish the object without causing a great fall of temperature or a draught. The windows may be drawn down an inch or two at the top with advantage, and a fold of muslin will form a "ventilator" to take off the feeling of draught. This, with an open fireplace, will generally suffice, and produce no unpleasant consequences, even when the weather is cold. It is, however, essential that the air outside should be pure. Little is likely to be gained by letting in a fog or even a town mist.—London Lancet.

DIPHTHERIA CURES. — We ran across, to-day, two "sure cures" for diphtheria, which may be taken for what they are worth. One is kerosene oil, used as a gargle, which has wrought numerous remarkable cures in Plattsburg, New York, and the other is sulphur, which is said to have worked wonders in London, and is endorsed by high medical authority.—Buffalo Advertiser.

TO RELIEVE ASTHMA.—I will give you two recipes, and hope they will cure you: Oil of tar, one drachm; tincture of verstrum veride, two drachms; dose for adults, 15 drops three or four times daily. Leaves of the common chestnut tree, that fall in autumn, made in a tea, and drank freely every day for two or three months, will cure very bad cases of asthma. — Cor. Chicago Inter-ocean.

Simple Dresses for Girls.

In the dressing of girls there has been a popular change for the better. It has always been customary among the very highest classes for girls to dress simply, but we have a class of people in the country, sprung from humble conditions, who have become possessed of wealth, and the overdressed young lady always belongs to this class. Usually her mother is a good and has been a hard-working woman, who is not unfrequently snubbed by her fine lady daughter, and is obliged to accept her diction as to what is and what is not proper in regard to dress. The daughter is simply anxious to have everything that everybody else has, and be among the first to display a new fashion, whether it is suitable for her or not. This gives us the assured class of girls in society which foreigners are so surprised to find—girls with the airs of leaders and the assurance of the widow of two husbands. Slowly and with great difficulty it is beginning to dawn even upon these obtuse minds that they are discounting their future in a way that is not wise or profitable, or perhaps the idea does not enter their minds at all, and it is simply because it is becoming fashionable in their circle to "affect" the simple dodge. —Cincinnati Commercial.

Publishers' Department

Whole number Cynosure subscriptions January 1st, 1879, 3,517. Every week until March 1st, 1879 we intend to give our workers the exact number of subscriptions on the mail list.

Five hundred and fifty-two subscriptions in the above reported number expired in December just closed. Five hundred and fifty-two more will expire during the present month. If yours is among them, please renew promptly.

Seven weeks for soliciting subscriptions at $1 50 per year remain. One thousand new subscriptions a week increased by TWO HUNDRED RENEWALS each week will bring the number up to 10,000 by the first day of March, 1879.

One hundred and seven renewals and fifty-five new subscriptions were received during the week ending January 2d. We expect to report a much larger number for the week ending January 9th.

Only about three hundred persons out of the whole list of subscribers sent in more than one subscription each last year. If this is all that God and country and home requires of the majority of the Cynosure readers we would not ask more. Will not each one who reads these words ask prayerfully, "Am I doing all for the circulation of the Cynosure that I should do?" If not go forth bravely, joyfully, perseveringly, prayerfully. Work as that successful king did of old: "In every work that he began * * he did it with all his heart, and prospered.—(2nd Chron. 31:21.)

If all will do what they can we believe that the ten thousand subscriptions will be received.

GOOD NEWS.

J. Shoemaker, Albion, Iowa, sends twenty-four subscriptions for one year each and writes: "We prize your paper very highly. I think it does much good in our little town. Praise the Lord."

Wm. Worth, Starksboro, Vt., sends eleven subscriptions for one year each and himself takes three copies for the year making a club of fourteen.

Mrs. A. E. Jenks, Cheshire, Mass., sends a club of eleven for a year each.

Ira Green, Rossville, Ill., sends eleven subscriptions for one year each.

Moses Ferrin, Ellington, N. Y. and Joseph A. Laird, Wayne, Henry county, Iowa, send eight subscriptions for a year each. Mr. Ferrin is eighty years old. If every reader of the paper sent as many subscriptions as there were decades in his life, what a noble subscription list there would be. Since all do not we rejoice that some send many times this number.

Moses Pettingill, Peoria, Ill., sends five subscriptions for one year each, fulfilling his pledge made at the Illinois State meeting.

J. S. Yaukey, Fayetteville, Pa., sends twelve subscriptions for three months each as a donation and writes: "May these feeble means be blest of God to the good of church and state."

N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, sends four subscriptions for one year each.

T. L. Moore, Milnersville, O.; J. B. Hart, McLean, N. Y., and Richard Green, Wolcottville, Ind., send three subscriptions for one year each. Mr. Green intends to canvass during the present month.

Anson Eastman, Warrens Corners, N. Y., sends three subscriptions for one year each, completing a club of seven.

Joseph Craig, Lima, Ind., sends three subsciptions for one year each and one for four months.

J. S. Whitney, Union, N. Y., sends two subscriptions for one year each and one for six months.

W. J. Olmstead, Sparta, Michigan; Laura E Farrar, Paxton, Illinois; I. Leadbetter, Auburndale, Massachusetts; C. M. Preston, Waldron, Hillsdale county, Michigan; F. F. French, Hardwick, Vermont; John Kitchen, Elpaso, Illinois; Hiram Delap, Viroqua, Wisconsin; Rev. Geo. Clark, Oberlin. Ohio; Geo. Pittis, Deersville, Ohio; Wm. Small, Wabash, Indiana; Jas. Stuart, Hokendaugua, Pennsylvania; R. S. Reed, Huntsville, Ohio; H. W. Clark, Geneva Lake, Wis., A. K. Richey, Northfield, Ohio; John J. Swan, Viroqua, Vernon county, Wisconsin, each send two subscriptions for one year. Mr. Leadbetter writes: "I will try to get some new subscribers next week." Mr. Geo. Clark writes: "I will send other names if I can get them. I am too ill to go out. The Lord leads your column. Victory will come." John Leeper, Senecaville, Guernsey county, Ohio, sends two subscriptions, bringing his club up to eighteen and writes: "I consider the circulation of the Cynosure a matter of no small moment. I expect it to tell in this great reform. I intend to still keep trying. I want to get a very large club for we have a wily foe to fight." J. W. Campbell, Goodrich, Michigan, also sends for two copies of the Cynosure, one for seventeen and one half months, the other for one year. Henry Ashley, Evansville, Indiana, sends for two copies, one year each. M. L. Worcester, Kingston, DeKalb county, Illinois, writes: "I feel it to be important for the welfare of the church and country to get the 10,000 subscribers promptly."

Rufus Northway, Orwell, Ashtabula county, Ohio, writes: "I will do what I can. I was one of the old liberty guard and feel like battling for the right. J. H. Hanna, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is looking up renewals and hopes for more subscribers.

H. F. Buffham, Batavia, Michigan, writes: "I am trying to get some new names to send along with mine for 1879." Edward Keig, Rockford, Illinois, writes: "I intend to canvas for the Cynosure."

J. W. Grantham, Madison, Pennsylvania, sends twelve names and addresses and twelve two cent stamps ordering a copy of the Cynosnre sent to each name. He writes: "I wish to get up a club for the Cynosure." The plan we think is a very good one.

Many thanks for New Year's greetings from subscribers.

WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

Rev. E. If the Lord opens the door Bro. Mathews stands ready to enter this promising field as soon as arrangements can be made; and I want to say to the friends that in my judgment Bro. M. is well adapted to your field which would be greatly enlarged through his labors.

To every reader of the Cynosure:

If you notice the present number of subscriptions as reported on the last page of this number (3,659) you will realize that nothing, apparently, but a general effort on the part of the majority of our readers will bring the list up to the 10,000 subscriptions.

The recent Illinois State Convention attempted to add one hundred to the list and as a result thirty-eight copies were paid for on the spot and sixty-six more pledged by twenty-two persons (an average of three each) making a total of 104 subscriptions.

Will you try the plan which was so successful at Wheaton and write on a postal card the number of subscriptions that you will be responsible for before March 1st, 1879?

Are there not three or more persons in your family who will pay for one each, thus enabling you to pledge three at once. We hope all will pledge for at least one, and that most will pledge five, ten, fifteen or more.

Shall we not be able to announce the whole TEN THOUSAND pledged within two weeks? There will then remain four weeks for the fulfillment of the pledges.

Those who have already done their utmost towards the TEN THOUSAND have our most hearty thanks and we believe the approval of God for their noble, self-sacrificing labors for the Cynosure. For such we have only words of gratitude. Some of those who have done most give us great encouragement by saying they will do still more.

Past Master Edmond Ronayne, in the last issue of the Cynosure recalls the encouraging fact that "Victory has crowned every one of our efforts during the last four years." The question he adds falls with tremendous emphasis: "And shall we fail now (in securing the 10,000 subscriptions) and so retire before an already conquered enemy?"

A prompt and favorable answer to that question is of great importance to the success of this enterprise.

Please let us hear from you. Your pledge may turn the scale.

Yours truly,
EZRA A. COOK & Co.

Topics of the Time.

The Pope has issued another encyclical letter which is arousing considerable comment in Europe and will soon appear on this side the ocean. If the notices of the Continental press and correspondents are of any value, Leo XIII. is not fulfilling the promises made by these same correspondents when he attained the pontifical chair. Instead of a liberal administration, recognizing the progress of mankind, he is showing his Jesuitical training, and so long as he has power will prevent peace in Europe. This last letter is said to be an appeal for the restoration to the papacy of such a degree of liberty as will permit the employment of its influence in favor of society! Poor Pope! His people in New York may defy the laws and turn their grand cathedral into a vast gambling establishment, yet they are restrained from using their influence in favor of society! An Italian journal helps us to understand the enigmatical language of the Pope by stating that this encyclical letter is the opening of a crusade against modern institutions.

Last summer a company of Cheyenne Indians, made desperate by the swindling of government agents and their starving condition, if we may believe the reports of prominent army officers, began raiding in southwestern Kansas. They went north across the Kansas Pacific and Union Pacific railroads hotly pursued, and were finally driven into the sand hills of northern Nebraska, where part of the band was captured. These Indian prisoners have been kept at Fort Robinson. Last Friday they escaped and were pursued. The Inter-ocean tells their story thus: "If the first report which comes of the massacre at Fort Robinson, Nebraska, is not exaggerated, then cruelty has reached the top round in our treatment of the Indians. It seems that about one hundred and thirty Cheyennes have been held as prisoners at the fort, they having escaped from their reservation, and refused to go back. A dispatch, which we cannot credit, says that last Sunday it was determined to starve and freeze them into submission, and so for four or five days they have been given little or no food, and have been without fire. Not satisfied with this the chiefs were enticed into a council to talk over matters. Then they were seized by soldiers and ironed. The remaining Indians, hearing of this, barricaded the windows and doors of their prison to defend themselves, but finally broke out in the night and ran across the prairie in the snow and ice, almost naked as they were, preferring to die thus than be returned to a reservation where they had been starved. The soldiers pursued, and, it is reported, shot them down by dozens. If this be true, the men guilty of the enormity should suffer the severest penalty. They are worse than the savages."

No one will fail to be interested in the masterly address on Socialistic Secret Societies by Joseph Cook, which was one of his regular Boston lectures in the early part of November. In an address in New York last Thursday evening on the socialist question this great thinker sounded a warning to our political parties of their responsibility and the consequences of their ambition. One chief peril, he said, was from the cowardice of the political parties, neither daring to declare openly against socialism. The time might come when unprincipled classes in large cities, holding the balance of power, will control the politics of the country. The time was not very far off when New York would be as large as London, and there would possibly be another London where now a little village at the Golden Gate stood trembling before the verbal gymnastics of sand-lot oratory.

In Congress the House, last Friday, by a strong vote of 127 to 87, put its foot on the head of the Southern war claims. For ten years the claim for the destruction of William and Mary College, Virginia, has been urged before every session of Congress. A hundred and thirty set speeches have been made over it, and the actual cost to the nation has nearly equaled the amount of the claim itself, when the time of Congress and printing of speeches is estimated. It is noticeable that among the very few Republicans who voted for the bill was the eminent Massachusetts Mason, Dr. Loring. Northern Democrats voted against it, dreading to open the gate to the host of Southern war claims that would be pushed in after.

Practical Work in Holy Living.

BY J. B. SLIGHT.

"Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, us let cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

As to the doctrine of holiness, there should be no controversy among Christians, for it is without doubt a Bible doctrine. Nevertheless, it is sometimes the case that preposterous ideas creep into present-day teaching on this subject. Not long ago an advocate for holiness, as a distinct work from regeneration and subsequent to it, used the above text in proof of that theory. He said, the persons addressed therein were justified, regenerated Christians, but that they were not made holy, not wholly sanctified.

Perhaps they had been in a justified state; but Paul saw that the associations that they were having with men of corrupt principles and practices was corrupting their physical and moral natures. Hence he says to them: "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers, for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?"

These questions indicate that those persons were forming such alliances, and the apostle would teach them that righteousness can have no communion with unrighteousness, and that light cannot dwell with darkness; and consequently Christ can have no concord with Belial, nor can he that believeth have any with an infidel. All these points being clear, well might Dr. Adam Clark spring these questions: "How then can they keep up a profession of Christianity, or pretend to be under its influence while they associated with the unrighteous, had communion with darkness, and concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?" The filthiness of the flesh and spirit spoken of in the text from which the apostle desired them to be cleansed, was drunkenness, adultery and fornication. So says Dr. Clark. These filthy, fleshly practices would most certainly pollute the soul.

These Corinthians had as surely corrupted their bodies and souls by associating and being in league with the heathen in their secret works of darkness as professed Christians do now when they associate with heathen rites in secret societies, where the worship of Christ is rejected, and Baal worship is set up. They had fallen from grace, or they had left their first love, and had need of restoration, by repenting and doing the first work instead of passing on to a second work. Such is the case with thousands in the church now. Avarice, pride, conformity to the world, and connection with idolatry in the lodge have turned them aside from the simplicity of the Gospel, and they greatly stand in need of having the first work repeated. This is being done in many localities, and where the work is sufficiently thorough it plucks them out of the lodge. Thank God for that! In other cases they profess entire sanctification; and yet cling with tenacity to Masonry; and the ministry make apology for them. Lord help me to have Gospel charity! for I have none for such members and ministers. But that is not all: these holy Masons are sometimes prefered to old, experienced Christians, who had daily communion with God before these Masons, now made holy(?), were born. But notwithstanding these Corinthians had departed from God, and had corrupted their bodies and souls, the Apostle encourages them with the promises, saying that if they will come out from among evil-doers and be separate, touching not the unclean thing that God says: "I will receive you, and I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." This teaches that if these persons had ever been adopted as sons and daughters, they had lost the spirit of adoption, were bastards and not sons. Although the teacher alluded to above said they were good Christians, and the apostles wanted them to take another degree. This kind of tampering with heathen darkness, drunkenness, fornication and adultery was not Paul's practice, neither should it be the practice of the ministry to-day. Backsliders and hypcrites should be exhorted to come out from among those works and workers of darkness and have no more to do with them; then may they hope to be received by our Heavenly Father, and not till then.

Is it So?

It is said that if a Masonic minister is in his pulpit preaching Christ, and Him crucified, and a Masonic Jew, who regards Christ as an imposter, should enter the church, and make that minister a Masonic sign, he, the minister of Christ, would be bound by his Masonic oath to make a corresponding sign in answer to it. It is added, that in making this sign of intelligence and secret understanding with an enemy of the Lord, he would dissemble before the congregation, pretending to make a gesture prompted by the spirit of his discourse; but in reality he would be holding Masonic by-play with an infidel, and that infidel perhaps making merriment out of the Christian minister for his own diversion.

Can these things be so? Does the Christian minister, by becoming a Mason, take a halter around his own neck and place the end of it in the hand of an infidel, to be led blindfolded into dissimulation and fraud?

Think, O Christian men and women, of having a preacher who while preaching Christ to you, is holding, at the same time, a disguised by-play with fun-making Jews, rum-sellers and infidels! Is there ever any such by-play as this between the murderer in the dock and the "gentlemen of the jury?" Is it so? Go to the polls and ask the question there of every American!

It is furthermore said that the worst and bitterest enemies which our republican government has to encounter, are clergymen; and that these clergymen are largely members of the "mystic brotherhood." If half of the Protestant clergy of the northern States are Masons, probably three-fourths or more of those of the southern States are such; and they are declared to be rank enemies of the government.

Add to these facts that it is not now the Jesuits of the Romish church that assassinate kings and princes, but it is the Jesuits of the lodge who do such things, and one would suppose that the subject of Freemasonry ought to engage the attention of every honest man and woman in the land. AMERICAN.

The Oldest Town in Connecticut.

The first settlement in Windsor by white men was in 1639, only nineteen years after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth. The old burying ground is preserved with care. The oldest grave seems to be that of their first pastor, Rev. Hewett, who died in 1644. Beside his grave is the tomb of the Colonial Governor Wolcott, who died in 1667, and near by are the tombs of a magistrate and his wife, who died about the same time. All these are marked in the ancient style of lettering and on simple freestone (no month appears until many years later), but are no mean specimens of art.

The burying ground, together with the church and village, was once surrounded by a barricade for protection against the Indians. The present large, fine church was rebuilt in 1844. The pastor, Rev. G. Wilson, has held that office since 1867. He is an able man and good pastor. Windsor is a continuous farming village of six miles long. The village proper is at Broad street, where are the depot, town hall, post-office and stores, and grand old elms, sycamores and maples line the street, most of them more than 200 years old. The Ellsworth mansion near where I am, is fine old building where General Washington once stopped to dine when on his journey through here. Some of its inmates attended my lectures and expressed much interest in our reform.

Tobacco is the bane of this beautiful valley. The people expend a great deal for fertilizers in order to raise great crops of tobacco, and so much capital is invested in it by members of the church that it is not considered prudent for the pastor to make any allusions to the subject. The tolerance of one sin in the church prepares the way for others. Of course the lodge must be let alone, and young people must have their dancing and card parties without interruption. Much effort is made to keep up a form of religion, and there are some earnest souls here, but to a great extent "all the ways of Zion do mourn." Whether there is to be a general reformation of morals and revival of religion seems to be at least doubtful.

"Be Not Conformed to this World."

Romans 12: 2.

The fashion mongers oft may say
To conscience-stricken souls:
The fashions furnish greater pay
To poor ones for their toils.

Therefore you need not think it wrong
To dress in latest mode
Of worldly fashions that belong
To both the great and good.

"Be not conformed to this world,"
'Tis true God's Word has said;
But now the church people behold,
And do not be afraid.

The ministers' and deacons' wives,
Teachers in Sabbath school,
Dress fashionably all their lives;
They'd take you for a fool,

If you think you, better than they,
Do understand God's Word,
And, fool-like, think that fashion's way
Doth work against the Lord.

Look also in the story books
In every Sunday school;
In magazines, newspapers, look,
"Religious!" What's the rule?

"Illustrated!" with what? I see
The Christians of each tale—
Except the poor—it seems to me,
In styles to draw a wail

From angels high, who see all this,
The cost, and see what wo
Of others it might change to bliss
On high and here below.

Lord! open eyes beauty to see
In holiness; in gift
Of body, soul, and all to thee—
Which loving heart doth lift.

A New Departure for Dr. Thomas.

[Correspondence Inter-Ocean.]

The idea of a "Society for the Propagation of Thought," crystallizing around Dr. Thomas and Prof. Swing, grows on me. The head of the movement, the center of its activity, would, of course, be Dr. Thomas; while to Prof. Swing with his admirable taste, his elegant culture, his æsthetic power, would be consigned the department of poetry and rhetoric.

How those "hundreds of Methodist preachers" who have poured their wrongs and their wrath into the heart of Prof. Swing, those groaning sufferers slaving under bishops and presiding elders, with the iron of their creed eating into their souls, would rejoice if permitted to rally to this new standard, shouting the battle-cry of "Thomas and Liberty."

The Rock River Conference insolently gave to Dr. Thomas one year longer—they put him on probation; hence, during this year of grace he must conclude that he will climb out of the Methodist pulpit, or he must consent to wear those accursed shackles which prevent freedom of thought. He will climb out, he cannot be shackled; and if he will put himself at the head of "our society" he will lead the hundreds of preachers out of bondage—the best brain and blood of Methodism will go with him. Assuming the truth of Prof. Swing's published statement—and who that knows Prof. Swing can suspect him of falsehood—we feel sure that if hundreds write to him, a stranger, a man who never was a Methodist, these hundreds are but a fraction of those who groan under the same cruel wrongs, and so, doubtless, there are thousands of Methodist preachers equally anxious with these hundreds to break with Methodism. Professor Swing's word is the unimpeachable evidence upon which we claim that the Methodist Episcopal church is honey-combed clear through with discontent and disloyalty. Upon this we build our hope that thousands of Methodist preachers are in hearty sympathy with our dear Dr. Thomas. Then, thousands preach as they do now only because their bread and butter would fail should they preach the truths they really believe. Poor fellows; they need and should receive the sympathy of the world. Shame on the great Methodist church found guilty of such a wrong! She, by her terrible discipline, her tyrannical episcopacy, her horrid presiding eldership, her iron-bound creed, forces God's ambassadors, God's called and qualified ministers, to preach as true what they know to be false. My blood runs cold in my veins as I contemplate this indescribable horror. Do we live under the dominion of the personal anti-Christ? If not, why does the world permit our bishop and six presiding elders to force the hundreds of preachers who compose our annual conference to deny God, oppose truth, and murder their own consciences; for this is what these men who have outgrown their creed must do if they would have their salaries.

But, thank God, this is no longer necessary. These "advanced thinkers" can safely obey their consciences; for such is the love of God's truth to-day, that in every considerable town there are Liberals, Unitarians, Universalists, infidels and atheists, enough to insure any man who will strike vigorous and effective blows at the orthodox churches a good living salary. There is abundance of such material to gather into the fold of "our society;" and no man has the confidence of all these classes to the same extent as Dr. Thomas. The orthodox Christians, with their usual warmness, oppose Dr. Tnomas as the Pharisees opposed Christ; but these other classes, like the publicans and sinners of old time, believe in Dr. Thomas—with one voice they declare that he, by natural gifts and scholarly acquirements, was marked out and predestined as the leader of "advanced thought."

Of course, "our society" must have no creed. The era of creed is past. Every member may think in perfect liberty. The thought propagated by the society must be free thought. Neither shall there be any rules. We want no sumptuary laws; no interference with our amusements or our pleasures. Each man must be free, not only to think but to act as he thinks best; to live as he judges right. Nobody, no society, must attempt to lord it over our consciences. Every member of this society will be presumed to have capacity to know what is right and what is wrong; each will form his own rule of life; and if we do not agree as to these rules we shall more fully illustrate the great natural law of "unity in diversity." If, then, Dr. Thomas will give us preachers who can prove that the creeds are not true—that they are mere man-made dogmas, church scare-crows, the debris of thought left over from the ignorance of past ages—preachers who will show us that there is no such thing as religious certainty, that doubt and skepticism are better than faith: that in the new translation of the Gospel the passage that reads, "He that believeth shall be saved: and he that believeth not shall be damned," will have the not stricken out of the last clause and inserted in the first, then, and in that case, "our society" will prosper, and thousands who are now creed-condemned will, "as the year goes by, find themselves growing into a larger hope for mankind." With such inspiring truths preached by a ministry who have been educated to success, who know how to reach the public ear, who can strike "square from the shoulder" (and if we get Dr. Thomas and his Methodist brethren, we shall have such a ministry), ten years will give us a society that will outnumber the church. The church itself has prepared the way for our success. It has done this by its insane refusal to tolerate the innocent amusements of the people. "Our society" must give its hearty sanction to the people; here is a throne of power made ready for us, only waiting to find an occupant. When the great mass of society people in the country find a ministry who can and will defend the respectable dance, the legitimate drama, the social card party, and the temperate use of wine and beer, they will not fail to give such ministers a liberal support.

This is Dr. Thomas' great opportunity. "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, bears on to fortune," and such a tide now rocks on its swelling wave the bark which is laden with the fortunes of Dr. Thomas.

If Dr. Thomas will work out these suggestions he will be to the Methodist church what John Wesley was to the Episcopal church. History will write that the Thomas movement in America takes rank above the Wesleyan movement of England. From Dr. Thomas' great mind, as from a light fountain, will flow in coruscations of flaming glory a new movement in religion—a great, free, untrammeled, thoughtful, creedless movement of mind. The moment Dr. Thomas shall announce himself as the center of such a movement, crowds of those preachers who are now writhing, sad and sore, under the bigotry and tyranny of the M. E. church will gather to him, proud to follow this great, this superb scholar, this fearless thinker, this profound theologian, who is now seen hanging on the "ragged edge," a spectacle to angels and men, waiting to know if at the close of the current conference year he will be what I now sign myself,

A Preacher That Was Located.

Men sometimes object to the doctrine of the depravity of mankind. But the strongest teachings of the Bible and of the pulpit, are more than confirmed by their own actions—by the conduct of the world itself. Every bolt and bar and lock and key, every receipt and check and note of hand, every law book and court of justice, every chain and dungeon and gallows, proclaim that the world is a fallen world, and that our race is a depraved and sinful race.

Secret Socialistic Societies.

LECTURE BY JOSEPH COOK, BOSTON.

Let us imagine ourselves assembled in the ruins of the Tuileries, or within sound of the pistol-shots lately fired at the most paternal of emperors, or in sight of the flash of the weapon of Vera Sassulitch in St. Petersburg, and of seven similar subsequent attempts there to take the lives of Russian officials. If these scenes are too distant to produce any deep effect upon our sensibilities, will you be good enough to assemble in sight of the flames of the railway riots at Pittsburgh in 1877, at a time when at least ten American towns were kept in order by musketry.

When the railway riots in the United States were suppressed in 1877, the work of the formation of secret labor organizations was taken up with vigor. It has progressed at such speed that within the last six months very interesting facts have become public concerning three or four secret labor organizations more or less socialistic in their character. I am quite aware that I cannot speak from personal study of these vailed socialistic societies. Outside of the membership of these organizations there are not twenty men in the United States who can describe them from actual observation; and yet, throwing a drag-net over all current publications and some secret sources of information, I have been enabled to bring together a number of facts which appear to me to be very suggestive. In order to give them the proper emphasis I must go back, for a moment, to the European birth of certain American communistic parties.

Here is the great philosopher, Fichte, teaching in Berlin, and he inculcates the doctrine that every man has a right to life, and therefore to the opportunity to earn a living. If a man has no opportunity to earn a living he must steal. Fichte taught this, and that such theft is not theft, but just reprisal against society. There are certain books by Fichte, rarely read, called the "Foundation of Natural Right," and the "Closed State," and "The Reason State," and in them thoroughly revolutionary political doctrines are taught. Fichte demanded from the state the right of labor. If a man cannot live by his labor he is not left in the enjoyment of his absolute property, that is, his life, and is thenceforth not obligated to acknowledge the property of any other man, since the contract of the state to secure every one his own property has been violated. Such a man must be aided, lest property become insecure. At the same time Fichte demands that the state shall tolerate no idlers. (See Huber, Prof. J., article on Social Democracy in Germany; International Review, Nov. and Dec., 1878, p. 803.)

Ferdinand Lasalle, the first important name among the agitators in the socialistic circles of Germany, was a pupil of Fichte. He adhered throughout life to his master's philosophical as well as his political theories. He never became a materialist, but was an idealist and pantheist to his death in a duel in 1864 at the age of thirty-eight. The German Socialists now render to his memory almost divine honors. It is Fichte that speaks in Lasalle.

Karl Marx, who gathered his knowledge of Communism largely from French sources, abandoned the idealism and pantheism of Hegel and Fichte, adopted a coarse materialism as his creed, adjusted it to the doctrines of Hackel, that the soul is only the result of matter in motion; that there is no immortality, and that conscience points out no authoritative code of morality. "With me," says Marx, "the ideal is simply matter transformed and translated in the human head." Religion, he thinks, is opium for the people. There is nothing divine in man; there is no celestial spark in him, according to Marx. Saturated with this materialistic philosophy, he finds it very easy to adopt false doctrines concerning the family; very easy, after having abolished the family in his scheme of thought, to draw his trenches around inheritance, and so to abandon the ideas of the modern world concerning transmission of property, and plunge onward with his followers into the abyss of Communism.

In Lasalle you find the eloquence of a cultivated Jew, and also in Karl Marx, for both of these men are of Jewish descent. Lasalle obtained a very extensive education in jurisprudence, in history and political economy, and was an exceedingly brilliant pamphleteer. He had many interviews with Bismarck, and once predicted publicly that the latter would play the part of Sir Robert Peel, and declare himself in favor of universal suffrage.

Lasalle's central demand was for governmental aid and labor. Here is the burgher class, he used to say to the peasants of Germany. When rich men wish to build railways, the State aids them. When you wish to found co-operative enterprises, why should not the State aid you? Universal suffrage ought to be proclaimed, and the fourth class should come into power. The laboring masses should found producers' associations on the largest scale. The State should secure to the creditors of such associations the payment of the interest on their capital. Thus the Government should assist labor in its penury to obtain buildings, machinery, tools, and raw material for manufactures. The producers' associations should take into the managing partnership all their hired laborers, and gradually form themselves into a credit assurance. Overproduction should be prevented by the State. Lasalle thought these clumsy schemes would change the face of the world in fifty years, so that it would not be recognized as the same world. A few of his ideas, no doubt, were sound if taken out of their combination with the rest; but his political philosophy, as a whole, was ludicrously shallow. He can hardly be called a Communist, however. He was a political Liberal of a dangerous type. (See Mehring, Die Deutsche Socialdemokratie, Bremen, 1878.)

It is important to make a broad distinction between four styles of political sentiment concerning the distribution of property: first, cooperation, a very judicious scheme in many cases, though unsuccessful thus far in most instances where it has been tried; next political liberalism; then, below that, Socialism; and at the bottom of all, Communism. I suppose that many who call themselves Socialists are only political liberalists; for Socialism, strictly defined, is atheistic, and so is Communism, and it is with these two lower ranges of political sentiment that I have always to do. Possibly you think that I am giving too stern accounts of the ringleaders among Communists and Socialists, but I undertake to say, as the scholar at my side [referring to the Rev. Dr. Thomas] is reported to have said in public yesterday, that extreme Communism is so black that you cannot do it injustice. The Russian Nihilist, the extreme German Socialist, believes in no hereafter and no God. One of the most popular labor songs in Germany has this couplet:

Der ist ein Lump, der eines Gottes Namen
In Wort und Schrift demuthig anerkennt.

Only a vagabond will humbly own
There is a God—with word and pen.

If a man is to have no future existence and no judge he may do as he pleases, except in so far as enlightened selfishness forbids! If our only chance is here, we may as well take what we can get. Fifteen thousand Socialists in a procession passed into a cemetery in Berlin, not long ago, and twenty thousand on another occasion, and buried comrades with orations asserting that there is no immortality. Berlin held her breath when that procession moved through the streets, because she feared a riot in all the slums, and did not know what attack might be made on property. When the pistol-shots at the Emperor were fired, it is not a wonder she was alarmed.

What has happened in Germany? Why, on the death of Lasalle certain German workingmen, Frenchmen also, and Poles and Bohemians, met at St. Martin's Hall in London. The date was 1864. They founded the International Society, of which we have all heard, and which is today supposed to have two and a half million men in its membership, or in close sympathy with it, on the continent of Europe. The headquarters of the International Society are now in New York city. It is managed from the mouth of the Hudson and the banks of the Thames. In fact, however, the head-quarters in New York city are only nominally supreme. Really the cottage of Karl Marx, an exile in London, is the throne of the International Society. He manages both its left and its right wings now. The right wing revolted from him at the Congress in Geneva in 1866, but has come over to him at last. His work on "Capital," one of the most thorough-going defenses of materialism in philosophy, and Socialism in political economy, is the New Testament of the International Society. As Marx proclaims himself atheist, so does this immense organization.

The International Society has been accused of bringing on the riots in Paris, when the Tuileries were burned. I have tried to ascertain how much truth there is to these charges. In a minute investigation of the history of the International Society, perhaps the most significant document on which I have been able to put my hands, is a letter from Karl Marx written to the Communists of Paris just before their rising. Marx said to the Communists in April, 1871: "We are as yet but three millions at most. In twenty years we shall be fifty, an hundred millions, perhaps. Then the world will belong to us, for it will be not only Paris, Lyons and Marseilles which will rise against odious capital, but Berlin, Munich, Dresden, Vienna, London, Liverpool, Manchester, Brussels, St. Petersburg, New York—in short, the whole world. And before this new insurrection, such as history has not yet known, the past will disappear like a hideous nightmare, for the popular conflagration kindled at a hundred points at once, like an immense dawn, will destroy even its memory.

Address language of that sort to the petroleum Communists who burned the Tuileries; address it to men who have been made lawless by carelessness of their interests on the part of despotic governments; address it to men who have been taught that there is no hereafter, and that God is only a necessity, ruling through the laws of matter; address that language to millions banded in secret organizations all over the world, and you find that it means as much mischief everywhere as occurred at Paris on a small area, if that mischief is necessary to the success of the desired revolution. I do not credit the International Society with the shedding of all the blood that was poured out at Paris; but the secret history of 1871 in Europe proves that if this organization had been strong enough to have raised riot in other large cities, as they did in Paris, they would have done so, and that what was lacking was power, and not the will. Karl Marx is credited with saying now, that in the United States and in Great Britain, and perhaps in France, a reform of labor will occur without bloody revolution, but that blood must be shed in Germany, and in Russia, and in Italy, and in Austria.

Whatever the real or purposed crimes of the Internationals, the certainty is that the Paris Commune frightened Germany. She was alarmed yet more by the power of the socialistic party at the polls. In the German elections of 1871 the Socialists as a political party polled 140,000 votes; in 1874, 350,000; in 1877, 550,000. In 1878 Bismarck took this jumping-jack, which cannot be kept down, and crushed him back into his box, shut the lid and turned the key.

The suppression of socialistic newspapers and public meetings in Germany will be the commencement of another crusade for the formation of secret socialistic societies there. It will be the invigoration of all the secret socialistic and communistic organizations in Europe. Nevertheless, I am not here to say that America, in Bismarck's place might not have done substantially what he did.

Once make capital thoroughly afraid of Socialists, tramps, and roughs in the United States, and see how swift and merciless it will be in self-defense. I undertake to tell any lawless classes at the bottom of our cities, that if they thoroughly alarm capital in this country, it will treat them with as much severity as the necesity of preserving the public peace may require. We shall keep order roughly here, it necessary; for all Americans are capitalists, or expect to be. [Applause and laughter.] Alarm property; let it it be understood that there is real danger in Chicago, and New York and St. Louis from socialistic organizations; let strikers and Communists and demogogues grasp the throat of our great railway intercommunications; and when capital is thoroughly aroused, it will not be held back here, as it has been sometimes in Europe, by a feeling that, after all, the rioters have been abused. Thiersch, in his great work on the Christian Commonwealth, says that in 1830 and 1848, in Europe, many a ruler was made inefficient by a secret feeling that the working classes had not had their rights. Kings tremble on their thrones when they feel that they have no right to be kings. In America the people feel they have a right to be kings, and they will exercise that right. [Applause.] There will be no handwriting on the wall here for Belshazzar to look at, and, therefore, his knees will never smite together. Of course a republic can be attacked for three days and an hour. A republic in history is like a raft on the sea. You cannot sink it, but you are apt to put your foot through it into the waves. A monarchy is like a man-of-war; bad shots between wind and water hurt it exceedingly; there is a danger of capsizing. But democracy is a raft. You cannot easily overturn it. It is a wet place, but it is a pretty safe one; and we are on it, and we are to have order here; and we will build up the raft under our feet until there is dry standing room for us all. [Loud applause.]

If there should be an election in the United States showing that there is serious danger from socalistic secret political organizations, what would happen? Why, from Plymouth Rock to the Golden Gate we should have a propagandism of sound ideas, such as in the last six weeks glorified Massachusetts from the Cape to the Berkshire Hills. [Great applause.]

There was a shamefully large vote in Massachusetts, however; for utterly absurd political ideas. The cities of this State elected an inflationist governor. This occurs in the green young days of Massachusetts, when, as yet, her factory populations are comparatively content. There is no posture of safety in politics in this country, except that which looks forward to a third and fourth centennial, and makes preparations in advance for perils, of which, as yet, we hardly see the outlines.

New England Notes.

Dear Bro. K:—On the evening of Dec. 19th I lectured in the Congregational church at Avon, Conn., a second time, to a full, attentive and sympathetic audience. Two seceders were present who privately said that they were convinced of the wickedness of Freemasonry and abhorred it. I since learn that they desire another lecture. At West Avon our meetings failed from the opposition of the Congregational minister.

Our next meeting, on the 20th, was at Symsbury, where we waited an hour to get into a school-house which a Masonic teacher undertook to keep shut; but where we had a good meeting.

On the 22nd I preached at Weatogue.

On the 23rd I visited West Hartford and reached the village of Bloomfield in time for meeting in the evening. Here a hall had been hired and paid for and lectures announced; but by some Masonic arrangement the house was kept shut and no lectures were given. I was hospitably entertained by the pastor of the M. E. church, who expressed his warm sympathy with the work in which I am engaged. The Congregational pastor also expressed his sympathy in the cause, but the Baptist minister is a Mason.

From here I went to Warehouse Point, Conn., and Chicopee Falls, Mass., where I made arrangements for future lectures and returned to Windsor, where I lectured on the evenings of the 26th, 27th and 28th and preached on the 29th. Our meetings were not large but deeply interesting, and the brethren here were much encouraged by the result.

On the Dec. 30th I lectured at Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts. This is a large manufacturing village and thoroughly under Masonic influence. The pastor of the M. E. church is an active Mason, and through his influence many young men have been induced to join the lodge. In a long conversation he told me that Masonry is in perfect harmony with the Gospel; that nineteen-twentieths of the M. E. ministers are Masons; that the exclusion of the name of Christ from the quotations which Masonry makes from the Bible "was perfectly proper;" that David Marks was a useful minister until he became an Anti-mason and that ruined him. He said, moreover, that while it was none of my business whether he ever did swear to conceal the secrets of a worthy brother Mason in all things except murder and treason, under penalty of having his body severed in two, etc., and asking God to help him; yet if he did do it, it was perfectly right. An ancient philosopher said, "Only give me a fulcrum and I will lift the world." What could he do with no place to rest his lever? So I, finding no moral sense in the poor man, despaired of lifting him out of his degradation. There was nothing on which I could base my argument. Poor man! Like Ahab, he has sold himself to do evil, and cannot distinguish between evil and good.

Our meeting held in the Advent chapel was quite well attended and undisturbed except by a few Masons who at about the middle of the lecture felt an inward call "from labor to refreshment" to the probable pecuniary benefit of the saloons. A venerable Royal Arch interrupted me with the request that I would give the first degree. After I had finished my argument I did so, but not greatly to his edification. The result of the meeting seemed to be excellent. Chicopee, like Sardis, has a few names that have not defiled their garments, and the Lord says, "They shall walk with me in white for they are worthy."

To-day I called on the pastor of the Congregational church in that place and he purchased books and expressed an interest in our work. To-morrow I go to Pognonock, Connecticut and thence onward.

Yours in the Lord,
H. H. Hinman.

The Reform Movement in N. E. Pennsylvania.

The quarterly meeting of the N. E. Pa. Association convened at Waverly, Pa., on the 27th of December, in the evening. We did not arrive in time to attend this meeting, but heard an inspiring report of it. The sermon, by Elder S. E. Miller, was, I am told, a tower of reform principles.

Elder Jones, Free Methodist, and chairman of the district, preached a good Gospel sermon Saturday A. M. This we also failed to hear, not arriving till Bro. Jones was making his closing remarks. He left a good echo behind though he had to leave at noon. The Free Methodist people are a live power for God and reform in Waverly as well as in other regions.

The afternoon was devoted to prayer and conference. In the evening it fell to our lot to speak on the subject of Religious Disfellowship of the Lodge.

On Sabbath morning after a season of prayer of half an hour we were greatly edified by a discourse from Elder A. L. Post, of Montrose; subject, "Feeling after God," from Acts 17:27. Though feeble in person and voice he is lucid in thought and we can well afford to "bend the ear" to hear what he says. In the evening after prayer meeting we spoke on the subject of a "Live Christianity," and so closed the first quarterly meeting of the N. E. Pa., Association opposed to secret societies.

A campaign is in view with Ronayne to lead, of which more anon.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

MICHIGAN STATE MEETING POSTPONED.

ADRIAN, Mich., Jan. 9, 1879.

DEAR K.—Several brethren from abroad were in attendance at the meeting here yesterday, but the local interest was not largely represented. Some came in sleighs twenty, others forty, and some even sixty miles, and were much disappointed not to find "Grand Master of Ceremonies," E. Ronayne, in the "Oriental chair." I think so far as I can understand the case, however, he decided wisely not to come, as the meeting had not been sufficiently "worked up" to stir the city as would be desirable. I see in the light of this attempted convention the necessity of greater uniformity of action in holding State meetings, and I hope parties interested will duly consider the suggestions in last week's Cynosure on this subject for next fall and winter campaign.

There were a score or more of brethren in this State who were ready to do the work necessary in preparing for their annual meeting, but for want of an understanding each one supposed that some one else was to attend to it and so nothing was done. I spoke at two o'clock P. M. to a small audience, and again at seven in the evening to about double the number. There was good attention, and I trust good will follow.

It was deemed best to adjourn the meeting subject to the call of the State Executive Committee. I go to-day to Jackson, thence to Dexter where I am to meet Bro. Bruce with whom I expect to spend the time until the 14th inst.; when D. V., I shall leave Michigan for Grant Co., Indiana. There are many of whom I should like to make personal mention, but I will only at this time say that I found at Jackson father and mother Wilcox, as I expected, full in the faith, but feeble in health. May God bless and reward them for their kindness.

LENAWEE JUNCTION, Jan. 9th.

Train one hour and a half late. Time for reflection, etc. A few suggestions to friends in Michigan about the State meeting.

1st, As to time I would suggest February 26th and 27th. This would give ample time to arrange.

2nd, That the meeting be held in Adrian, where the lodge interest of the State is burrowed in a $50,000 temple which I am told is exempt from taxation on the ground of the "religious and benevolent" character of the Masonic order.

3rd, That Bro. Perkins, treasurer of the State Association, and Bro. Jones be instructed to procure the use of the best hall in the city on the most favorable terms possible, and make arrangements to entertain friends from abroad as cheaply as practicable.

4th, That the services of Edmond Ronayne be secured to work the three degrees of Masonry on the three evenings of the above days and that a small admission fee be charged on the last evening from all persons over twelve years of age, to aid in paying necessary expenses.

5th, That each friend of the anti-secrecy reform throughout the State send to the treasurer of the State Association at least twenty-five cents to be used by the executive committee of the State in paying the expenses of the convention, including the work of getting it up, and the remainder to be applied in aid of the State work in sustaining lecturers or in distributing tracts, etc., as the meeting shall order.

6th, That the executive committee through its proper officer notify the Secretary of the National Christian Association as early as practicable what assistance, if any, they desire from that body.

In this way I think a harmonious and effective meeting could be held in Adrian, and if each of the friends would send in his quarter, means would be in readiness, not only to pay for the convention but to push on the work.

All of which is respectfully submitted by J. P. STODDARD,

Secretary N. C. A.

A BRIGHT MASON.

BALDWIN, Ill., Dec. 10, 1878.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Lately we had a little debate at the schoolhouse in Baldwin on the following resolution: "Resolved, That secret societies are hurtful to the morals of society."

Every thing passed off smoothly and in good humor until the debate was over, when, as the people were leaving the house, a stranger whose name I have not been able to learn, attacked us and defied us to prove from Masonic books that any man could be a Mason who did not believe in the Christian's God. He was referred to what had already been read from Moore's Masonic Trestle Board, where it is stated that a Mason is "charged to adhere to those general essentials of religion in which all men agree, leaving each brother to his own private judgment as to particular modes and forms * * * worshipping God after that manner and form which he consistently believes to be most acceptable in his sight," etc. He was also referred to the prayers used in the lodge in which the name of Christ does not appear.

Said he—This is a Christian country and when God is mentioned we mean the Christian's God.

We—But how in a heathen country?

He—A heathen couldn't be a Mason.

We—What about the Jew—would he accept the Christian's God?

He—He would.

We—The Jew despises the Christian's God.

He—He does not; he reverences him more than you hide-bound cusses. I have seen such cattle before who didn't know that no lodge could not be established without the Bible in it, and although I am a Presbyterian I would say the Jews have done more for the good of this country than the Presbyterians have.

We.—Well, do the Jews in the lodge accept the whole Bible?

He.—You must understand that we only take the fore part of the Bible.

We.—Then you have gone back to Judaism.

He.—You don't know anything about it.

We.—You mutilate the words of Scripture in making quotations from the New Testament. We can prove it from your books.

He.—We don't and you can't prove it.

We.—Well, that is a small matter, since you yourself admit that you make such a wholesale mutilation of the Bible as only to take the fore part of it.

He.—You are a set of hide-bound Presbyterian cusses, who don't know a d—— thing about it. I've heard as good Presbyterian preachers as ever lived preach sound Gospel from Old Testament texts.

We.—Don't doubt it, but did they reject the New Testament?

He.—Not as Christians but as Masons.

We.—Do you remember what is said in the last chapter of Revelation about taking anything from the Word of God, and if these Presbyterians as Masons reject the New Testament what will become of the Presbyterians when God judges the Masons?

He.—You mistake and misquote from our books.

We.—We just read them as they are printed.

He.—You lie.

We.—We dare you to meet us in debate on Masonry.

He.—We don't discuss.

We.—You dare not.

He.—We da— don't discuss.

We.—You're afraid to.

He.—I don't want to have anything more to do with such hide-bound cusses who don't know anything about Masonry.

I suppose we had tramped on his toes. Yours truly,

JOHN E. HOLMES.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

BOILING SPRINGS, Pa.

I attended the funeral of a Knight of Pythias, anticipating such a thing, because of visiting him often during his sickness. This to me was an unpleasant thought, fearing the contact of mixing Christianity with heathenism, as practiced by the lodge. But in this I was favorably disappointed (thank God!), he arranging it for me, so I got through unmolested; then came in the Baal worship.

A few days after one of our brethren came in contact with a Methodist, a member of the order, who said the preacher prayed for everybody but the order, then added, "—— on such a preacher" (I will not name the word he used). But for a Christian to use such a low and vulgar word, what must be the state of his heart, in a moral point of view. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Is not the Christian to be the temple of the Holy Ghost? Is not the command, "My dearly beloved, cleanse yourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God?" Can lodge men fulfill the requirement of Scripture? No. But they would ask why? For the reason the Scripture says, "Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

ENDURING HARDNESS.

CAMDEN, Kent Co., Del.

I wish to say to the friends of the Cynosure that now is the time for action and to get subscribers while the price is so low, as for me I would go without tea or coffee rather than do without the Cynosure, for I value it next to my Bible. I can get no subscribers here and there are very few who would take the paper as a gift to read, but would burn it. I am a Free Methodist and am alone here besides, for my family have joined the M. E. church, and the preacher in charge wanted me to join. I went to his house and asked him if he was a Freemason. He said he was, and also an Odd-fellow and Good Templar. I told him that Masonry would never govern me, but showed him a Cynosure. He took a look at it and said it was gotten up by crazy men or fanatics, and he would not read it. His best members who say they enjoy salvation will not read the paper and it troubles me to find persons in this place to take and read it and the Free Methodist, for nearly every person belongs to some secret society. Well, thank God that I enjoy religion that is not hid under a bushel or any secret society, and that will bear the light of God's truth to shine upon it. They try their best to ruin me and have cheated me out of about $500 in two years, but the Lord is my shepherd; my trust is in him, and I hope to meet all of God's people in heaven, where the wicked cease from troubling.

ELBERT MARCY.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR OUR CORRESPONDENTS.

1st. Is a man who will leave a church to join a lodge, stay out of a church for a lodge because he cannot belong to both, and will not leave the lodge for the sake of the church of Christ, in any case fit for the church?

2nd. Can a church of Christ defend itself against the lodge and at the same time fellowship it in the church?

3d. How many lodgeites would be needed to govern a church in case all the members would agree for the sake of peace, not in any way to oppose the men and measures of the lodge? Cannot an infant rule a household if the members will all let it?

4th. Will not secretists enough to rule the church stay in church, even against their own liking, if permitted? NATHAN CALLENDER.

SELF-DENIAL.

PUTNAM, Conn.

A grand hindrance to all reform and to all the work of Christ on earth, is the disposition to substitute something else for that careful obedience to our great captain's commands, which would surely lead to victory. The best leader cannot lead his soldiers to victory if they do not obey his orders. He does not compromise one-fifth or one-tenth of his gains, is not Jesus' orders. He commands, "Deny thyself." Nothing else will suffice. Nor will this come without that love which is the fruit of the Holy Spirit and "the fulfilling of the law." Self being denied, what wealth of money, time, talents, energies, etc., is left free for Jesus' work on earth!

Yours truly,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

OF

GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

INITIATION, DEGREE OF FIDELITY.

Degree Templar. The Marshal will ascertain if there are any candidates in waiting to receive the Degree of Fidelity. [Marshal does so; reports names of candidates, and if they have been elected for initiation the Degree Templar proceeds:]

Degree Templar. The Marshal will retire and attend the candidates.* [Marshal retires to ante-room and while absent the Degree Templar proceeds:]

Degree Templar. In conferring this degree let us remember that each of us is more or less responsible for the solemnity of the hour; for the impressiveness of the obligation and ceremonies. Let the officers forget everything but their present duty, and perform that duty WELL; and let all our hearts be as one heart—each throb a prayer for the life-long faithfulness of those who ask a place with us in this sacred circle.

The Marshal with candidates comes to the inner gate (door) and gives the signal. SIGNAL: Three distinct raps on the door.

Degree Templar. Guard, who gives the alarm?

Guard. Our Marshal with the candidates elect.

Degree Templar. Bid them come. [They enter, pass slowly around till they face the Vice Templar who rises and says:]

Vice Templar. Come and renew the pledge you have kept so well. Welcome here. [They next pass in front of the Past Degree Templar when he rises and says:]

Past Degree Templar. Yes, come to our Temple of Fidelity; here renew your vows; here renew the ties of fraternity; here advance. [The Marshal conducts them to the center of the room, between the Past Degree Templar and Chaplain, facing the Degree Templar and says:]

Marshal. Degree Templar, these are a faithful few from among those brothers and sisters in subordinate lodge, who come recommended by their lodge to a seat in this Temple. They desire to advance. We wait your pleasure.

Degree Templar. Brothers and sisters: Thrice welcome here! Faithful to the sacred trusts committed to your charge, from the hour of your initiation, a glad welcome we give you. Pleasant have been the associations of the past. The recollections of good already accomplished in this noble work of man's redemption will be ever cherished by us all. We esteem it an honor to aid you to become better acquainted with the work so as to use the weaponry of the order that still more glorious results may be achieved. We shall give you such instruction as will add strength to your resolution, and enable you to firmly stand while you live. Many have fallen, because the heart, the judgment, the reason, were not satisfied of the importance of this work. Hence, also, the instability of this reform in times past. The pledge was then but temporary in its binding force; obligations could be taken on and laid off at pleasure; but in this order the obligation is WHILE YOU LIVE. We do not ask you to thus bind yourself, without giving you Heaven-appointed reasons for such a course. Remember that you have voluntarily taken upon yourself these vows, and may not throw them off at will. Therefore, let the words of your covenant be the invincible determination of your heart.

You owe this to yourself. Intoxication destroys all that is best and noblest in our natures. Physical, mental, and moral life fall in ruin before its withering blight. Were but one of these grand elements of our nature destroyed, it would be enough to call forth all your energies to save yourself; but, alas! ALL are in danger. You may look about you anywhere, and you will find terrible wrecks of manhood from this same cause. Be not deceived by the arch enemy. No bondage is so fearful as the bondage of the wine cup. Every organ and faculty of the body and soul should be free, that we may use them for God. And now, in the light of your own and others' experience and knowledge of the great evils of intemperance, and your own personal responsibility in the matter, are you willing to take upon yourself our sacred vows at the altar of Fidelity?

[The candidates responding affirmatively, the Marshal conducts them to the altar.]

Degree Templar. Please sing our first ode of Fidelity. (three raps, all rise.)

I. ODE.

AIR—"Greenville."

Hail! all hail, our worthy members,
Who now choose the better part;
Let their glorious aspirations
Meet a welcome in each heart.

Still progressing—let us ever
Keep our obligations pure;
From all evil may we sever—
Thus our happiness secure.

Degree Templar. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

PRAYER, DEGREE OF FIDELITY.

Chaplain. Father of the Faithful! Thou who didst promise unto the sons of Rechab, be thou the God of these our friends, who would come nearer unto thee in faith and works. Help them to be faithful while life shall last, and be thou their support as thou hast been of thy people, in all ages, and wilt be forever more. Amen.

Degree Templar. The candidates will place the right hand upon the heart and assent to this solemn

OBLIGATION.

You, and each of you, do solemnly promise upon your sacred honor, that in addition to the obligation already taken, you will not reveal any of the private work of this degree; and that you will, to the best of your ability, endeavor to so inform yourselves in its principles, and to be governed by the instructions you here receive, that you may give a more unwavering allegiance to this work, as a duty you owe yourselves.

To all of which do you pledge your sacred honor?

Candidates answer. I do.

II. ODE.

AIR—"Hebron."

Now help us, Lord, the pledge to keep,
And may we ne'er have cause to weep
O'er Templars fallen from their vows
In this good cause which we espouse.

Preserve us from the tempter's power,
And give us all to feel each hour
That, by thy help, we are secure,
With hearts, and aims, and motives pure.

Degree Templar. The Marshal will now present the candidates to the Past Degree Templar. [Marshal conducts them to the Past Degree Templar,] Marshal. Past Degree Templar, these friends await your advice, counsel, and instruction.

Past Degree Templar. Brothers and sisters: I need not remind you that we live in a world of sin, sickness and death. The worst enemy to physical man is the intoxicating cup. As soldiers, therefore, enlisted for life in the temperance army, we owe it to ourselves as physical beings to become such strong abstainers, that we may not only escape the fetters of the foe ourselves, but also others who lean upon us for strength.

We have taken a lifelong pledge, because it is right we should do so. The Creator endowed us with bodies which were to be developed into healthy activity, the servants, not the masters of the soul; and if his laws were obeyed, man would live in health to a good old age. But disease has claimed man as a victim, and intemperance is the fruitful source of that disease and death. Banish the use of alcoholic stimulants, and health and happiness are within the reach of all. Therefore, we claim that our pledge is in accordance with the DIVINE WILL.

*As in the preceding degree the form is plural or singular as there are more than one or but one candidate, and the italic words call attention to the necessary change of words for one candidate.

Our order is designed to be educational. We have, hitherto, taught principles; but in this Temple, we wish to give the reasons for the faith that is in us, and so fortify our members with facts and arguments, that they may grow strong in their devotion to the obligations of our order. He who is conscious that he is right and whose faith is in a God who rewards those who from principle do right, becomes a power unto himself, in whatever situation he may be placed. It is right, then, to forever abstain from all intoxicating liquors, because the Creator never intended that man should use alcohol in his food or in his drink.

God never made alcohol. Alcohol is not found in any living grain, fruit or vegetable of earth; it is the product only of decay, decomposition and fermentation; coming in only at nature's funeral. Alcohol is not digestible; it is not food; it imparts nothing to the physical system; it is always an irritant, always an enemy, a poison; and thus inflicts deplorable injuries on man, by exhausting that vitality which is life itself.

Alcohol, whether in distilled, malt or fermented liquors—home-made or otherwise—be its continued use ever so moderate, creates a fatal appetite, one that never can be cured; but which will continually curse its unfortunate victim; often, alas! too often, leaving the man a physical wreck ere his days are half spent, and plunging him into a drunkard's early grave!

Are we not right, then, to vow that we will never touch the fatal cup? Man, the last and noblest work of his Maker, a slave! Led captive through our streets, in the chains of earth's most galling slavery! A diseased and loathsome victim of the traffic in intoxicating drinks, and the pernicious customs in society!

We take the obligation, never so long as we live will we taste of the drink upon which God has fixed his blighting curse. We have no right to thus injure these bodies of ours by violating the laws of their being. Health is essential to the proper discharge of duty, and alcohol is always an enemy to the well-being of man. Do right and fear not.

Stand up wherever you go, in the true nobility of your manhood, with this enemy beneath your feet. Enjoy life, free from slavish appetites. Enjoy the fruits, the flowers, every gift of a wise Providence, and health shall be yours through all the coming years. May this beautiful world, with its mountain steeps, its lovely vales, its sunshine and its storms, its glories and its gloom, ever be tributary to your advancement, as you march on victorious over every temptation—MASTERS OF YOURSELVES.

Degree Templar. Marshal, you will now present the candidates to the Vice Templar.

Marshal. The Past Degree Templar has given our friends his wise counsels in relation to their physical well-being. Are there not higher claims than these?

Vice Templar. Not higher; for God's laws are one and the same, and the friends will learn, if they have not already learned, that the intellectual man cannot be perfect if the physical base is weakened and impaired. Man is an intellectual and social, as well as a physical being. With natural capacities, capable of cultivation, and accomplishing every desirable success in the world of thought, and when in the full exercise of the cultivated and refined social and intellectual powers with which he has been so richly endowed by the All-wise, how noble, how God-like is man! How gifted for good in the sphere of scientific research and mental achievement! By his inventive genius, the noblest vessels ride in triumph the mountain waves; railways girt the world; the lightning of the clouds is sent beneath old ocean's bed to speak to other continents; the elements are all made tributary to intellectual man! With his pen he controls the destiny of nations; with a word he moves the minds and hearts of earth's countless millions. His eye can measure the most distant worlds; his ear, attuned, enjoy the raptures of a universe of harmony; his hand with brush or chisel re-create almost Divine! His developed intellectual gifts, who can measure them? With what power is he not endowed to promote happiness in the social world? His social worth, as son, brother, husband and father, neighbor and friend, the noblest of the blest of earth! living nobly, dying gloriously, when true to his social and mental nature, when true to himself.

Should an obligation which leaves us free to be all this, be any less than life-long in its duration?

And yet, when the enemy against which we wish to guard you once obtains mastery, all of these God-given powers become perverted, and man is reduced in power to the level of the lowest brute, or maddened into a demon! Men among the ablest of this and other lands sleep in drunkards' graves to-night, cut off in the flower of their manhood by the arch enemy against which we wage this life-long war.

But the promise is unto you and to all who are faithful to the end.

Marshal, you will now conduct our friends to the Chaplain for further counsel.

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.)

III. ODE.

AIR—"Missionary Hymn."

We hail with joy unceasing,
The band whose pledge is given;
Whose numbers are increasing,
Amid the smiles of Heaven.
Their virtues, never failing,
Shall lead to brighter days,
When holiness prevailing
Shall fill the earth with praise.

Marshal. Chaplain, these brothers and sisters would learn more of duty.

Chaplain. These sacred pages before us tell of a heaven as well as an earth; of the moral man as well as the intellectual and the physical. Remember well what you have heard; forget not what you shall hear; for it is the language of the Most High I repeat to you, that your hearts may be still more strengthened in this good work.

"Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying:

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Go and tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, will ye not receive instructions to hearken to my words? saith the Lord.

"The words of Jonadab, the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment; notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

"I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying: Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers; but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

"Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab, have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Behold I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

"And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you:

"Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Jonadab, the son of Rechab, shall not want a man to stand before me forever!"

Study well the history of this remarkable people, who, for their fidelity, are so distinguished by the King of kings.

"I wish to say to my brethren and sisters of the Free Methodist church, I yet enjoy salvation full and free, and am on my way to glory, looking forward to that day when I shall meet my loved ones that have gone before me, and all of God's people on the blest shores of eternal deliverance. And as there are no Free Methodists within fifty miles of me, pray for me that my faith fail not."

A. S. Boyd, Elliota, Minn., writes:

"I cannot do without your paper. I am seventy years old and not able to travel about, but I am with you in the cause."

Nina Gregory, Flint, Mich., writes:

"I am heart and hand with the noble men and women engaged in this difficult but glorious work, which has for its end the overthrow of Masonry, that hideous institution whose rendezvous is the very work-shop of Satan; his secret hiding place, where he may, unopposed, and faithfully served by his pliant, unscrupulous instruments, work out his diabolical plans, which if executed will invest him with universal power. Shall his purposes be defeated? Yes; a thousand times, yes. He shall at least meet with ceaseless opposition. Let us be as active, vigilant and untiring as his emissaries."

H. H. Robinson, Rochester, Minn., writes:

"I have taken the Cynosure from its commencement and intend to continue it as long as I am able to do so."

Jarvis Gage, Green Oak Station, Mich., writes:

"I will try and get some new subscribers. I am an old man. I lived in Morgan's time, and of course am an Anti-mason. I am in sympathy with you. O, it cheers my old heart to see the onward progress of the cause. I believe God is at the helm. Our cause is just, and victory is sure. May the Lord hasten the day."

H. H. Hinman, Weatogue, Connecticut, writes:

"Have all my time occupied. Good success. The Lord be praised."

R. Faurot, St. Louis, Mich., writes:

"Opposition to secrecy is bearing some encouraging fruits here. I preached a most radical discourse last Lord's day on the subject, and met the unanimous approval of my home congregation."

Wm. Dean Clay, Wellington, Kansas, writes:

"It was my fortune or misfortune to leave Iowa just as the people were getting awake to the fact that they had a right to condemn evil wherever they found it. Although I did not see the Cynosure for nearly two months, until lately, I did not grow cold in the cause. If I had had any tendency that way what I saw on the 12th of November would have done me as much good as one of Bro. Rathbun's lectures. I witnessed the laying of the corner stone of the Methodist church here by the Freemasons. Such rites and ceremonies and by such men! I was told that some of the wearers of the white apron (emblem of innocence) were saloon keepers, and but few of them church members, and this sedate crowd was led by an elder of the church. It would be impossible for me to describe my feelings on this occasion, but I could only pray God to give them the light they asked for and so much needed."

W. M. Bowker, Herrickville, Penn., writes:

"I must have the paper. Would like to help increase the list to ten thousand if I could. A thousand thanks for Gen. J. W. Phelps' valuable paper. I would like to furnish the ministers in our Conference each with a copy. We are not doing much in the reform, being prevented to a great extent by the pressure of the times. We have had Bros. Ronayne, Stoddard and Rathbun here. They set the ball rolling and it will not stop soon."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 16, 1879.

EDMUND BURKE said, "The sincerest man is apt to be the harshest;" and true reformers are sincere men. If the "Associated Churches of Christ" are to instrumentally and under God divorce idolatrous worship from the worship of Christ, we must remember that it will not be accomplished by hatred of evil but by love of good. There is intense sublimity in the words of Paul, "filled with all the fullness of God." This is to be realized not by being filled with loathing of Satan so much as by loving Christ, who was the discoverer of the passive virtues: patience, gentleness, long-suffering, goodness, charity out of a pure heart.

THOMAS AND SWING.—We publish to-day the anonymous article from the Inter-Ocean promised last week, on these two gentlemen. It has a little of the aspect of a hoax; as if "A Preacher that was Located," was showing the ridiculousness of the plea of oppression and persecution made by Thomas, Swing and their friends, when these dear afflicted and persecuted men, like the Pope in his palace, have the multitude at their heels and money in plenty in their purses. But, hoax or no hoax, the Inter-Ocean is responsible for it, not we, and the article presents these men essentially as they are, mere caterers to the religious worldlings of the day.

THE PRIVILEGES OF TO-DAY.—Mrs. Willis A. Barnes, a young earnest Quakeress, addressed a company of ladies on a few of "The Privileges of To-day," in the parlors of Mrs. Ezra A. Cook, Chicago. Mrs. Barnes has been deeply interested in the temperance work for several years and is now giving her entire time to it. Among the privileges she mentioned were: 1st. Total personal abstinence from the use of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage, in cooking or as medicine. She spoke of the temperance hospital near London, which is more successful in treating its patients than neighboring hospitals where alcohol in various forms is used. 2nd. The privilege of using all our social influence against intemperance. 3rd. The privilege of purchasing temperance literature, that we may ourselves be better informed on the subject of alcoholic drinks, and be able to give or lend it to others for their information.

Lastly, she spoke of the privilege of petitioning the Legislature to allow women to vote on the temperance question. A petition was presented at the close of the meeting and received several signatures.

The address was full of forcible and sometimes pathetic illustrations. It was a very interesting occasion.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

This movement is due to the spiritual foresight of Rev. A. Crooks (Wesleyan) now in glory. The name was changed by substituting the word "Associated" for "United" at the request of Bishop Milton Wright of the United Brethren; to prevent all appearance of forming a new sect. Bishop Wright thought "United" indicated a denominational relation.

What is proposed to be done by this "Associated" movement?

Answer: 1st. These churches can not all meet together. Already they are in four States: Illinois, Iowa, Mississippi and Alabama.

2nd. Any attempt to consolidate them into a denomination must of course fail for the above and a multitude of reasons.

3rd. As a temperance pledge is a bond for temperance against a multitude of liquors, so the roll of the Associated churches is a protest for the worship of Christ against a multitude of Satanic worships.

4th. It is not to be like the World's Christian Alliance, which took in slaveholders and omitted Quakers. It intends to welcome all who worship and serve Christ; and exclude all who practice what the Bible calls "abominations," "vanities," "nothings" and "commandments of men."

5th. Finally and frankly, we know not what it shall be. It will be what God and those who sign it, make it. Local associations may be started and missionaries aided; but no one can or will be bound by its doings, farther than they commend themselves to his or her judgment. Two things behoove to be done: to divorce Satan's worship from Christ's in our whole land; and, in the words of Bishop Wright, to unite "Independent churches, and anti-secrecy members of pro-secrecy churches" for Christian work and missions. Will brethren Stratton of the Wesleyan and Tobey of the Telescope "inquire of the Lord" and give advice. Organization amounts to but little while we "follow the Lord wholly."

POLYGAMY CONDEMNED—U. S. SUPREME COURT UNANIMOUS.

A Mormon named George Reynolds, convicted of bigamy in the Supreme Court of Utah Territory appealed to the United States Supreme Court at Washington. On Monday, January 6th, the decision was rendered, and is announced by telegram as follows:

"The Chief Justice, speaking for the entire court, declared that this law is not in conflict with the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom, and showed that the right of Congress to legislate for the protection of public morals and for the protection of the fundamental principles of society, cannot be abridged by the Mormon claim of religious belief, any more than it could by the claim of certain other religious beliefs, that human sacrifices are necessary, or that widows must be burned with the bodies of their dead husbands."

As soon as we can obtain this vastly important decision in full we will lay it before the readers of the Cynosure. The sole ground on which this great decision rests, is that the Constitution of the United States recognizes the code of "public morals" given by Christ as the law of this land; or, in the words of the American Platform, ART. I. "That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation." The court unanimously held that the act suppressing polygamy (approved, I think, July 1st, 1862,) does not transcend the constitutional powers of Congress, because Congress has power to legislate for the protection of "public morals;" that is to say, Christian, not Mormon, Mohammedan, or Pagan, but CHRISTIAN morals; the only morals which teach that, "from the beginning" marriage was to be between one man and one woman and one only. On this law the whole superstructure of the United States is built; and not only this country, but in all Christendom, the children of such marriage, and they only, can inherit the property of parents. Promises in restraint of such marriages are by the common law, immoral and void. The celibacy of priests enforced by the Romish church is by the same law immoral and void, and only rests on the Romish civil code and ecclesiastical canons. Every false system on earth directly or indirectly assails marriage, and Freemasonry shows its lineage and heathen nature by restricting the law of adultery to the wives, sisters and daughters of Masons; which in its principles involves the complete destruction of marriage as ordained by God.

There is hope for the United States. The movement against polygamy now set forward by American women, and this unanimous decision of our Supreme Court, if fairly carried out to their legitimate consequences will constitute a platform on which will turn the social regeneration of our globe.

IS THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION CHRISTIAN?

In the slavery struggle, Garrison, and others took the ground that the United States Constitution was "A covenant with death, and an agreement with hell," which no Christian could or should work under. The rest of us held that the Constitution was a good but defective instrument which needed amending.

We wish to ask our brethren of the Christian Statesman and the National Reform, whether the late Supreme Court decision does not declare (authoritatively) the United States Constitution to be a Christian document? Not indeed perfectly, but fundamentally Christian; like all other human, uninspired documents; the Presbyterian Confession of Faith and Form of Government, for instance. And if so, what is to hinder the National Reformers and National Christian reformers, joining hands in "The American Party," whose platform the Statesman has warmly commended; and voting next year for a common candidate?

If we can unite in the next Presidential election, all who hate the dark despotisms, on one and the same Federal candidate openly committed against the lodge, we can stir the country more than when we voted for Birney or Hale, or than all our political action, in short, prior to the Free Soil movement in 1848.

Will brethren Stevenson, McAlister and Milligan answer.

MORMON MASONRY.

We print below, from the Inter-Ocean, Chicago, an expose of the Mormon marriage in the Endowment House at Salt Lake. Its truth is fully confirmed by Mrs. Judge Waite's book: "The Mormon Prophet and his Harem," written while her husband was judge of the United States Court at Salt Lake. He and Mrs. Waite now live in Hyde Park, near Chicago.

In the Cynosure for December 20, 1877, Hon. Samuel D. Greene has given a full account of Jo. Smith, the founder of Mormonism. Mr. Greene, though in greatly advanced age, has his faculties still bright; and if he has any recollections of Smith and Masonry beyond what he has written in his own life (not yet published) we hope he will write them out. Mr. Greene states that Jo. Smith came to his house in Batavia, N. Y., in 1827, the year after Morgan's murder; that he made the Mormon Bible out of a manuscript written by a Presbyterian minister named Spaulding. He also says that Smith was at that time a juggler and fortune-teller, and, with one Cochrane, who had served ten years in states prison, studied Morgan's book revealing Freemasonry, then just out. It would seem that Smith took his Bible from Spaulding's Old Testament novel, and constructed his Mormon government from the lodge. The article below shows the identity of Mormonism and Masonry in every essential particular. Mrs. Judge Waite's book, and others establish the same. The devils who inhabited the fallen lodges in New York, seem to have entered Mormonism, as of old they entered swine. One thing is certain, Mormonism rose on the spot where Masonry fell.

Annie Thompson writes to the Salt Lake Tribune detailing the form of marriage ceremony performed at the mysterious Endowment House. She says: If the woman who now styles herself Mrs. Owen Miles was an honest and deserving woman when she left London to emigrate to Utah with the Latter-day Saints, and as soon after her arrival here (only some five weeks ago) passed through the Endowment House, I think there might be some palliation for her very peculiar and seemingly inconsistent conduct.

When Caroline Owen went to the Endowment House she entered at the north door and gave her name to the recorder. She then passed inside to be washed, taking off her clothes until she was as naked as the hour she was born. She was then washed from head to foot; afterward she was covered with oil and blessed by the holy priestess; her head, ears, eyes, nose, mouth, neck, arms, heart, breast, back, and all parts of her body annointed. She then put on her new garments and received her new name in a whisper by the officiating priestess, the woman who lied so beautifully in court. Passing along she came before the great Jehovah and Elohim, they being in another room, and commenced reading the ritual of the order, "Let us go down and make man," etc., which is all too tedious to mention.

Miss Owen passed on from one change to another, having her robes and her apron on to appear before the master of ceremonies to receive the oaths. Standing straight, as shown by the elder, bringing her right arm at an angle, then placing it across her throat as the terrible words were uttered by the officiating priest, then drawing and extending her arm straight out and bringing it back to a right angle, striking it straight to the earth, interpreting the oaths as spoken, that her throat should be cut from ear to ear, that her heart should be cut out, and that she be disemboweled, and her body buried in the depths of the sea, etc., if she should divulge anything pertaining to the ceremonies performed in that house.

This is not all the oath by a great deal. Miss Owen then received all the grips, signs, tokens, etc. There are several of these which only the faithful can understand.

Miss Owen then passed on to the other degrees, prayer circles, etc. Passing onward and upward she came to the veil or arch. This being previous to her marriage. John Miles was on the inside of the veil or arch, Caroline on the outside. Then the compass and square were cut over her heart. There was only a sheet to separate John from Caroline, and before she could get through to where John was she had put her foot to his foot, her knee to his knee, her breast to his breast, her lips to his lips. Then John whispered in her ear and told her the new name she had named below. Nobody on earth knows what that name is but John and Caroline. He then brought Caroline through the veil or arch to be married. Joseph F. Smith sat immediately opposite at the table, John stood at the right and Caroline at the left. After the usual questions were put and answered the marriage was proceeded with and finished, John and Caroline walking to sealing-room, where Joseph F. Smith sat on the throne, and later stood at the door. Miss Owen walked around to the north side of the altar, Miles remained on the south side. Joseph F. Smith proceeded with the ceremony. John and Caroline were kneeling, when Joseph F. Smith told them to clasp hands across the altar and kiss each other, which they did. He then sealed them up to everlasting life, to come forth in the morning of the first resurrection to receive power and to carry out the laws of procreation forever and ever. Amen.

—The General Agent and Secretary was in Michigan last week, but goes soon to Indiana, where he will doubtless spend several weeks in Grant county and vicinity. The friends in Michigan should read his advice about their State Convention.

—Past Master Ronayne visits Angola, Indiana, next week, working the degrees on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. He will probably have other points engaged in Steuben or adjoining counties.

—Elder Browne, Illinois State Lecturer, has been working right along through the severe cold weather. On the 4th he went to Unionville to fill an appointment, but was locked out and gave up the meeting. On the afternoon of the Sabbath following he spoke to the little company of disciples meeting at Bro. Paley's in Morrison and in the evening in the Baptist church of the same place. Monday evening he was at Round Grove for a second lecture. Tuesday he drove out nine miles to an appointment. One of the directors had locked the school-house. But this Masonic arrangement was in vain for the audience got in. Wednesday evening he was at Union Grove. This week he met the committee on the Associated Churches of Christ Monday evening. Tuesday evening he was to speak in Carpenter Hall before the Chicago Association and the following night in the College Chapel at Wheaton.

—"A Reader of the Cynosure" in Harts Falls, New York, who inquires about the Associated Churches of Christ will find his question answered in the editorials of this number and also in the report of the proceedings of the Illinois State Convention published November 28th.

—Our Iowa friends will be glad to learn that their lecturer, Elder Rathbun, is again on his feet and ready for work. The best season for lecturrs is rapidly passing; let it be well improved. A few weeks' work, such as Bro. Rathbun can give you, will prepare the way for the State meeting before spring opens.

—A "Grand Dictator" and his "Grand Deputy" came to Chicago last week. They called themselves "Knights of Honor," but the "Knight of the Rueful Countenance," Don Quixote of LaMancha, would have been a more honorable visitor. His purpose was to redress the wrongs of the defenceless, these later grand gentlemen were after money. They came to start another secret society when every one knows that we are already overrun with the nuisances, and thousands of dollars that should be buying home comforts this severe winter are being worse than squandered in these lodges.

—The editor of the Dunn County News, of Menomonie, Wis., is puzzled how to avoid a correspondent who writes himself "Many Inquirers," and knows how to hit the lodge square blows. The editor is a dodger but not an artful one, for at every attempted rejoinder he presents himself more fairly to his unmerciful questioner. In the end he will have to retire in confusion, but we hope he will not see fit to do so until the lodge question is shown to the public from a few of its many sides.

—Kansas may yet find time to vindicate the reputation of one of her ablest citizens and to whom she is indebted more than to any other man—Samuel C. Pomeroy. Though his fame is clouded by the temporary success of a base Masonic conspiracy, contrived in the lodge in revenge for his great speech at the first national convention held in this city, there is no doubt that in time the ex-Senator will be vindicated. That his great services for Kansas are not forgotten or unappreciated we find occasional proofs. The Kansas Chief, edited by a Past Grand Master of the Odd-fellows of the State, in a note last week, on the Senatorial question now uppermost in the political circles of several States, among other prominent names mentions Mr. Pomeroy as its first choice for Kansas, and adds: "Some of these gentlemen are now in private life, but the cause of public honesty has not been improved by their defeat, while the public service has suffered in consequence. They are men of force and influence, and each one is worth a dozen of the man who was elected to succeed him."

—Every one will recognize the familiar features of American Masonry in the following description of a Chinese lodge funeral, from the Virginia City (Nevada) Enterprise:

"There was a Chinese funeral in this city yesterday afternoon, the dead man having been a member of the Masonic order as it exists in China. An American brass band headed the procession, which was composed of Chinamen, wearing badges and other decorations denoting their rank, and in a large covered vehicle that followed the hearse were seated a number of women musicians—a Chinese band. The instruments were fiddles, guitars, drums, cymbals and gongs. Behind the native band-wagon was a wagon loaded with roast pig and other good things eatable and drinkable to be left at the grave. Strips of paper pierced in three places with crescent-shaped holes in rows of five were strewn by thousands along the whole route of the procession."

—The Christian Instructor, United Presbyterian, is now a Chicago paper. Its new managers are from the Pittsburgh presbytery, one just from the Theological Seminary. They will maintain the high standing of the paper reached under Dr. Dales and Mr. Young. We welcome our new neighbors to the city.

Let us remember that our greatest privilege is to be a humble, Bible Christian, and to rejoice that our names are written in heaven.

Canada.

I have received encouraging letters from the following friends in Canada, which will be carefully preserved and answered when a sufficient number are received to enable me to make out a programme for work in the Dominion. Let all others interested write me at 221 West Madison Street, Chicago: J. A. Learn, Ridgeway; James Donaldson, Wardville; R. M. Gonder, Black Creek; D. B. Sherk, West Montrose; Sam'l J. Num, Brookfield Station. This is a small but good beginning.

Conversing with a Mason to-day who was formerly from Canada he said: "If you go over there they will make it hot for you;" and lifting his hand, "I have taken thirty-two degrees, am a Sovereign Prince of the Royal Secret, and if I had to give up my Masonry or my life I would die, for it is the best institution that God ever made," etc. He regretted very much that I should say that I believed the Bible to be the Word of God, and said the high-toned people in Canada belonged to the lodge, and that the members, as a rule, "were from a different class there from what they were in the States." All of which increased my desire to visit that favored spot where the lodges as a rule are composed of the "high-toned" gentry, and not as my friend acknowledged by implication they are here made up of men of the "baser sort."

Chicago, Jan. 3, 1879.

Thanks to Somebody.

On account of losses and close times, and with less than $50 of salary, and debts, and not being able to see ahead, I felt constrained to write to the publisher that I could not pay for the Cynosure another year. It was with hesitancy and regret I came to such a conclusion, but the pressure, and the wants of a large family seemed to demand it.

I always love to receive the paper. I wish to encourage the cause, and I carefully save and distribute my Cynosures. Many others read them eagerly, who are unable to take them. But I expected to be deprived of these visits of an old friend.

Judge of my surprise, then, when, on this second day of January, I received a card from the publishers, informing me that "a friend had paid for my paper for one year." Such friend will see these lines, and I wish, with all my heart, to thank him, and to pray God to bless him, as I cannot. May the dear Master reward you, and may it not be in vain. I love the cause; have suffered for it, and am willing still to suffer, if such be the Lord's will. I expect to keep my colors flying, "to the end." God bless the cause.

Yours truly, Geo. Thompson,

Sam Bowen's Dream.

[From Illustrated Temperance Tales.]

"I must have laid so a long while, and then it seemed to me that I was settin' up in my room down stairs, and there was a big jug on the table by me, full of first-rate ale. I kept takin' a drink, and emptied the pot each time, big as it was. Then I holloa'd out for some more, and the room seemed queer and foggy, as if nothin' in is was still except me and that jug.

"Then a curious-looking creature, with great eyes, come and hopped upon the table, and when I shouted for beer it took and popped a lot of money in the pot, and held the drink out to me, and I swallowed it, and set to calling for more.

"And the more I called, the more the ugly creature grinned, and set to as busy clawing hold of anything it could get, and shovin' it in the mug, where everything seemed to turn to beer in a moment, and I kept drinkin' it up. And the creature got bigger and bigger, and its arms grew so long it reached right past me and clawed up the missus' gown, and the baby's boots, and my Sunday-going suit, and in with them into the pot, and the more beer came the more I wanted, and the more I drank the more the creature laughed, till its laughing turned me cold and sick like, and I yelled out for something stronger—for something to set me on my legs again; and the monster took and stretched out his great claw and clutched hold of my girl, Lydia, and held her up screaming and calling out, 'Father, father,' to me, and I tried to reach her but couldn't, but I struck out with both fists, and I shouts out, 'Not her, not her—I'll never drink up my own girl!' and then everything went off a whirl, and I—woke, and found myself staggering off the bed, and striking out at my wife, who thought I was gone mad, and was trying to hold me in. I never shall forget it, never. The sweat was pourin' off me, and I shook like a leaf. I dropped down on an old chair by the winder, and as soon as my senses got the better of the drummin' in my chest, and the singin' in my head, I fetched a sort of breath, and groaned out, 'Is she gone?'

"'Who?' says my wife, lookin' as frightened as frightened. 'Lydy,' says I.

"'Gone, no!' says my wife. 'If you haven't woke her up she's asleep with Nellie and little Bob yonder.'

"And to quiet me, I suppose, she took and opened a door, and there, to be sure, I see my little girl with t'other little un's head on her shoulder, and, the sunshine, as yellow as gold, comin' glintin' in between the flower-pots on the winder ledge, and, Joe, if you'll believe me, that poor bit of a room, with them lyin' in it, looked like heaven to me, and my dream had seemed like hell.

"I give over shaken so terrible after a while, but I didn't say nothin' for I felt somehow that there was notions in my head that wanted thinkin' over afore I could rightly talk about 'em; and then, too, I saw, and was mighty sorry for it, that I'd hit my wife a knock over the head when I was strugglin' about, so I says:

"'Give me the mug, and I'll fetch you some water that'll do you good!'

"She looked up, surprised like, and took and fetched it, and when I come up again, our baby—leastways our youngest—was awake and cryin' to be took up.

"My wife looked wonderful white and queer, so I says to baby, 'Come along of father—let's go in the garden'; and she was willin' enough, so I wrapped an old petticoat around her, and took her down stairs and out of doors.

"I'd been out early of mornin's often enough, but this mornin' seemed wholly different to others to me. That dream of mine seemed to have changed the world to me; do what I would, I couldn't get over that awful creature holding my girl up! My girl—that first one I was so mighty proud of when she was first born! I never could have been agoin' to let her go for drink, and yet!—and then I thought of that young farmer chap, and his sixpences and shillin's so free like; and I felt mad with myself, and a curious chokin' came over me, and I sat down on an old gate, feelin' as I had never felt before in all my life.

"My little two-year-old on my arm, she looked at me with her great round eyes and then she up with her hand and patted my face. 'Poor dad,' says she, 'dad wants somesin to eat; dad's kying!' And she took and rubbed the wet off my face, and then she kissed me.

"I haven't never lost the feel of that little kiss off my face—I hope I never shall. There came into my head at that moment a sort of promise to myself that I had done with the cursed drink from that time forth, and my young 'uns should have a father to look after them, instead of a cross-grained drunken beast to bully them into going wrong. And I prayed a sort of prayer, too, only shan't tell you much about that, Joe: there's things some men can't talk much about—that's one I can't.

"I began that very day—from then till now nothing stronger than tea or milk have I ever tasted; and I don't look much the worse for it, do I? I cleaned myself up that mornin' and I went to the parson, and I took the pledge. He wouldn't come 'round to my takin' it at first, but I told him if ever I was to be got out of my ways, now was the time, and that the pledge would help me; and then I told him my dream, and he giv' in and have cheered me on like a good friend, ever since. He says to me one day, after church, 'Well, Sam, you're keeping this vow better than you kept another you once made!'

"'What other, sir?' says I.

"'Your marriage vow,' says he; 'there was a time when you didn't nourish or keep your wife particularly well, I fancy!'

"'That time's past, sir,' says my wife, who was t'other side of me; 'no one couldn't want a better husband than I've got,' she says quite fierce at the notion of any one finding fault with me.

"So you see, Joe, my dream must have come from God, musn't it? I've told you all about it, because I fancied you were anxious to succeed in life, and I tell you plainly, any man that wants to do that must fight shy of the 'Eagle,' and keep himself steady, and he couldn't have a better plan than pledging hisself right away off to have nothin' to do with drink at all.

"'Taint a light thing to do, 'taint an easy thing at first to keep to, but, my lad, it's the best chance you can give both body and soul.

"There, we're home now. I've been preachin' to you a mortal long time; don't you forget what I've said; don't you mind other chaps laughin' at you if you choose to do as I've done—I mean as I've done these last seven months. My life's been rarely different to what it was, but the new way's out and out-and-out the best way, and by God's help I'll stick to it!"

I do not think my tale wants any moral of mine tacked to it. The best moral was the cheery brightness of Sam Bowen's home, and the impatient rush of little feet to meet him when he went to supper. Good night to them all, and God speed the father on his new road in life!

Enthusiasm—Power.

Guizot, in addressing the French Protestants at one of their anniversaries in Paris, said: "Be not afraid of enthusiasm; you need it; you can do nothing effectively without it." Guizot himself was one of the coolest of men by temperament, but he was a philosopher, and could judge of the means of success in public movements like those of the depressed Huguenots. He belonged to them, and was a leader of their most orthodox party. He saw in their lack of enthusiasm the secret of their little success. Curious as the fact may seem, it is nevertheless a fact, that though the French are the most enthusiastic people of Europe in politics, and especially in war, their Protestantism fails almost entirely of the national vivacity and energy. It needs heroes, willing to suffer for the cross, and there can be no heroism without enthusiasm. French Protestantism was once full of enthusiasm, and it was then heroic indeed, both in the church and on the battle-field, but it flags and lags now for want of its old animation.

That greatest of women in literature, as Alison, McIntosh, Byron and Macaulay pronounced her, Madame de Stael, contended that there could be no effective religion without enthusiasm. She concludes her most remarkable book (her "Germany") with three splendid chapters on enthusiasm, which she almost identifies with religion itself, and which McIntosh pronounced "incomparably eloquent." She not only taught its importance in literature, faith and all true life, but she exemplified it. She was perhaps the most eloquent conversationalist of her age, or any age—all contemporary testimonies agree about that fact; and though her transcendent intellect gave her conversational power, it is the general testimony of the writers of the period that a certain sensibility, a certain enthusiasm, gave an irresistible magnetism to her conversation, and rendered it far superior to her writings. Her words thrilled like electricity. The historian, Lacretelle, records through forty pages a conversation with her on religion in an evening walk on the shores of the Lake of Geneva, which is one of the most eloquent things in French literature. She once held a colloquial discussion at her table in the Chateau of Coffet on preaching, in which she not only defended enthusiasm in the pulpit, but in the defence exemplified its power in a manner so remarkable that the record of it is one of the most interesting illustrations of her famous conversational eloquence. We owe the record to the famous

Berlin professor of geography, Carl Ritter, who was present. Lehbrel, the great critic, Sismondi, the historian, and many other eminent men were at the table. Sismondi undertook the defense of a preacher whom they had recently heard, and whose discourse was more didactic than religious. Sismondi's faith was that of his friend and correspondent, Channing, of Boston. Religion, he contended, should be chiefly morality, not feeling; otherwise it will rest chiefly in feeling, and, having no principle, it will become insulated, and therefore fanciful and fanatical, and produce those excesses from which Europe suffered so many evils through so many ages. Religion, he affirmed, needs firmness; the understanding can alone give it firmness. Madame de Stael responded, admitting the importance of intelligence in religion as in all things, but insisting that feeling and enthusiasm are absolutely essential to it; that there can be no genuine religion without them, and that the pulpit should be the very throne of enthusiasm and feeling. "Her inspiration," says Ritter, "lasted through nearly an hour. Never in the whole course of my life have I felt more nervous agitation. I had cramps even to the ends of my fingers. There was in her something of that power which Alcibiades attributes, in Plato's Banquet, to Socrates." The soul of the great woman was full of fire, and though her intellect has been pronounced the most masculine that ever a woman has shown in literature, it is her sensibility, her enthusiasm, that renders immortal her virile thoughts.

Enthusiasm is, then, a real virtue in the pulpit, in literature, in all life. There is no genius without it, no heroism without it, no saintship without it. It is a power, a charm in social life. It fuses surrounding hearts and renders them malleable to the molding power of the master-mind. It exalts theology above mere ethics, religion above mere morality, into divine and living realities; and of all places in the world the pulpit should be its focal-center. A man standing between heaven and earth, calling the multitudes from one to the other, what is he but a personal caricature without enthusiasm?

All men have hearts; all men are, therefore, susceptible of this great power of enthusiasm; but it needs to be cherished. The logical speaker needs to aim at the use of it. He should pray for it. He has been promised the "power from on high;" let him pray for that, and he cannot fail of feeling, and of making others feel!

We have not, however, wished to treat of the subject as applicable only to preaching. It is appropriate to all religious labor, to all religious life. What is a prayer-meeting without more or less enthusiasm? What a missionary, or temperance meeting? What the influence of a Sabbath-school teacher over his pupils? What the influence of a Christian man in any sphere of life? Religion is, indeed, a creed, in part; but it is more a sentiment—more in the heart than in the head; it should be in both; it is a life and a power. Guizot was right, then, when he said: "Be not afraid of enthusiasm—you can do nothing effectively without it!"—New York Christian Advocate.

Counting the Fingers.

Davy, dear, your fingers hold;
Listen, till my story's told.

Thumb's a rogue, and whispers "Come,
Let us steal the sweets," says Thumb.

Straight First Finger bends to hear;
She's a rogue when Thumb is near.

Second Finger says, "I'll go."
Cries Third Finger, "Count me, too."

Little Finger stands alone,
Says, "The sweets are not our own."

Thumb says, "Let no finger say
Where the sweets have gone to-day."

Finger First cries out, "No, no!
Not a word from me shall go."

Finger Second shakes her head,
"She would suffer death instead."

Finger Third is full of fear,
Lest the marks of guilt appear.

Little Finger cries, "For shame!
I shall tell where lies the blame.

If we all are made to smart,
With the rest I'll bear my part."

And I think that through and through,
Little Finger's right—don't you?

Postage Stamps.

HOW THEY ARE MADE.

A visit to the establishment in which the postage stamps for the United States are made was very interesting. There are about eighty persons at work making the stamps we put on our letters; and it is doubtful if there is to be found any where a busier set of workers, or any who make things fly at a livelier rate. More than half of these eighty are young women; the rest men. I say young women, for there appears to be no old or middle-aged ones among them, and "thereby hangs a tale." Men fail to come to time in the necessary delicacy of touch and rapidity of work. Not even a gross or fat woman will do; they are too coarse and clumsy for the marvelous dexterity and celerity of touch and movements required.

Nobody who buys at the postoffice a sheet of stamps even imagines the number and variety of processes it has undergone in the stamp manufactory. As one part of the work, the sheet has been counted no few-than twenty-six times. Beginning with its status as simple white paper, and so on through different hands, to the printers, the gummers, the perforators, and various others, all of whom must account for the exact number of sheets they handle, so there can be no mistake or loss.

After the paper is "wet down," as the printers say — every hundred sheets being counted—it is taken up to the printers. Each sheet is of the right size for making 100 stamps of the ordinary size. The printing-room is crowded with handpresses used for printing the stamps, no fewer than eleven presses being in active operation. Each press has three persons in attendance—one to "tend press," one to ink the plate, and one —the "printer."

The printers are paid by the hundred. Precisely how much they earn I couldn't find out, but it ought to be good wages, for they "work like beavers." The blank paper, all numbered, is charged to the printer to whom it is delivered.

Each of these eleven presses turns out 1,200 sheets a day, or 7,200 a week. Each sheet contains 200, and as they are delivered to postmasters only in sheets of 100, it follows that each sheet must be cut right through the middle. A girl with a long pair of shears cuts them as accurately as a ruled line, showing what a good eye and a rapid hand can do. One girl, whom I watched for a while, cuts fifty sheets a minute—11,000 daily! It is a silent cut, cut, cut, from morning till night, working as if life depended upon it. The girls are all busy at a variety of processes in the preparation of the stamps, and their wages average about $8 a week.

From the printing room and the drying room (the latter an insufferably hot place, where the sheets are placed in frames on drying racks) they go to the gumming room—which is also a drying room, but not hot—the drying being aided by revolving fans fixed to a shaft, which send their influence through lofty piles of gummed sheets in frames. The gum used is not gum arabic, that would in drying cause the sheets to curl and crack, but is simply a kind of potato starch. A girl swiftly adjusts the edges of a heap of printed sheets, so as to slide them all into place, while she deftly daubs them at a single stroke with the mucilaginous substance, which she applies with a single motion of a wide brush. This is the substance you "lick to to make it stick" on the letter you drop into the postoffice.

After the gumming and drying, the stamps, in sheets, are flattened out and made smooth by being subjected to the persuasive power of a hydraulic press, the force being 450 tons. After they come out, they are taken by girls who swiftly adjust them in even-edged heaps while counting.

To show how careful they are, note this fact: There was a count last summer of 106,000,000 of stamps, on a sudden and unexpected visit by government experts from Washington, who went through the piles in the safe. It was a count of long accumulation, and it was conducted and testified by the figures on the government books at Washington. Yet, out of the 106,000,000, the only discrepancy found was 851 stamps, valued at $22; the aggregate blundering of four years of this busy work, involving so many millions of stamps and dollars. Once the girls counted steadily for two days to find a single missing sheet.

The perforating is done on small machines with cylinders that have belts of little projecting cylindrical cogs or teeth, very small and close together, and having square ends like bolts. Each of these minute projections fit accurately into its corresponding slot in the metallic plate beneath; and when the printed sheet of postage stamps, all cut to a hundred each, is run through this machine, it emerges with the edges of the stamps all punctured in rows.

It is not easy for anybody to understand without seeing the process of the work itself—what fineness of touch, as well as swiftness and accuracy of movement, are required in the various handlings of these sheets of postage stamps.

Seven hundred million stamps a year. This appears to be the present rate of demand and the supply for the great American republic. Ths New York postoffice orders twice a month—an order for about 4,000,000 each time.—Christian Worker.

LESSON IV—January 26, 1879—THE BUILDERS INTERRUPTED.

SCRIPTURE.—Nehemiah 4: 7-18.

7. But it came to pass, that when Sanballet, and Tobiah, and the Arabians, and the Ammonites, and the Ashdodites, heard that the walls of Jerusalem were made up, and that the breaches began to be stopped, then they were very wroth,

8. And conspired all of them together to come and to fight against Jerusalem, and to hinder it.

9. Nevertheless we made our prayer unto our God, and set a wateh against them day and night, because of them.

10. And Judah said, The strength of the bearers of burdens is decayed, and there is much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall.

11. And our adversaries said, They shall not know, neither see, till we come in the midst among them, and slay them, and cause the work to cease.

12. And it came to pass that when the Jews which dwelt by them came, they said unto us ten times, From all places whence ye shall return unto us they will be upon you.

13. Therefore set I in the lower places behind the wall, and on the higher places, I even set the people after their families with their swords, their spears, and their bows.

14. And I looked, and rose up, and said unto the nobles, and to the rulers, and to the rest of the people, Be not ye afraid of them: remember the Lord, which is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives and your houses.

15. And it came to pass when our enemies heard that it was known unto us, and God had brought their counsel to nought, that we returned all of us to the wall, every one unto his work.

16. And it came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work, and the other half of them held both the spears, the shields, and the bows, and the habergeons; and the rulers were behind all the house of Judah.

17. They which builded on the wall, and they which bare burdens, with those that laded, every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon.

18. For the builders every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was beside me.

BIBLE READINGS.

2 Sam. 5: 17-25——1 Sam. 7: 5-17——2 Chron. 14: 1-15——Num. 13: 25-33——2 Chron. 17: 1-19——Josh. 1: 1-18....Eph. 6: 10-20.

POINTS FOR SPECIAL STUDY.

1. Nehemiah's survey of the walls of Jerusalem by night. (Neh. 2: 12 20) 2. The rebuilding begun. 3. The extent and plan of ancient Jerusalem. (Study some good map.) 4. The reasons for the opposition which arose. 5. The difficulties of the work. 6. Ancient weapons of offence and defence. 7. The Bible Readings. 8. Opposition now encountered in building up Christ's kingdom. 9. Spirit and ways in which that opposition should be met.

OUTLINE.

I. "The opposition." Some men would never be heard of but for their rage against a good cause. Sanballet (v. 7) is one of them. Both he and Tobiah had some connection, by unlawful marriage, with the Jews. The hostile party included Samaritans, Ammonites, and Arabians. (Rawlinson shows that Sargon put an Arab colony in Samaria.) There was also opposition from the Jews themselves (1) of Judah (v. 10); (2) of the provinces (v. 12). "Public opinion" was manufactured in opposition to the work.

II. "The way in which the opposition was met." The wisest precautions were employed (v. 13). 1. The lower places, as specially exposed to assault, were specially guarded. 2. Nehemiah labored to inspirit the people (v. 14). He appealed also to their natural affections, "fight for," etc. The result was that the opposition learned that they were understood (v. 15), and the building went on. But the cautious Nehe miah was not betrayed into a sense of security. Guards were set; those building were armed; the rulers were constantly on the alert; and Nehemiah himself shared in the toil and danger.

PRACTICAL TEACHINGS.

1. Opposition to a good cause may take many forms—talking, planning, writing against it. Ridicule and threats may be used. The spirit is the same.

2. The men who have done much good work in the world for God have had exalted ideas of his might and majesty.

3. There is a place for working as truly as for praying. Prayer without effort is mockery; effort without prayer is infidelity. (See Phil. 2: 12.)

4. The outward framework of a church is no more to be despised than was the wall of Jerusalem. It may be a duty to defend it with one's life.

5. We must neither forget nor underrate the men who do what is called the fighting work of the church—the reasoners, the controversialists. Paul has his place no less than John.

6. No amount of effort is successful without prayer and the trust in God which it expresses.

7. Timid friends are among the discouragements of God's workers. But they are to be treated in one way; foes in another.

8. What God has begun he will carry through if we only be faithful.

9. Christ is at the head of the church—all wise, all holy, almighty. Let us honor, trust, and each in his place, obey him.

BETWEEN LESSONS.

From the Scholar's Weekly.

Nehemiah with his royal commission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, and protected by a mounted guard came to the "governers beyond the river." His errand immediately excited the jealousy of Sanballet, the Horonite, Tobiah, the Ammonite, and Geshem, the Arabian, who seem to have held some official positions under the Persian government. The headquarters of Sanballat were at Samaria, those of Tobiah at Ammon, and those of Geshem somewhere in the Edomite territory. After he had been in Jerusalem for three days, Nehemiah went in the dead of night to take a survey of the ruined walls. Then he called the priests, the nobles, and the rulers together and communicated to them the reason of his coming. There was but one voice—and that was to build. The idea, however, of restoring those massive walls appeared to the enemies of Jerusalem so absurd that they laughed it to scorn, and intimated that the task was undertaken in order that the Jews might be able to rebel against the king. Every class took part in the restoration. The priests built their share of the wall, and sanctified it without waiting for the rest to be completed. The men of Jericho built next to them. Nehemiah arranged it so that the people built that portion near to which were their houses, in order that each man might daily look upon his share of the wall. He called out the goldsmiths, the apothecaries, the merchants, and the rulers. Even "the daughters" helped in the good work. Only one class of persons held back—and they were the nobles of Tekoa. They would not "put their necks to the work of the Lord," on account of pride. THEY did not want to work as common laborers!

NOTES ON PERSONS, ETC.

[From the Scholar's Hand-Book.]

"Sanballat," called the Horonite, probably as a native of one of the Bethhorons, Josh. 16: 3, 5; 2 Chron. 8: 5, within the limits of the old kingdom of Samaria; others say from Horonaim in Moab. Samaria was the chief city, and he was jealous of Jerusalem; hence, as the leader of the Samaritans, he opposed Nehemiah's work. He gained great influence in Jerusalem after Nehemiah's departure; his daughter married the son of the high priest Eliashib, and he erected a rival temple on Mount Gerizim and made this son-in-law the high priest.

"Tobiah," a servant, or slave, and an Ammonite, Neh. 2: 10; probably the secretary and chief adviser of Sanballat, Neh 6: 17-19. Afterwards he had such influence as to occupy a room in the temple, from which Nehemiah expelled him, Neh. 13: 4-9.

"Arabians," in general the inhabitants of Arabia, but here probably a band specially attached to Sanballat and "the army of Samaria," Neh. 4: 2.

"Ammonites," descendants of Ben-Ammi, the younger son of Lot, Gen. 19: 38. They inhabited the region east of the Dead Sea.

"Ashdodites," inhabitants of Ashdod, one of the five principal cities of the Philistines, thirty-three miles west of Jerusalem, and two miles from the Mediterranean.

"Habergeons," Old English for "coats of mail." From hals (neck) and bergen (to protect.) They were made of thin scales of bronze or iron, sewed upon leather, or linen, and overlapping one another.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss, August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7, 1878.

College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., Jan. 4, 1879.

—The revival meetings in the College church at Wheaton continued through last week with increasing interest. Saturday was given up to meetings, and the day was observed with fasting by most of the members of the church. On Sabbath evening over a hundred came forward, expressing a desire to receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit, the endowment of power from on high. It is hoped that every student in the College will be reached, and it is thought that not more than fifteen were not rejoicing in Christ on Sabbath evening. The work goes on this week, and an effort will be made to extend it to the other churches in the place.

BAPTIST.

—A Baptist church has recently been organized on the anti-secret basis in North Abington, Lackawanna county, Pa. Eld. Newell Callender is laboring among the people in that locality with much success, having baptized quite a large number into that church and still the work is going on.

There is, in another locality, some ten miles north, some prospect of another Baptist church being organized on the same basis of opposition to the lodge and other similar abominations. This interest is in the charge of Eld. S. E. Miller of Clifford, an efficient and radical advocate of reform.

A movement is already on foot under the supervision of Dea. Silas Ferris, to organize a Baptist church consisting of the dissenting party of the late Preston Center Baptist church, and others who are resolved not to fellowship the lodge, living in the same region. This last interest will pitch tent not many miles from my present home, though in another township and county. We will see what our God will do for these testifying bands of the Lord's host. We may further report in the future.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

WESLEYAN.

—General Evangelist Wardner is doing a good work in Syracuse, aided by his wife and pastor Jenkins.

—Editor Stratton, of the Wesleyan, was prevented by the snow blockade from making his customary visit to Varick, N. Y., during the week of prayer. He is spending the present week with that young and vigorous church, which grew out of an Anti-masonic lecture by Bro. Stratton, from a dry-goods box on the street, the churches having been locked against him.

—Elder W. S. May, conference evangelist, held a protracted meeting in a school house at Marshalltown, Iowa, last month, and as a result organized a Wesleyan church. This will be another blow at the lodge idolatry. Bro. May was solemnly informed, not long ago, by a Methodist preacher, that he would have to repent of his lodge opposition before he could enter heaven.

—Rev. A. M. Shimer has just been called to the Wesleyan church at College Springs, Iowa. He has just left the M. E. church (in which he has been a minister for some years), because of the influence of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship in that church. His presiding elder offered him a church with twice the salary he now gets, but he replied it was not money he was after, but freedom from lodge influence in church matters. He is a God-fearing, zealous minister, and has greatly encouraged the Christian people of College Springs by taking a stand on the National Reform, being led to this by hearing the discussions of the late convention held there.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—The Telescope of January 8th reports revivals at thirty-one different points, many of which will result in large and hopeful additions to the church.

—A new church in DesMoines, Iowa, is dedicated on the 19th inst. Bishop Wright is expected to preach the sermon on the occasion.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—There are four U. P. churches in Monmouth. Two have a membership of about 400 members each; another has a fine mission Sabbath school, conducted by students and members of the other churches, while the fourth has a Sabbath school for the colored people of long standing.

—A fine new church was dedicated Dec. 15th in San Jose, Cal. Rev. A. Calhoun is the pastor. The congregation is warmly commended by the local press for its enterprise.

—Dr. Wallace has an article in the United Presbyterian on the law of communion, which reads:

"The church should not extend communion in sealing ordinances to those who refuse adherence to her profession, or subjection to her government and discipline, or who refuse to forsake a communion which is inconsistent with the profession which she makes; nor should communion in any ordinance of worship," etc.

This article is to be interpreted, he says, in the light of the Adopting Act, in which it was stipulated "that the forbearance in love which is required by the law of God be exercised toward any brethren who may not be able fully to subscribe to the standards of the United church, while they do not determinedly oppose them, but follow the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Dr. W. argues that while a general invitation may not be given under the rule to members of other churches, yet in some cases such may be admitted to the privileges of the church, as for instance: "One whose faith, character and conduct is all that would be required of an applicant for permanent membership, who places himself in subjection to the government and discipline of the church, and whose connection with another branch of the church is not such that the session would in faithfulness be bound to require him to forsake it, may be admitted to the Lord's table; but no one who cannot come up to this standard can be received. The position of such a one is that of a temporary member, for the time being bound by all the obligations and subject to all the responsibilities of membership."

FREE METHODIST.

—One hundred and thirty-nine propositions to amend the Discipline were presented to the Committee on Revisals at the late General Conference, were read and acted on. Most of these were from preachers, and shows a degree of interest in denominational purity and success quite unusual.

—Among the changes recommended by the Revision committee was the introduction of a question, "Will you abstain from connection with all secret societies?" which was to be put to all candidates for admission to the church. There was a determined resistance to this, and it was finally determined to introduce a new clause in the general rules forbidding connection with secret societies.

—Revivals are reported in the Morgan street church in this city; in Marengo, Freeport and Kewanee, Ill.; Oak Ridge and St. Johns, Mich.

—Superintendent B. T. Roberts has gone to California with his wife to look after the interests of the denomination on the Pacific coast. His colleague, E. P. Hart, who now resides in Jackson, Mich., is spending some time in northern Iowa and Minnesota.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. J. H. Beekman, late of Byron, Ill., began the year with a new charge at Cottage Grove, Minnesota.

—Three natives of Bulgaria are now studying at Oberlin in preparation for missionary work in their own country. One of these arrived lately.

—Mr. Pentecost, the evangelist, begins his work in this city on the 19th inst., in the First Congregational church. In company with the singer, Mr. Stebbins, Mr. Pentecost began meetings at Providence, R. I., Dec. 29th. Their work at Fall River, Mass., was very successful.

—The church at Wakeman, Ohio, has just completed a new house of worship and held a two days' meeting on the last day of the old year and the first of the new. Mr. A. C. Hall, of Wakeman, read a history of the church on the first day. On the second, President Fairchild, of Oberlin, and a number of other ministers, took part.

—Major D. W. Whittle is holding meetings at Wayne, Ohio. Mr. McGranahan conducts the singing in connection with his work.

—Bro. A. T. Sherwin, formerly of Wheaton, was ordained at Pleasant Hill, Wis., Dec. 19th.

MISSIONARY.

—The New York Times notes the fact that 1878 was the most important year in the history of modern missions. In India, where more than a half century of work seemed to have made little impression on the Hindoos, there has been the largest movement toward Christianity that Protestantism has ever witnessed in heathendom. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel (High Church Anglican) has had an accession of no less than 22,000, the Dutch Reformed Mission one of 6,000, the American Baptist Mission of nearly 10,000 and the Church Missionary Society (Low Church Anglican) of 419 families. Thus in one year about 40,000 Hindoos have renounced heathenism and embraced Christianity, and apparently this is only the beginning of a great movement.

GENERAL.

—The Vermont legislature has under consideration a bill to prohibit "gambling of all kinds even grab-bags at church-fairs." Several of the States have legislated in the same direction—the opinion of the law-makers being that church gambling is no better than any other kind, and that it educates the people in crime.

—Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins have postponed their coming to Chicago until Jan. 19th, when they will begin a series of services in the First Congregational church. Meetings will be held in various churches in the several divisions of the city.

—At a recent meeting of the National Club in London some deeply interesting facts were developed as to the progress of vital religion in France. The population of that country, is was stated, is about 36,000,000, of which 1,000,000 are Protestants and 5,000,000, Ultramontanists; while the remainder, though nominally Catholics, are really destitute of all religious belief. Since the Republican victories of a year ago, when religious liberty became an established fact, a decided movement has prevailed all over the land toward Protestantism. The Reformed Church of France receives aid from the state wherever there are not less than two hundred Protestants possessing a place of worship of their own. When such aid is given it may therefore be concluded that the movement is of a permanent character. Thus quite recently six hundred Protestants in Fresnoy, in the north, have been adopted by the State. At Valenciennes, where twenty years ago there were only forty Protestants, there is now a church of two hundred and fifty receiving a grant from the State. At Lyons, with its 350,000 inhabitants, the very metropolis of Romish intolerance, reigning side by side with scepticism and atheism, three mission rooms were opened on the 17th of November. The meetings are described as crowded, and remarkable for order and attention. My conscience answers to it. This is what I want." From the South and West the same encouraging reports come. In Paris the meetings of Mr. MacAll are conducted in twenty-two mission stations with an average weekly attendance of 8,000 adults. Already they have worked a surprising change in the order and morality of some of the worst districts of the city. The interest of the French people in religious truth is perhaps best witnessed by the fact that in the Trocadero, during the Exhibition, 1,500,000 copies of the Gospels besides 20,000 Scripture cards and 3,000 Testaments and Bibles were distributed to grateful recipients.

News of the Week.

—Philadelphia reports 739 fires for the year 1878. Value of property destroyed, $1,554,518.

—The New York papers report 917 failures in that city during last year. Liabilities $63,958,403.

—There is almost an epidemic of scarlet fever here, and it and diptheria threaten increased ravages, since the extreme cold weather leads to diminished ventilation. The cause is chiefly attributed to sewer gas in dwellings, resulting from defective plumbing and failure to ventilate soil pipes.

—Judge Driggs of New York, is out with a proposition to the farmers of the west. He proposes that they raise a fund of $5,000,000 to build a fleet of twenty first-class steamships of 2,500 tons burden each, for the purpose of carrying their wheat to Europe at first cost. He argues that such a fleet could carry grain and all produce abroad quickly and cheaply, and that they would pay their own cost over and over. It would bring the producer and consumer close together, and would release a large army of middlemen who now thrive by exhorbitant charges. Judge Driggs is the man who conceived and carried out a plan for damning the Jersey flats, which from waste lands have become worth many millions of dollars.

—The great fortune left to the heirs of John Jacob Astor was, at the time of his death, estimated at $40,000,000, and he was the sixth in the list of the rich men of the world. Baron de Rothschild, the Duke of Devonshire, Sir Robert Peel, and Louis Phillip were said to have greater fortunes than Astor. In 1873 the Astor estate was estimated to be worth $90,000,000. At the time of the death of A. T. Stewart, in 1876, his estate was valued at $80,000,000. The richest man liv- in New York is undoubtedly W. H. Vanderbilt, who was made heir to the bulk of the immense fortune of his father, and about whose bequests there has been bitter litigation.

—In a cabinet meeting last Friday Secretary Sherman exhibited a statement showing the daily sales of four per cent bonds since Jan. 1, the total amounting to over $40,000,000. This immense sale was commented upon as extraordinary, going beyond the expectations of every member of the cabinet. The success of resumption was referred to, and regarded as permanent. A statement from the Treasury shows that twice as much gold has been paid in as has been called for in the process of resumption.

—A general committee, with headquarters at the Mayor's office, commenced canvassing New York city on Tuesday for clothing, provisions and supplies for the poor, calling at every residence and store with wagons, superintended by the officers of the various charitable societies.

—Benj. Hunter was hung at Camden, N. J., last Friday. At the time of the execution his strong will failed him and he was almost in a dead faint. The sheriff gave him whisky as a stimulus, but it had the opposite effect, and the man was executed in a drunken stupor.

—Capt. Borgardus of Chicago, last week accomplished the feat of breaking 6,000 glass balls in 6,013 shots with a single shot gun. He broke 5,680 without a single miss, which is without precedent. The balls are flung into the air by a spring and are used instead of live pigeons.

—The crop circular of the Illinois Department of Agriculture for December, 1878, gives some interesting statistics as to the corn crop of last year. The 8,972,088 acres planted in corn in 1878 produced 251,149,230 bushels, valued at $56,181,933. In 1877 there were 8,635,411 acres planted in corn. The product amounted to 269,889,742 bushels, valued at $77,562 879. The heaviest corn-producing counties are McLean (9,094,518 bushels), LaSalle (6,773,430 bushels), Warren (6,980,310 bushels), Sangamon (5,968,340 bushels), Will (5,892,920 bushels), and Livingston (7,217,640 bushels).

— A military court of inquiry is to be held in this city this week on the case of Major Reno at his own request. He has been accused of cowardice in not aiding Gen. Custer in the memorable Indian fight where the latter and his command were slain.

—An account of the riot of the students of the University of Kieff, Russia, says that the students in a meeting outside of the town decided to protest against the closing of the university. A number, well armed, proceeded to the university, forcing their way in after disarming the police, and fixed on the blackboard an energetic protest against the arbitrary proceeding of the authorities. Two companies of local militia tried to disperse the students. A collision occurred and eighty persons were killed and wounded. The cavalry force finally cleared the square in front of the university. Many students were arrested. Similar riots on a smaller scale have broken out in other university towns. It is believed there is an intention of proclaiming a state of siege in Kieff and Kharkoff. The police are instructed to stop the smuggling of revolutionary pamphlets and to prevent the entrance of revolutionary emissaries from Germany. A dispatch from Berlin says that many Russian students, arrested for participating in the recent disturbances, have been banished to Siberia.

—Electoral statistics wonderfully corroborate the reports of the progress made by the Republican party in France. Fifty-six Conservatives elected in 1876 received 15,646 votes, whereas in 1879 they only obtained 3,208 votes, losing 12,438 votes. Nineteen Republicans elected in 1876 received 5,636 votes, and in 1879, 20,262 votes, gaining 14,626.

—The State Department at Washington received a dispatch Dec. 30th from Mr. Schenck, the United States Consul at Barcelona, Spain, announcing the arrival there of the first cargo of wheat that was ever imported to that place from America. The cargo consisted of 72,000 bushels of Minnesota wheat, was carried in an English steamer, and the freight cost $18,000. There was great excitement at the place, and the grain was pronounced equal in quality to any ever received in that market.

—The Cornish Bank, at Truro, Cornwall, closed Jan. 3d. The bank did a very large business in mining and other commercial enterprises. It was established about one hundred and ten years ago, and has branches at Falmouth, Penryn and Redruth. The bank had an authorized issue of £49,000. The deposits amount to £5 000,000.

—One of the northerly provinces of Brazil is suffering from famine and pestilence of the most horrible character. Ceara, in Brazil, has a large frontage upon the Atlantic coast, and in this portion of it the climate is delightful. In the interior and mountainous districts it is hot—the streams dry up in summer, and the lands often are so baked that vegetation is destroyed. At such times the inhabitants of these districts flock to the cities of the coast. An exchange says: "This year they gathered in large numbers at the capital, Fortaliza, and there the small-pox broke out and is raging with such virulence as might be expected of a crowded population. Three hundred deaths occur at this place per day." There are no medicines, or nursing, or food. In the interior the inhabitants are reported as feeding upon the dead bodies of their fellows, and perishing with thirst. The history of the famine and pestilence in China is not more horrible in its facts than that of Ceara.

—By the report of the United States Consul at Glasgow, recently transmitted to the department, it appears that wages are steadily declining in that country. Laborers receive from fifty to seventy-five cents a day; miners eight to twelve cents per hour; mechanics $7 a week; printers $8. On railways, conductors are paid $5 to $6 a week; switch-tenders $5; engine drivers 10 to 14 cents an hour; firemen 6 to 8 cents an hour. The cost of living is about the same as in the United States.

—A correspondent with the Quettah column invading Afghanistan, telegraphs from Sifoodin, Tuesday, as follows: "One hundred and forty British cavalry yesterday defeated a body of Afghans, killing twenty-four and capturing nine. Twelve hundred Afghan cavalry were subsequently forced to abandon the heights by our cannonade. Seven British were wounded. It is thought this skirmish will cause the Afghans to decide not to defend Candabar."

Home and Farm.

WATER YOUR STOCK.

An inquiry has lately been raised by a farmer who has lost cattle whether smutty cornstalks are not the cause. Several replies suggest the real reason, namely, the lack of salt and water. Cattle fed on dry stalks, without a good supply of these necessaries, have been examined after dying of internal fever, and the contents of the large stomach found to be a solid, indigestible mass which the oil, etc., given as medicine, had hardly penetrated an inch.

Two letters to the Inter-ocean give a word of experience: "I lost five head of yearling blooded heifers in twelve hours—not half starved, as you say, but would make fair beef. I feel certain my loss was caused by the great change of feed caused by the deep snow. They had all the green grass they could eat, like September feed, and the big snow shut that all off. I then turned them into a fresh stalk field, and put them in the barn every night, where they had plenty of hay and free access to a tank of water, but no salt. I think the large cattle kept the small cattle away till the tank froze over. The proof of this is, that the large cattle were not affected in the least. We immediately attended to salting, and seeing that the small cattle got plenty of water, and they are all right now."

"The stomach of the animal is so crammed with stalks, leaves, husks, and cobs as to render it wholly incapable of natural action. The animal cannot raise its cud, cannot digest its food, and must die. There is no disease killing those cattle. Cattle die here, and will die anywhere under the same treatment. A competent jury of inquest in such cases would render the same short verdict that a similar jury would in a great many cases of hog cholera, to wit: Killed by their owners."

Chewing the Food Fine.

Doubtless a vast amount of ill health is due to bad cooking; but almost as much may be charged to rapid eating. The number of persons who habitually chew their food perfectly fine before swallowing it is very small. We have not time to stop to eat, but we can swallow something, and go about our work. Three digestions are known to physiologists; mouth digestion, stomach digestion, bowel digestion. To make the first complete, the food should be ground fine by the teeth and mixed with the saliva and nothing else; then, and not till then, it is ready to be introduced into the stomach, and go through a second process. The stomach is a patient, long-suffering organ, but it cannot always do the work of the teeth and its own, too, and when, from sheer inability to meet the unjust demands forced on it, dyspepsia, with all its annoying train, takes possession, the hapless victim can only mourn over his unwise haste, and repent of his omissions when it may be too late to repair them. Children, especially, need to be instructed as to the necessity of thorough mastication of their food, and the habit formed in them of chewing it fine and taking ample time to eat.

Gain..... 142

For the week ending January 9th 107 renewals were received and 86 new subscriptions. Total 193. Our readers will remember that the discontinuance of unrenewed subscriptions keeps the number smaller than it would be if every subscriber renewed.

Good News.

Jas. Graham, Birmingham, Iowa, sends twelve subscriptions for one year each.

O. C. Blanchard, Ironton, Wis., sends six subscriptions for one year each.

Warren Parker, Cornton, Vt., sends five subscriptions for one year each.

E. Bascom, Greensburgh, Trumbull Co., Ohio, sends five subscriptions for one year each. Fifteen men pay for one of these copies. Mr. Bascom writes: "I must tell you how I obtained one subscription for a year. First I got a man to read a letter from a renouncing Freemason in answer to a letter from a Mason in the lodge. We were in a store, and there were nine that listened. After reading the proposition was made to form a reading club and every one present signed his name with ten cents each, including the merchant Smith, and his son. I have since increased the number to fifteen. Mr. Smith offered to let them read in his store or else provide a room for that purpose if they could not read in the store. * * * I hope some of these will become permanent subscribers." This is certainly a good beginning.

Conrad Stegner, E. Castle Rock, Minn., and J. Talbot, Pella, Iowa, each send four subscriptions each, making a New Year's present of the paper to their children. Mr. Talbot writes: "I have children who have families and I look upon the Cynosure as a nice New Year's gift, and I have a desire to help the 10,000 subscribers. Our number at Pella for years was four. I hope to send you eight new ones and as many more as possible."

A. W. Morris, S. Argyle, N. Y., and J. B. Slocum, Castile, N. Y., each send four subscriptions for one year each.

John C. King, Chase City, Va., sends three subscriptions for one year each and two for two months each.

J. Shoemaker, Albion, Iowa, adds three to his club.

J. Norway, Lisbon Center, N. Y., (over 75 years of age) sends three subscriptions for a year each—his renewal and two new ones. He writes: "I have been trying for two years to get subscribers. * * * The subject is a very unpopular one, but the truth will prevail. So if it takes two years more to get two more subscribers I am in for the fight. I pray daily that God will speed the right and that the powers of darkness may be overthrown."

Anson Eastman's club of three for a year each and one for six months, sent from Warren's Corners, N. Y., is at last received from the dead letter office. Mr. Eastman writes: "I expect to add a great great many more names to my club before March 1st."

Jas. R. Gish, Roanoke, Ill., sends three subscriptions for a year each and two for four months each.

J. H. Borton, W. Unity, O., sends three subscriptions for one year each.

H. Loker, Acton, Mass., sends two subscriptions for one year each and two for four months each.

R. J. Thompson, El Paso, Kansas, Samuel Baldridge, Monmouth, Ill., W. Collins, Salina, Iowa, Wm. Hoobler, Wedersburg, Ind., Wm. O. Shaw, S. Northfield, Vt., F. Dunbar, Plymouth, Ct., each send two subscriptions for a year each.

We hope in addition to clubs received, next week to report a long list of pledges towards the 10,000 to be fulfilled before March 1st, 1879.

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertainment will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLURKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 13, 1879.

Topics of the Time.

The Masonic grand hailing sign has gained a victory in Illinois politics. Three weeks ago we published a conversation between Hon. C. B. Farwell and Gen. John A. Logan respecting the pending Senatorial election in the Illinois Legislature. Logan's mysterious but significant allusion to Masonry, and then his carefully avoiding that topic so soon as he learned that Farwell was not a Mason, will not fail to be remembered. Grips and the hailing sign were potent, and on Friday last Logan was nominated by the Republican caucus. Next morning with the announcement in the morning papers, the Inter-ocean, of which Logan is part owner, opened a two-column department for "THE LODGES," soliciting news from all secret orders. So Logan pays for his nomination!

This victory for Logan and the lodge has doubtless a wider scope than simple State politics. It means Illinois for Grant in 1880 and a ready worker for the Masonic coterie of Sovereign Inspector Generals and Knight Templars in Congress. Logan was a strong man in the ring with Butler and Conkling seven years ago, and with a pliant President they might again carry about the offices of the country in their pockets. No observing person doubts that Grant is being managed by shrewd men in this country. They will play him about Europe until the "affair is ripe," when he will reappear upon the stage of American politics confident and happy, with the prospect of another lease of Presidential honors.

Two celebrated preachers from Boston were in Chicago last Sabbath. W. H. H. Murray, a former light in the Congregational pulpit of Boston, was to be seen driving about with a noted sporting man behind a fast team. He is here to introduce to the racing fraternity a trotting wagon he has invented. George F. Pentecost who left a prosperous Baptist church in the same city of Boston for the work of evangelist, began on the same day a series of meetings for the conversion of men to God, in which three of the churches of the West side are united. Mr. Pentecost's labors in Fall River, Mass., were, under God, the means of several hundred conversions. He is accompanied by Mr. Stebbins, who succeeded the lamented Professor Bliss in conducting the song service in Major D. W. Whittle's revival work.

Vice President Wheeler is said to have the credit of making the first successful war on the liquor-sellers about the Capitol at Washington. By law the Vice President has control of matters about the Capitol grounds. When Henry Wilson filled that office he attempted to drive liquor from the place, but without success. He found that so long as Congressmen would ask for drinks the restaurant keepers would sell in spite of his prohibition, and it is said that from fear of the imbibing members he gave up the battle. Senator Ferry, who was his temporary successor, was President of the Congressional Temperance Society. He attempted to remove the evil with no better success. When Wheeler came into office he sent for the restaurant keepers and told them they would be removed on the first violation of his order prohibiting the sale of wine or liquors of any kind in their places. By an evasion they furnished liquor free, but the first offender was removed without a moment's warning. When members of Congress remonstrated they found the Vice President immovable, and now they carry bottles in their pockets, and liquor can only be found in the committee rooms and the Democratic cloak room of the Senate. The latter arrangement, says a correspondent, "is a primitive affair but answers every purpose. An old wood-box with a lid stands in the corner behind the door. Upon it stands an innocent looking water-cooler with a number of glasses. By lifting the lid you will find a number of bottles—some empty—of choice old Bourbon, wherewith the Democratic statesmen are accustomed to regale themselves with the traditional beverage of their party." The work to be done to prevent the recurrence of such disgraceful scenes as are occasionally reported from Washington, is at the polls at home; but all thanks to our Vice President for the grand work he has done.

The decision of the Supreme Court on the polygamy question is perplexing the followers of Brigham Young. One of his daughters made a sensational speech in defense of polygamy last week in the Woman Suffrage Convention in Washington; and the Mormon papers are denouncing the verdict as illegal and unjust. Their delegate to Congress, Cannon, says his people will submit to the law of 1862, and hopes that liberal treatment will be given them by the government so that their families may not be broken up and their children declared illegitimate. A committee from the Woman Suffrage Convention, two of whom were from Utah, called on President Hayes last week, and called his attention to the decision, claiming that the enforcement of the law would make thousands of women outcasts and their children illegitimate. Care must be taken of these, the real sufferers of the barbarities of Mormonism, and the President promised due attention to their case. But little mercy should be shown to the leaders in this religion of lust. Joseph Cook said in a late lecture, "The Mormon problem, I, for one, do not expect to see settled unless by the school or by the sword." We are drawing near the time when we shall know which it will be.

Moody wins the heart of every mother when he talks of children in church. It is a pity that severe study or some less worthy reason, has surrounded our preachers with a nervous atmosphere into which the mother dreads to bring her baby. In a recent sermon in Baltimore Mr. Moody said: "I have pitied those poor mothers who cannot afford nurses, and who are kept from church because they have to mind the baby. Suppose they do cry; we don't mind it at home, and I don't see why it should be so awful here. There are some fidgety people who don't like babies, but I think they are the ones who ought to stay at home. I hope the time is coming when it will be the fashion to bring babies to church."

An excellent brother in Christ who is widely known for his testimony for the truth, writes with much feeling at the position of the pastor, lately come to his church, on Christmas, which he exalted as a day to be observed in honor of Christ's birth. He says, "Did not that 'peace on earth, good will to men,' of which much is made by advocates of Christmas have reference to the life of Christ Jesus which was begun in Bethlehem and culminated on the cross? If so, is it a proper text to preach Christmas from? Is not Scripture misinterpreted and something of that joy which belongs to the communion table taken from it? But the question is not one of Santa Claus, but shall we have and hold to God's Word as our whole rule of faith and practice or not? With the martyr Hooper, we will scruple the vestments (Christmas) and take the law that is 'given in the Mount and not that manufactured at its base.'"

THE COMING DAWN.

BY REV. L. N. STRATTON, A. M.

The world has long been sleeping
  Without hope or love or care,
And the stars their vigils keeping,
  O'er the drowsy realms of air;
And the dark night's close-drawn curtain
  Seems to wrap the sleepers round,
Till the waking is not certain
  From a slumber so profound.

But night's watches are for slumber,
  As the winter is for rest,
So the life and thought are stronger,
  Because with resting blest,
And the lark's wing must be folded,
  Though to heaven it bears its song,
And the swift deer's foot will weary,
  After fleeing far and long.

So when hoarse-toned storms are sounding
  On their organ-pipes the vales;
And the woods and hills resounding
  With the winter's snows and gales,
They are filling a high mission,
  For the earth's sweet, coming spring
And will better earth's condition
  When the birds are on the wing.

When the storm-king's diapason,
  Loud is sounding through the trees,
And he makes each hillside forest
  A colossal bank of keys,
Fear not, frail heart, for spring-time
  Will blossom far more fair,
Just because the winter's pinions
  Shake their white down in the air.

As the maiden Spring's caresses
  Make stern Winter's grasp relax,
And the sun with mild approaches
  Seeks his northern parallax,
So unannounced the dawning
  Gently gilds the eastern sky,
While Aurora is adorning
  Truth's bright morning gates on high.

And I hear a mighty struggle,
  The bold fight twix Right and Wrong;
And the nations in their trouble,
  Like the tumult of a throng,
Though the ages have crept slowly,
  And time's winter has been long,
Yet the hopes of all the holy
  Have been staked against the strong.

Now the time is fast approaching,
  In the battle of the right,
When the golden beams of morning
  Glad shall triumph o'er the night,
And a zone of brilliant sunlight
  Soon shall flood the earth with gold,
And fill the earth with glory,
  Like as Eden was of old.

There are a million voices humming,
  Like the waking of the dead,
And the tramp of armies coming,
  Like a shaking earthquake tread:
While the day-dawn breaking o'er us
  Floods the land and sweeps the sea,
And the angels join the chorus
  Of the anthems of the free.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF MELBOURNE, AUSTRALIA.

In the Master's vineyard there are different departments of labor, each having its own peculiar sphere of action, but each and all tending to the accomplishment of one desired end, God's glory and the salvation of precious and immortal souls, each one of which is of value beyond computation, "for what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul."

When a worse than worthless life is ended and the soul that gave action to that life has passed time's boundary and entered upon the stern realities of eternity, in speaking of that individual we pass the subject lightly by, feeling it to be a relief to the better portion of humanity that such an one's place shall know him no more. But if we only look at that individual from another and higher standpoint, we shall see that that spirit which is now mingling with the lost in the gloomy regions of despair, might now have been in Paradise. In not a few instances that child knelt at his mother's knee and learned to lisp his evening prayer, and as that child lay sleeping a fond mother bent over that sleeping form, and as she looked and loved, she tried to picture all that was in store in the future for her darling boy; that child from being a Sunday scholar might have risen to be a teacher, and have been instrumental in leading the members of his class to the Saviour and had them as stars in his crown of rejoicing, then when coming down to the dark waters of Jordan they should suddenly become lit up with heavenly light, and there upon the other shore stand a glorious convoy of holy angels watching and waiting and bidding him come and welcome home. Such might have been the life and death of one, who instead of being a blessing, was a curse to the world.

To secure the higher and nobler end of life many agencies are at work, and we may justly place Young Men's Christian Associations in the foremost rank. And why? Because their members are all Christians professedly; and the majority of them young men, who have not yet fallen into the time-worn groove of older Christians, who, though saved themselves, too often put forth no direct and personal effort for the salvation of others. Young men in the vigor and fire of young manhood, who are not only bold to take up but firm to sustain the consecrated cross and prepared to push the battle to the gate of hell and snatch poor souls from going down to the pit. In these associations Christians of every denomination sink their little differences and stand upon a common level and all work for one united purpose—that of doing good.

For a young colony like Victoria, she may well feel proud of her Young Men's Christian Association, especially as they are now in occupation of their new hall and in full swing.

The Association's hall stands in a commanding and central position in the city in Russell street, a little to the south of Bourke street, the busiest of our thoroughfares, as if inviting its members to turn aside from the busy throng and enter the spacious hall, ascend the grand staircase and then turn into the library, or take a lounge in one of the beautifully fitted up sitting-rooms, or else go and have a litle chat with the secretary, Mr. Marsh, an out-and-out Yankee, to whose indomitable perseverance and business push, combined with his kind Christian bearing to all, copied from the Master, the Association owes much of its present position.

The number of members and subscribers on the roll is 702, which number may seem small, but remembering the youthfulness of the colony and also of the Association itself, which is certainly not past its boyhood, being only seven years old, and seeing what they have accomplished in point of numbers, in a beautiful hall, and the power they wield for good, we thank God and take courage. The number of volumes in the circulating department of the library is 2,300, and in the library of reference 350. The papers and periodicals on the tables of the reading-room include the leading colonial English and American publications. Evangelistic services are held every Sabbath evening in one of the low theaters, the Colosseum, which is thronged with attentive hearers, most of whom are attracted from the gossiping crowds that parade Bourke street on Sunday evenings, by the singing which forms a large part of the service. Services are also held in the Mission Hall, Latrobe street, another questionable part of the city, and also in some of the suburbs.

In the hall of the Association prayer meetings are held every Saturday evening, which are often seasons of power and sweet delight. A Bible class for young men has also been formed, conducted by Mr. Good, which promises to be both popular and useful. Lectures and social meetings have frequently been held, and always appreciated. Recently a gymnasium has been added to the many attractions for its members, and the building appears to be lacking in nothing that would make it attractive, useful and complete. I might have mentioned that in connection with the services of the Mission Hall in Latrobe street, are a sewing class, a singing class, and boys' Bible class, the average attendance at which is 70, the singing class 57, and the sewing class 40. This is considered good for such a neglected and questionable part of the city.

And now, Mr. Editor, I will draw this brief sketch to a close, commending this and every other association that has for its aim and end the general good, the elevation of the masses, and the glory of God most high, to him from whom comes every good and perfect gift, and wish them every success and God's speed.

I remain yours truly,

DAVID T. COUCH.

ANCIENT AND MODERN IDOLATRY.

By the term idolatry, we mean any image-worship, or reverence paid to squares and compasses, gavels, lamb-skin aprons, etc., or any other device of men by which one looks for moral guidance in this world, and for salvation in the world to come. There is no essential difference between an image and a set of Mason's tools as instrumentalities for man's salvation. Freemasonry is idolatry.

The consequences of a relapse from godliness to idolatry are very graphically pointed out in the prophecies of Ezekiel. The prophet wishes to make the Jews understand why they have lost their former glorious state and been carried off into captivity. He attributes this calamity to their introduction into Jerusalem of the idolatries of Egypt, Phœnicia and Assyria.

The idolatry of Egypt, as given by the prophet, is partly explained by modern discoveries in that country; and if Mason's tools be put in the place of "creeping things and abominable beasts," the worship is not dissimilar to that of the lodge.

And he brought me, said the prophet, to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold a hole in the wall.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door.

And he said unto me, Go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here.

So I went in and saw; and behold every form of creeping things, and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the house of Israel portrayed upon the wall round about.

And there stood before them seventy men of the ancients of the house of Israel, and in the midst of them stood Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, with every man his censer in his hand; and a thick cloud of incense went up.

This swinging of censers to these images of beasts on the walls, may well be compared to the high bombastic praise of Masonry which its members always indulge in on every possible occasion.

The prophet continues:

Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, The Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth.

This is the same kind of argument, one would suppose, that the Christian minister must use when he goes into the dark chambers of the lodge to revere the squares and compasses, etc., portrayed there. He can hardly think that the Lord sees him.

Then the prophet is shewn the idolatry brought in from Phœnica the worship of Adonis, the beautiful youth who was killed by a boar, and whose death the Phœnician women bewailed once a year. This worship was called by the Jews the worship of Tammuz, and was observed in the very temple itself.

He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

Then he brought me to the door of the Lord's house, which was towards the north, and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs towards the temple of the Lord, and their faces towards the east; and they worshiped the sun towards the east.

This latter worship was, of course, the sun worship, or fire worship of the East, which our modern Masons have introduced to some extent into their lodge worship. The women weeping for Tammuz is also outdone, if possible, by our female orders of secret association, and by the tearful "lodges of sorrow" of the Freemasons.

Any honest man acquainted with the idolatry of the lodge need only read the eighth chapter of the Prophet Ezekiel to be convinced that the same shameless, obdurate spirit that animated the Jews in introducing these foreign abominations into their holy worship, also animates our Masons in bringing this foreign institution of Freemasonry into our country. The motive with the Jews was perhaps the mercenary one of pleasing the merchants and travelers of the nations with whom they traded. The motive of the Jewish women in weeping for Tammuz was probably the same, viz., to commend their male relatives to the traders from Phœnicia.

With our Freemasons, beside motives of success in trade, which are quite powerful enough, there are added other motives to which the Jews were but little subject, viz., motives of success in politics.

It is a sad sight to see American citizens, under the light of the Christian religion, and with the responsibilities of republican government upon their shoulders, exhibit the same obdurate disregard of their religion that was manifested by the Jews, and evidently for a purpose equally vile and detestable. The Jewish trader of Jerusalem, and his wife and daughters all doubtless wished to get rich, and would not be outdone by their fellow citizens in the base and servile arts necessary to become so; turned their backs upon the temple, and sold themselves, body and soul, to foreign merchants, and as a consequence of this recreancy to their true religion, they all were carried off into captivity. They went to the east, where sun-worship was the religion of the land and where the women had something else to bewail besides the mockery of Tammuz.

Our traders, and their wives and daughters, who are seeking favor and wealth through the idolatrous worship of the Masonic lodge, are doing virtually the same thing. They are turning their backs on every thing American, and obdurately selling themselves, body and soul, together with their republican government, for the sake of the impure and imaginary advantages which this foreign idolatrous worship gives them.

One would suppose that the American citizen, instead of becoming a sun-worshipper, or a censer swinger to squares and compasses, or a weeping member of a "Lodge of Sorrow," or a fire-worshipper, had better worship the fiery, burning eloquence of the Prophet Ezekiel. It might make a man of him; while playing the Mason makes him the jumping-jack of a sneering, cynical set of infidel London clubbists.

Facts without Ornament.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF GRAND LODGE OF IOWA, HELD AT CEDAR RAPIDS, JUNE 4, 1878; A. L. 5878.

It is an oft repeated remark: "He is a good advertisement for us Masons; they are making applications by the dozen." To show the facts and figures of this statement I send you the number initiated, passed and demitted from sixteen lodges in whose neighborhood I know of anti-secrecy work being done. There has been initiated 37, passed 36, raised 27, demitted 56. Taking it Masonically, that a man is not a Mason until he has taken the third degree, there have been over two to one more demitted than "raised" (or taken the third degree). So that statement is proven false from their own record.

On page 333 of Grand Lodge report we find the following:

Lodges enrolled	384
Represented at present session	286
Extinct lodges	33
Working lodges	351
Initiated	846
Passed	814
Raised	799
Demitted	761
Died	117
Suspended	27
Expelled	18
Members	18,486
Grand Lodge receipts	$10,875 25
Disbursements and mileage	10,875.95

Therefore the summing of the Grand Lodge for one year is in cash $369 70 more than the receipts! Does this show progress?

On page 264 we find this report: "The committee find that there are several lodges in the State that are comparatively dead. They are doing very little if any work, and are in a starving condition, both Masonically and financially. We are satisfied the percentage of correct returns is no greater than it was ten years ago."

In the appendix, page 96, after discussing colored Masonry at quite a length the subject is closed with this remark: "The question to-day and for us is, Can two organized Grand Lodges exist at one and the same time in a State."

On the next page we find these sentiments in reference to charity: "The increasing demand made by lodges for money expended in caring for the sick and burying the dead, upon the lodges to which the brother belonged, makes a demand upon the Grand Lodges for legislation upon this subject. It was once the common law of Masonry that a brother, sick or dying, should be cared for wherever he happened to be, and it was done cheerfully and Masonically, without the hope of fee or reward beyond that arising from the consciousness of duty done. But so much from other secret societies has crept into our practice, and legislation, too, that old Masons, could they come again into our halls would not recognize the Masonry of to-day, where everything done must be paid for." Charity paid for! Who ever heard of the like! But this is the kind of good charity so often spoken of in Masonic circles when deriding us cowans.

Grand Orator Lewelling, in his address, for which the Grand Lodge gave him $25 and a vote of thanks besides, uses this language after speaking of the different and sectarian religions: "In the bounds of Masonic charity I found what I sought," etc. "We are told that Masonry is no religion. I deny it. We have too long taught that Masonry is no religion. No wonder we have sometimes failed to keep the craft in due bounds, when they are told that the sublimest principles of Masonry are but the doctrines of an insurance company. (Report p. 112). "Masonry is so noble a principle, so grand, so elevated, that it overrides all creeds and embraces all who acknowledge the brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God."

In the next page in speaking of the bigots (cowans) he breaks forth in this strain: "Truth is absolute—the opposite of truth is error. We teach the truth; therefore you are in error." And a little further down he says: "Religion forsooth! a theocracy of the devil! Satan clothed as an angel of light! A wolf in sheep's clothing, seeking whom he may devour!" Comment is unnecessary. Secret Socialistic Societies.

LECTURE BY JOSEPH COOK, BOSTON.

Germany, with the pistols of assassins at the breast of her Emperor, concludes that the evils of suppressing Socialism are fewer than those of allowing it freedom of speech. Russia, under an Emperor who has manumitted the serfs, is of a similar mind. A deep growl comes up from the Nihilist atheistic party in Russia, and the Emperor is told over and over that if he does not want reforms from below, he must institute them from above.

A remnant of the Parisian Commune exists in America. If it were worth while to discuss the small influence of these desperadoes, I might pause to describe the pestilent organizations in New York, now headed by Edmond Megy, a ruffian who assisted prominently in the murder of Archbishop Darboy and other hostages at La Roquette, in Paris, in 1871. For the crime of another murder the villain had been condemned to twenty years in the French galleys. After burning the palace of the Legion of Honor he fled to London, and then to New York. He may now be seen not infrequently, presiding over banquets where ribald songs are sung, all things sacred blasphemed, and foul and ferocious speeches, in support of Communism and Socialism, made by drunken men to drunken audiences. Justus Schwab, of the socialistic Labor Party, and Megy are excellent friends; and when lately the latter was arrested, the former procured him bail, and conducted his defense. Olivier, Hauser, Robinet, members of the Paris Commune, are fellow-workers with Megy in New York. The most frequent inculcation of their newspaper, La Centralization, is: "Use lead if you would get bread."

The socialistic Labor Party in the United States was formed by German political refugees some five years ago, and is now supposed to contain 25,000 members who can vote. Here, in the language of its leaders, is a brief statement of its aims:

"The entire overthrow of the present social system; the abolition of all personal property in land, and other means of production, and their cession to the state; the introduction of the co-operative plan in labor, so that every laborer may be a partner in every factory or workshop; the compulsory limitation of the hours of labor to eight hours a day or less, according to the requirements of the unemployed workmen; the regulation of the prices of labor by arbitration between the employer and the employed until the co-operative system is introduced; compulsory education and the opening of all colleges and universities free to all classes; the abolition of savings banks; the abolition of direct taxation and the institution of a sealed income tax, and the taxation of all church property."

Dr. Donai, Dr. Striebling and R. Sorge assisted in founding this party, and its most prominent New York member is the notorious Justus Schwab. This organization, or party, as you please to call it, has head-quarters at Cincinnati. If you go to that city and stay three or four days under the smoke of its industrious chimneys, and pick up the eccentric socialistic newspapers which appear in the beer-saloons, you will find a strange atmosphere about you in the moral as well as the physical world. The soot in the physical air is quite noticeable, and here is a specimen of the soot in the political air. It is a Labor song, directed against a leading American newspaper, and published with editorial approval:

Whitelaw Reid had best beware!
Hurrah!
Or the working-man will make him stare!
Hurrah! hurrah! hurrah!
Let Whitelaw Reid and his pals but dare
The freeman's right to vote to impair,
And their Gatling guns and sabres bare
Will neither save their hides or hair.
For the voter's right our arms we'll bare,
And knives will flash in the angry air!
Hurrah! hurrah! hurrah!

"What is the oppressed laborer to do now? Let him join with his fellows and light the fires of a glorious revolution, that will rid the world of so many useless aristocrats and make America really, as well as in name, 'the land of the free.' UP WITH THE RED FLAG, AND DOWN WITH ARISTOCRACY."

You find several obscure but not wholly powerless streets in Cincinnati filled with these cheerful doctrines.

Probably the most important of the working-men's secret societies in America is what is called "Knights of Labor." As to this organization there is very little public information. The leading newspapers of New York city claimed last August that there were then eight hundred thousand men in it. Certain police agencies which have been set at work in Chicago have investigated this Society, and when I came last summer upon their records I was greatly interested to notice how the information published at New York was confirmed by that collected at Chicago. Some of the sharpest detectives on the continent have investigated this society within the last six months. It appears that the Knights of Labor are really a large and, perhaps, a formidable secret organization. The names of its leading officers, its passwords and oaths have been published. It is not socialistic, but, under the influence of demagogues, might probably be led to organize wide-spread strikes and riots with little cause.

When a great political party arises, making a fine special issue of an insane sort, the unauthorized secret lodges of all kinds are under strong temptation to unite. Even Justus Schwab in New York has a certain influence with the rougher class of voters. I know that in New York city an investigation was lately made as to the Socialist Labor party, and it was found that only 800 men in that city and 400 in Brooklyn belonged to its organizations. Of these a thousand were Germans, and of these three quarters were saloon-keepers. Not more than half a hundred Americans were enrolled. There were only a few Irish. But the Knights of Labor are largely under American control. According to their own statement, what they mean is to protect labor against capital, and to do this, if necessary, by inaugurating simultaneous strikes in different parts of the country, especially at railway centers, and by acquiring and using political power to capital and support the interests of the working-men.

Before this course of lectures on Socialism is concluded, you may think that I am a friend of the working-man and the enemy of capital. You will probably hiss me on this platform for several things that I mean to say in favor of labor, and I shall be very glad to be hissed first for what I have to say in favor of capital. I do not want the question concerning capital and labor settled according to the ideas of labor on the one hand, nor according to those of capital on the other, but according to the ideas of the Christian commonwealth, which are very different from those of either party. [Applause.]

The Knights of Labor held a national convention at Reading, adopted a constitution for the whole country, disbanded, and nobody knew that they had met. The fact was ascertained by going back upon their record, after detectives were set to work. One thing that brought out the character of the Knights of Labor was their initiation of Catholics, and the refusal of the Romanists to be perfectly frank in confessionals. In western Pennsylvania a Romish priest found it difficult to obtain information concerning the Knights of Labor. A man in the confessional was under some obligation higher than that binding a Romanist to his church, and, of course, the priest found occasion to investigate the whole topic. By and by it was announced that the sacraments would be denied to any Romanists bound by an oath of higher obligation than the tie which unites a Catholic to his mother church. This, of course, produced a commotion among Romanists, and they for a time were slow to join the Knights of Labor. A chief in a central committee in that organization, Mr. Stevens, issued a secret circular, announcing that Bishop O'Hara in Pennsylvania had seen the ritual and approved the order. Bishop O'Hara had said nothing of the sort, and this unauthorized use of his name caused him to announce that he could not and would not recognize any body of men as worthy of the sacraments who were connected with an oath-bound society. The Knights then ordered that the oath of secrecy should not be binding on a member in the confessional. Many Romanists have taken this oath, but the Catholic church opposes secret organizations, and has kept thousands out of them. Here and now, in the presence of a Protestant audience containing as much intelligence, perhaps, as any other Protestant gathering that meets weekly on the continent, I, for one, beg leave to thank the Romish church for its attitude concerning secret socialistic societies. [Great applause.]

The trades-unions of the United States are not socialistic, but they desire political power, and will accept aid from socialistic secret organizations in obtaining it. The Nationals will do the same, and have done so already.

You had 21,000 unemployed men in Massachusetts on the first of June last. Perhaps there were twice as many unemployed women. If you estimate the number of the unemployed in the United States according to the proportion in Massachusetts, they will not reach three millions, as the socialists assert, but they amount to nearly two. It is said that the pestilent financial heresies now in the air have succeeded at the polls wherever secret organizations have surrounded the ballot box, and that one reason why they were not more successful in New England is that our territory is not undermined yet by these societies.

A million and a half voters in secret organizations, spreading steadily under the soil; two million unemployed people in the United States; and demagogues searching north, south, east, and west for their pedestals! I foresee not ruin in the American national future under universal suffrage but painful political and social crises, unless by public discussion, by justice, by Christian philanthropy, by the central ideas of the Christian commonwealth, we prevent the formation of an unprincipled, an ignorant, and an unemployed class; bring the controlling power in politics into loyalty to sound ideas; estimate men neither by the bags of gold nor by the windy socialistic philosophies on which they may happen to ride, but by character, and proclaim all classes friends who are loyal to the Throne which has foundations, and all enemies who are opposed as rebels and as traitors to that Supreme Government. [Great applause.]

Reform News.

From the Indiana Lecturer.

Pittsburg, Ind., Jan. 15, 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—Once more I will meet the friends through your columns. I came into this vicinity by invitation of friend T. B. Galloway, whose kindness and hospitality I have been enjoying, together with that of his household. It will rejoice all who know them to learn that sister Galloway is now recovering from several months of severe sickness. Soon after my arrival, a week ago, Bro. Galloway mounted the saddle to make appointments. He believes in living up to his faith, and works for results against the works of darkness. He came home informing me that he had six appointments for me in three separate neighborhoods. At first our meetings were somewhat discouraging owing to small audiences. They however increased as the word scattered abroad, until I had full audiences and the sympathy and co-operation of many of the best citizens of Carroll county. Brethren Collins, Anderson, Malcom, Rev. Mr. McNeil, D.D., and his theological students encouraged me very much by their presence and in a more (if possible) substantial manner. I filled two hours or more each evening, and from many expressions we all feel that although the seed was sown hastily and perhaps imperfectly, yet some fruit will in the future be gathered. I cannot but express great satisfaction, especially when I remember the last two evenings. There is a large element in this county in our favor to-day. We are trying to get some names for the the Cynosure and hope to increase the list here.

To-morrow I go to Portland Mills, Park county, thence to Reno, Hendricks county, and perhaps other places, if the way be open. I hope and believe that wherever I go the same kindness will meet me, the same health and zeal strengthen. Delphi, the county seat of Carroll county, I think a good place for our next annual meeting.

Respectfully,
S. L. Cook.

Help Arising from a New Quarter.

Guernsey Co., O., Jan. 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—I had expected another hand to send you a report of my brief campaign here in November last; but as it has not been done, I undertake it myself. For the benefit of those ministers who "don't know what to do," if this shall fall under the eye of any of that class, let me say that a year ago I began to make known my views to the leading members of my congregation and distributed a few tracts from the Cynosure office.

As the summer wore away I went to the few members of my church who belonged to the fraternity and obtained their full consent, in this free country, to the right of free inquiry, free opinion and free speech. In the month of October I announced from the pulpit three discourses to be given—one on the history, one on the rites and one on the religion of Freemasonry, putting the first discourse two weeks ahead, and allowing one week between the several discourses. This announcement created quite a stir. Several of my best men came to me to request that I would withdraw the appointment for fear that the discussion of the subject might disturb the peace of the church, or its strength be diminished by the withdrawal of members. But as my mind was already made up the programme was carried out to the letter, and the lectures were repeated with a rather free distribution of supplements, etc., in the United Presbyterian church at North Salem, ten miles distant. The first lecture was not largely attended. But the congregations grew and I had crowded houses in both places at the last. The craft did not turn out. One or two Masons were present at each lecture; but they were not representative men.

On introducing the discussion I remarked, that as I had never known any one made the better by being abused, I should endeavor not to abuse anybody; but I should still speak with entire freedom on the several topics announced. This I did, speaking for two hours on each of the several topics, and showed to the satisfaction of those who heard me, as I have reason to believe, that Freemasonry is false in its pretensions, profane and sacreligious in its rites, Christless and heathen in its religion, a nurse of human selfishness and corrupting in all its influences and effects.

As to the results of these lectures: First, I have lost no member from the church; those who had the most fear are among the best satisfied; and so far were the lectures from disturbing the peace of the church that they were followed by quite an awakening, and four were added to the communion on confession of faith the following month. Of course I cannot measure the effect of this discussion on the lodge. But there was one promising young man whose father had been a Mason, and who, as I understood, was panting for his majority that he might join the lodge; but when asked what he thought of the lectures, he replied, "Why, he showed from their own books that they are wrong." That young man is saved from the terrible snare. Further, I have been treated on all occasions with entire courtesy and respect by Masons and others. But when a coterie of Masons were busily talking in one of the offices on the street, one was overheard to say, "The old devil is pretty well posted, but we must get out of it some way." However, as at the night of their last communication there were not enough present to open the lodge, I take it the lectures did not help their cause as they affected to expect.

I have several invitations on hand to speak on the subject of Freemasonry at other places, to which I expect to respond before long. But as an acting pastor I have been very busy on my own ground for the last month, besides being somewhat restrained by the severe cold weather. I am not on a railroad.

As to my "Appeal," [To the ministry of the Presbyterian church.] whilst by some it is thrown aside with affected contempt, and read seriously by some who "don't know what to do," it is bringing very cordial responses from some of the most honored servants of God in the land.

Rev. Austin Phelps, D.D., of Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., writes: "All my sympathies are with you on the great subject." And Rev. A. A. Hodge, D.D., of Princeton N. J., says he has no doubt as to the substantial correctness of my statements; and in his judgment it is the duty of every pastor and religious teacher to thoroughly inform himself on the subject, and then declare the facts as he finds them, manfully.

So you see the the light is beginning to shine and the leaven to work, in the old staid Presbyterian church. Yours truly,

WARREN TAYLOR.

THE CHICAGO CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The regular monthly meeting of this Association was held on the evening of Jan. 14th, in Carpenter Hall. Pres. Thos. Hodge was in the chair; twenty persons present. The meeting opened by singing "Coronation." The president read the Scriptures and offered prayer. The secretary's report was read and approved. The superintendent of the Reading Room, F. G. Houck, offered a full and encouraging report, of which the following is a summary:

Twenty-six new names added to the list of visitors during the past month. The daily average attendance of regular readers, 16. Donation of $20 invested in tracts. A bulletin board has been made during the past month. Publications are received at the Reading Room from twenty-four different States and territories; twenty-five of these are devoted to general news, thirty-nine religious, nine literary, eleven temperance, three manufacturing, three agricultural, and two to musical instruction. In addition to these papers ten or twelve religious weeklies are laid upon the table each week through the kindness of a friend.

A collection, amounting to $3.00, was then taken up. Elder J. F. Browne, the new State agent for the Illinois State Christian Association, was then introduced and delivered an able and interesting speech. He used three excellent charts, which he had himself prepared, which added much to the value of his address.

President Hodge then called on Mr. Ronayne, who was present, who spoke in a masterly manner for ten or fifteen minutes. He showed by a logical and convincing argument that the god of Masonry, the Grand Architect of the universe, was a false god. The worship of the lodge, like the worship of Cain, was a man-invented, soul-destroying worship. That the whole tendency of Masonry from the time it removes the candidate's clothing in the ante-room of the first degree, to the point where it lays him on his back in the grave of Hiram Abiff, a loathsome mass of putrefaction, is to insult and degrade man.

The president in closing offered a few thrilling and eloquent remarks.

After a prayer offered by Capt. Henry Bundy, the meeting was dismissed. MISS R. O. LEWIS, Ass't Secretary.

Correspondence.

PROSCRIPTION,

By northern Ku-Kluxism and suppression by organized terrorism. Is it possible that even in Iowa such exists. It is simply astonishing when we come to know the power of Freemasonry in the land. Were it not that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, we should be constrained to say that its power cannot be broken, but in despair should be led to exclaim that a nation must sink with it. But in the Lord is our hope and trust, who will put all things under him, and bring all things to submit to Jesus Christ.

Not long since a prominent man in Burlington, Iowa, said to a friend that the Anti-masons may work and do all they can, but Masonry is too strong for them. "It has the power in its own hands, Austin may circulate his tracts, and Rathbun may lecture; but it is all in vain. Why, sir, don't you know that in the Methodist Episcopal church nine out of every ten of its ministers are Masons; and in several other churches we have the balance of power?" Now behold this boasting Goliath, this champion of idolatrous and heathen Philistia; how he defies the sacramental armies of the living God! He asks, "Who officered Rathbun's lodge?" Our friend answered that he had the honor to preside as Master Mason, and receive for the time the titles without paying for them, as the lecture was open and free. The Mason replies with great warmth, "Do you know, sir, that you are a marked man; and it will follow you, go where you will? You'll meet it in business and in society; you can't get away from it. You're a marked man, and so is every one that helped officer that lodge. It will follow them. They'll be watched. It's bad for you; you should not have had anything to do with it." Our friend told him we are in a free country. "But," says the Mason, "we have the power."

O Americans, is not this too near the truth? God help us to arise and cast off the bondage of this false government, of this despotism, lest it soon rivet on us its chains! But how does it now rule? In silent power. You go out through the country and ask for subscribers to the Cynosure and take with you tracts and distribute; or let any pastor defend Christ against this specific, organized power that assails and denies Christ, and ignores the God of the Christian, and such will soon learn to their heart's sorrow how it is that this silent power rules in almost every community. Let ministers try it; let God-fearing, Christian men and women try it, and their astonishment will be awakened.

I find many people that would take the Cynosure; but the real fact is they are afraid to, and they are afraid to have the tracts seen about their house lest they be made the target of Masonic hatred. "Oh," say they, "we don't want them down on us as they are on you." But oh! is not this denying Christ? Peter did not want the enemies of Christ down on him, so he denied having anything to do with Christ. O Christian man and woman will you cease to deny Christ by silence? Will you own him before men? Will you take up in his defense against this Christ-denying institution? "But," say you, "if I do I shall suffer persecution." Well that was what Peter was afraid of. But we must own Christ and defend him before men, leaving all the consequences to his care who said "Lo! I am with you always." Ah yes! and as surely as Jesus saw Peter and heard the denial so surely does he, always present, know if we shrink and cower before his enemies.

Not long since I met a Mason who declared that he and others had decided that they would not hear me preach. I had stirred up the whole country about the Masons. I said, "I thank God to learn that my work has not been in vain."

"You'd better mind your own business and let it alone."

I told him it was just exactly my business to defend Christ.

"You'd better let it alone; here you have given tracts to [mentioning several names] and your supplements. Yes, and you even have been sending them all over the country in envelopes, and marked special places to call attention against the Masons. You won't make anything at it I assure you."

I thanked him, and told him I was glad to get so good a report of my work; I felt encouraged and that by the help of God I should persevere.

The Mason I here speak of is a noble man. O that God will help him to let go, and save him from being bitten by the institution when he does let go that he may be made free in Christ! I love his dear soul. O that Christians had the courage to confess Christ, and defend him against the lodges and organizations that deny him! If they would do this, it would not need more than one or two weeks to make up the desired ten thousand subscribers.

JOEL H. AUSTIN.

INSULTED OVER AN OPEN GRAVE.

ASHLEY, O., Jan. 8, 1879.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I wish to show through your valuable paper how the Masons manifested their brotherly love at a funeral in this place. It may seem rather late to report news that happened over two months ago, but I have refrained from publishing the disgraceful affair, hoping the craft would say something vindicating themselves, as it was the "town talk" for some time.

The subject to which I allude is the ceremonies at the grave of one of the craft. On November 29th we were called upon to pay the last sad rites incumbent upon us to the memory of J. E. Coomer, a promising young physician of this place, whose health failing him he was obliged to abandon part of his practice, and on Nov 27th he passed that point where human assistance proves availing. Soon after death the craft took charge of the remains (by request of the deceased) and all arrangements for interment were made by them. I will not dwell long upon ceremonies until the most trying ordeal, and that is where they "capped the climax."

After the sermon by a member of the craft, the large cortege proceeded to the cemetery headed by lodges in and around this place. At the grave the usual pow-wow was gone through. After lowering the coffin into the grave, the command, "Turn to the right and follow your leader," was given. Now imagine for one moment the feelings of friends—of whom I am one—at seeing the whole craft march deliberately out of the cemetery and leave the coffin uncovered in the grave. This is one instance where they contracted a job they could not finish. But for the kindness of the citizens outside of the craft the friends would have been compelled to bury their own dead.

I dare say this was the most disgusting piece of Masonry I ever witnessed. Such Masonry cannot show off to advantage in the eyes of the uninitiated. This place is too small to afford a regular employed sexton, and it has always been the custom for citizens to attend to this work, which would have been done much better if the Masons had not undertaken the job.

The deceased had been a brave soldier in the army; when discharged he held the position of captain. He was a good citizen and much might have been said of him, but the minister, Rev. N. S. Smith, of Delaware, Ohio, was so wound up in the workings of the craft he forgot to allude to the deceased, or widow, except in his prayers.

The above are plain unvarnished facts and will be vouched for by many of our best citizens.

MRS. J. M COOMER.

CALL THINGS BY THEIR RIGHT NAMES.

COLLEGE SPRINGS, Page Co., Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am not a Mason, but have always regarded that institution as evil from my youth up, because it requires its members to take unlawful and blasphemous oaths, which have death penalties attached of the most barbarous and savage sort. It swears its members to forever conceal and never reveal any of their secret doings.

This looked suspicious to me, for it is well known they do not want any of their acts kept secret that are at all reasonable and decent, but rather to have all honorable acts published everywhere. What then is it they wish to conceal and never reveal? It must be their evil doings and all manner of crimes and rascalities, such as treason, rape and murder.

This is the conclusion I came to on Masonry when a boy, and I have not been able yet to see how any honest man could take the first step towards such a deceitful and suspicious looking concern. But, on the contrary, I see no reason why all rogues and designing villians should not be anxious to join the nefarious, guilty-looking lodge.

Then as to the religion of the lodge, what is it, and what is the name of their god? From what I have learned they have no name for their god, but others call him Baal or Mammon. In this respect the Masons have not the common honesty and candor of all other worshipers. Christians and all idolators other than Freemasons, call upon their God by name. The four hundred and fifty priests whom Elijah slew were more honest than the Masonic preacher of the Gospel of Christ, for like honest idolators they called upon the name of their god, Baal, and did not pretend to worship any other. They had not the blasphemous, brazen, impudence to attempt the ministry of God's house; but Masonic preachers of the Gospel have.

Are such hypocrites and deceivers worthy of the offerings of God's people? Surely they are not! Are not these they who come to us in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves, and false prophets, of whom our Lord bade his disciples beware? And do not they carry the mark of the beast? Are not these the ones who will stand up before the judgment seat of Christ and dispute the decision of the Judge? But while they may declare that they have cast out devils in his name, in the lodge they denied Him and worshiped Baal, and their Masonic impudence will not save them in that day.

Now does the name of Jesus Christ make any difference in a prayer? A man said in my hearing a few days ago, that the Masonic prayer in Bernard's book was as good an orthodox prayer as was ever prayed, for while it omitted the name of Christ, yet every body knew tha Christ's words were quoted in it, and therefore the omission of his name made no difference. There might be persons present who would not know from whom the words were quoted.

A certain heathen chief once said that the name of Christ made all the difference in his prayers after becoming a Christian; before that, he prayed to his idol god for all the good he thought he needed, but now he prayed in the name of Jesus Christ for desired favors.

OF

GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

The Rechabites, though they dwelt among the Israelites, did not belong to any of their tribes. They were a separate people, but devout worshipers of Jehovah. Jonadab, the son of Rechab, was a man zealous for the right, and assisted the king in driving a great evil from the land. He gave to his children the rule of temperance. Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons, forever. And their fidelity to that pledge is to them the promise of perpetual existence. Since they entered into that covenant, nearly three thousand years have rolled away. The glory of Egypt, of Babylon and of Jerusalem has faded. Great and mighty nations have been swept from the face of the earth, and still this simple people exist in the land of their fathers and to this day they sacredly observe their ancient covenant.

You will see in this an example of fidelity which is worthy of your imitation; and you will also learn that Heaven never fails to reward integrity to this cause with peculiar honors.

Marshal, you will conduct the candidates to the Degree Templar.

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.)

IV. ODE.

AIR—"Auld Lang Syne."

When Rechab's sons, in days of old,
Abjured the ruby wine,
And filled their cups of flashing gold
With nectar more divine:
They quaffed their liquid diamonds, then,
And o'er life's journey trod—
A noble race of spotless men—
The chosen sons of God.

Brave men of old, the world shall own
The greatness of your fame,
And o'er Intemp'rance' prostrate throne
Shall blazon Rechab's name.
Our men your words shall ne'er forget,
As custom's chains they break,
And all our race shall echo yet—
"The wine we ne'er will take."

Degree Templar (one rap). Members seated.

Marshal. The friends have come to you from the south, the west and the north, for the closing instructions in this degree.

Degree Templar. This degree has a word used as a salutation or method of testing and a sign which I will now explain to you.

The salutation or method of testing in this degree is as follows:

Challenger. Are you a Good Templar?
Answer. I am.
Challenger. Have you taken the Degree of Fidelity?
Answer. I have.
Challenger. Give me the sign of that degree.
Answer. I prefer to be tested in the word.
Challenger. Give me the word of that degree.
Answer. I will letter it with you if you will begin.
Challenger. No you begin.
Answer. H.
Challenger. E.
Answer. A.
Challenger. R.
Answer. T.

The sign of this degree is given as follows:

SIGN.

Place right hand on heart, palm inward, thumb pointing upward.

Degree Templar. The emblematic color of this degree is blue. Its language is integrity. It symbols much to those who love this order; for constancy is our only safeguard. It also, like the blue expanse above, reminds us of purity. As it is an emblem of truth, so be you true to this cause of your espousal. For our country's sake—so bound by the intoxicating bowl; so far from what it might have been had not the demon of strong drink trodden its fair gardens, and revelled cruelly among its brightest genius and its noblest manhood—yes, for our country's sake, we will bear our triple colors of faith, hope and charity, triumphant, until every wailing cry from those in bondage to the cup shall change to songs of glad deliverance. Wherever this color meets your eye be reminded of your vows.

The world honors the man who is faithful to his trust till death calls him home; and it brands with eternal infamy the false and unfaithful. Traitors have wiped out, by one single act, the otherwise glorious record of a lifetime; and hypocrisy is always under the ban of Heaven. But, true to our own souls—true to our manhood, steadfast to principle, never yielding to the wrong, living and dying for the right—how humanity redeems its good name by such self-sacrificing examples of a true nobility! Like the martyred brave, nobly true to the last, so may you, so may I, stand firm to principle, and each and all be true to ourselves till time with us shall be no more.

Degree Templar. Those present, the candidates included, will now form our circle of Fidelity. (Three raps, all rise.)

PRAYER.

Chaplain. Father of Mercies! Almighty King and Ruler! we thank thee for this hour; for what we are; for what we have resolved with thy help to be in all our future lives. Smile upon and bless our friends and our mutual covenant. Grant that each, that all, may be more faithful, more diligent, and that our hearts may be cultivated to higher and loftier purposes, that we may enjoy thy blessings forever, and thine shall be the glory now and ever. Amen.

Degree Templar (one rap, recess.)

CLOSING CEREMONIES.

Degree Templar. Financial Secretary, what are the receipts of the evening? [The Financial Secretary reports.]

In other stations in life we have duties to perform which now demand our attention. To these we turn our energies; but while engrossed with cares and anxieties, let us not forget the lessons taught in this branch of the great temperance family, and grow more assiduous in our efforts to remove the demon of intemperance from our land.

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.) The Temple will please sing our

V. CLOSING ODE.

AIR—"Boylston."

O Lord, in mercy bless,
Wisdom to us impart;
Crown every meeting with success,
And rule in every heart.

Here may we all be found
Each Temple meeting night,
And may our zeal and love abound
In deeds of truth and right.

VI. ALTERNATE ODE.

AIR—"The Watcher."

Our meeting now is ended,

And duty calls away;
Our love and friendship blended
Turn darkness into day.
Good Templars in their armor
Ne'er dread a mortal foe,
They're proof against the charmer,
And true where'er they go.

Where'er the conflict rages
Good Templars will be found;
Where right with wrong engages
Our battle cry will sound.
Though thick the blows may rattle
Against the shield of Truth,
Still for the right they'll battle,
For weakness, age, and youth.

Degree Templar. The Chaplain will offer the closing prayer.

PRAYER.

Chaplain. Our Father, which art in heaven, we give thee thanks for the privilege of this meeting, and while we have been here together, striving to promote the great cause of temperance, if anything has been said or done that is not in accordance with thy will, forgive us. Grant us the guidance of thy Spirit to lead us in the path of duty, and strengthen us faithfully and firmly that we may carry out the great principles here taught. Bless and prosper our loved order, and grant that the great sin of intemperance may be driven from our fair land, and the principles of total abstinence prevail everywhere; and when our work on earth is ended, bring us all to enjoy the glories of the Grand Temple on high, through Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

Degree Templar. This Temple is now closed until our next meeting-night, when we shall again assemble to extend the principles of Faith, Hope and Charity. (One rap.)

THIRD, OR DEGREE OF CHARITY.

The order of business in this degree is the same as in the second degree.

OPENING CEREMONIES.

Degree Templar (one rap, calling to order). We are now about to open this Temple in the Third or Degree of Charity. If any present have not taken its sacred obligations, they will please retire. The officers will now repair to their respective stations.

[Vacancies are now filled by appointment of officers pro tem.]

Degree Templar. Vice Templar, is the Guard correct in the Degree Word? (Vice Templar reports.)

Degree Templar. The Vice Templar with the Past Degree Templar will prepare for the examination. (Three raps, all rise.)

[The members all march in a line to the Vice Templar to whom they give the subordinate password and explanation; then to the Past Degree Templar giving him the degree word and next to the Degree Templar to whom they give the degree salutation, when the officers in order report.]

Vice Templar. Degree Templar, all are correct in the subordinate password.

Past Degree Templar. Degree Templar, all are correct in the degree word.

Degree Templar (one rap). The Marshal will desire the Sentinel to appear for examination. (Marshal informs Sentinel.)

Sentinel. (Enters and gives salutation.) I await your pleasure Degree Templar.

Degree Templar. You will give me the password. [Sentinel gives it.] Your duty is to give attention to all who make the proper signal at the outer gate of the Temple; to admit those who give you the password of subordinate lodge; to see that members are properly clothed in regalia, and informed that the Temple is working in the Degree of Charity; that order is preserved in the ante-room, and that candidates and visitors are made welcome. Be faithful to your official duties.

Degree Templar (twe raps, Sentinel retires.)

Degree Templar. Brothers and sisters in Faith, Hope and Charity: A high and noble mission calls us here to-night; how shall we fulfill that mission?

Vice Templar. By remembering the poor and unortunate of earth's children with smiles and kind words.

Past Degree Templar. By deeds of love, and the counsels and chidings of true friendship.

Chaplain. By asking God to ever keep our hearts full of true charity, and faithful to every duty.

Degree Templar. By remembering those in bonds as being bound with them; by remembering that each unfortunate victim of intemperance is another self; and by loving our neighbor as ourselves.

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.)

Degree Templar. Please sing our opening ode.

I. ODE.

AIR—"Coronation."

Who is thy neighbor? he whom thou
Hast power to aid and bless;
Whose aching head and burning brow
Thy soothing hand may press.

Where'er thou meet'st a form divine,
'Neath want or woe cast down,
He is thy neighbor—cheer and warm;
Go rescue—succor him.

Thus shall we meet the smile of God,
And keep the pledge we've made;
And, that our zeal may not grow cold,
We'll trust in him for aid.

PRAYER.

Chaplain. Father of all! In every age, in every clime, adored as the Father of thy children; loving the most deformed and lowly of earth's unfortunates with a never-dying love and bestowing upon their hearts, if true to thee, that heavenly wealth we now would ask for each and all who gather around our altar of Charity to-night. If we have been proud and selfish, may we bow humbly before thee, repent, and ask thy aid to follow in the footsteps of the Saviour, who went about doing good among the lowly. Here and elsewhere may it be our pleasure to love our neighbor as thou hast taught us to do, and in word and deed, may we be blessed in doing good unto others for thy sake. Amen.

[The following ode may then be sung at the option of the Degree Templar.]

II. ODE.

AIR—"Old Hundred."

Praise God from whom all blessings flow;
Praise him all creatures here below;
Praise him for all his goodness shown—
For health, for friends, for joy, for home.

Degree Templar. I now declare this Temple open, to extend, by precept and example, the principles of Faith, Hope and Charity. (One rap, members seated.)

[The Degree Templar then proceeds according to same order of business as in the Degree of Fidelity.]

INITIATION, DEGREE OF CHARITY.

Degree Templar. The Marshal will retire to the ante-room and ascertain if any are in waiting to be obligated and instructed in the lessons of this degree.

[The Marshal does as directed, returns and after saluting the Degree Templar, gives the names, in full, of the candidates, when if they have been elected for the degree the Degree Templar proceeds.]

Degree Templar. The Marshal will again retire and introduce the candidates.

[The officers (except the Guard) and their Supporters now form a circle around the altar, which is in the center of the room, the Degree Templar and Vice Templar in front of the altar facing the inner gate of the Temple. As the signal is given, and the Marshal and candidates enter, the circle is broken at the point nearest them and they enter; officers give the salutation of the Second Degree, after which the Temple sing one of the following odes:]

III. ODE.

AIR.—"Pewaukee."

With joy we hail thy presence here,
And from this hour may peace and light
Beam on thy pathway day by day,
While, earnest in the truth and right,
Thy soul shall gather strength to help
Save fellow-men from ruin's night.

Our Mail.

H. R. Sherick, Rock Lick, West Virginia, writes:

"I live in a lodge settlement where the people think there is no harm in secret societies."

A friend from Utica, Minn., writes:

"Groups of Masons in the streets of St. Charles are discussing the probable downfall of their craft. May blessings attend Mr. Ronayne's exposition of Freemasonry in which he shows its likeness to the hideous mysteries of the old pagan worship."

John M. Rownd, Summerfield, Ohio, writes:

"I feel to thank God that he has by his blessed Spirit put it into the hearts of men to stand for the great truths of the last will and testament of the Son of God, as the determined spirit of the Christian Cynosure and its supporters shows. Let every heart be uplifted to God in thankfulness and in adoration and praise for the great work accomplished at the last N. C. A. Convention."

J. B. Wells, De Ruyter, N. Y., writes:

"In my opinion the Cynosure is doing a necessary and glorious work, which I wish to encourage by all the means in my power."

Moses Ferrin, Ellington, N. Y. writes:

"I am opposed to Masonry, and have been opposed to slavery ever since I was old enough to know the meaning of it, and that was when I was quite young, and now I am old (eighty years). I still see it is very wicked. I have seen a good deal of the workings of Masonry, especially in our courts. We have one minister in this place who is opposed to Masonry."

Joseph A. Laird, Wayne, Iowa, writes:

"The cause here has made some progress in the last year. The lectures here and at Winfield in October by Mr. Ronayne were well attended and highly appreciated by the people. Some influential men and women who had previously thought but little on the subject have had their eyes opened to the sinfulness of the institution of Freemasonry, and young men who had thought of joining have become satisfied that it is only evil."

O. Sholes, Morrison, Ill., writes:

"Brother Brown is doing a good work. He is a worker and the craft is somewhat troubled."

A. J. Loudenback, Glidden, Iowa, writes:

"I hope to do more for the cause as the Lord prospers me. * * I am not tired yet."

H. Siemiller, Mormontown, Ia., writes:

"I feel like helping all I can to reach the ten thousand and then keep on."

Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill., writes:

"Our people were highly pleased and instructed by Prof. C. A. Blanchard's addresses and sermons here, three in number."

James Harrow, Rohnerville, California, writes:

"The Cynosure has quite a fair representation in this county, and has many warm friends, and I believe the good cause is gaining ground as the people are becoming enlightened upon the evils of secretism."

Z. T. Petty, Oramel, N. Y., writes:

"Masonry has everything its own way here and the people love to have it so."

G. Crook, Concord, Pa., writes:

"I mean to stand firm in the cause. I give no money to any preacher who is a secret society man. I will do what I can for your paper. If we could have some of your good lecturers here I think it would be a good thing for this place and county."

John Cassidy, Charleston, Ia., writes:

"We have no paper published which is better calculated to benefit its readers, the church and the nation than the Cynosure. I sympathize with you in your trials and persecutions, and especially with that worthy and tried friend of the poor slave, Jonathan Blanchard. I learned to love him in other years for his faithfulness in the anti-slavery cause, and in these last days for his labors to rescue the church and nation out of the hands of Christless secret and sworn clans. And to him and all engaged in this good work, I would say, 'Be not weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.'"

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 23, 1879.

Mr. G. W. Mack, of Sycamore, Illinois, (who does not take the paper) sends us some admonitions and censure for publishing the secret ritual of the Good Templars; and wishes to vindicate the order in our columns. We hope Mr. Mack will take the paper, and he will by reading it awhile either change his views or see more clearly than he now can how to reply to ours, with the hope of changing them. It should be enough for a good Christian, as we hope Mr. Mack is, that no one ever followed the Saviour into a secret society, and we are to follow him in all things. The book on Good Templarism will soon be out, and as it will contain their ritual in full, all that is good in it can be read. Send orders for the book.

The Proposed 10,000 Subscribers.

Our thanks are due to the Telescope for the following:

"Benefits of large Circulation.—On an average the actual cost of one of the religious papers of this country to one subscriber would be $20,201.21. With 10,000 subscribers it would be $3.21; with 50,000, $1.61. The way to get a paper cheap, is to work for the increase of its circulation. The Telescope, which is given to subscribers at $2.00, at a circulation of between 8,000 and 10,000, could be made very low to each subscriber if the circulation were 50,000; or the office could make much more money than it does from the paper with its present circulation."

We confess to more than usual anxiety for an increase of Cynosure subscribers. The Golden Censer, started and edited by John Lemley, went up to ten or fifteen thousand subscribers, and thousands of dollars were donated to the proprietor, who, from nothing, amassed a fortune of nearly $20,000; during all which time the subscribers were being intentionally deceived by Mr. Lemley. One is reminded by such an enterprise of the couplet of Hudibras:

"Doubtless the pleasure is as great
In being cheated as to cheat."

We notice some friends of that paper sent clubs of fifty and sixty subscribers as volunteer agents. And some sincere Anti-masons took the Censer, moved by sympathy and compassion for Mr. Lemley, even after he excluded the discussion of secret societies, avowedly because he could make more money by suppressing that discussion. We are still of the opinion that "honesty is the best policy" in the long run; and we are sure the Cynosure is honest. The New York Evangelist was started in the interest of the Finney revivals, when Mr. Finney was as unpopular as he could well be, and "all manner of evil" was falsely said of him and believed by many good people. But the Evangelist lived, and, though it languished for a time, became a strong paper.

It encourages us greatly to learn from our lecturers and correspondents that the Cynosure is approved and beloved by the very best men and women in the country; and the enemies of the reform show that its power is felt every where. It asks no alms, only SUBSCRIBERS; and every subscription obtained

"————————is twice blest,
It blesseth him that gives and him that takes."

And though the power of a network of lodges, literally covering the land "like the poisoned shirt of Nessus," is still fearful, and thousands will not take a paper that their neighbors hate, we verily believe if agents, subscribers and friends take hold together the 10,000 subscribers will be made up, and angels sing jubilee over the sure and certain results.

Socialism.

Despotism and Socialism are two extremes of political error with no midland of truth between them. The immense military establishments of Europe are based on the principle of taking a dozen men, and hiring five, called a standing army, to hold bayonets at the backs of the other seven, to make them work to feed the whole twelve. And as the proportion of mouths that eat over the number of hands that labor is continually increasing, a revolution is only a question of time.

The remedy proposed by the Socialists, is, to cure a bayonet evil with more bayonets, when the nations have already too many for labor to support, and steel is no remedy for hunger. Besides, Napoleon uttered a great truth, when he said: "Physical force settles nothing." Minorities are always raising parties where selfishness, not right, is the motive to action; because it is impossible for those in office to satisfy the malcontents by bribery, or permanently stifle them by force, and every defeat sustained by the mob in its attacks on property and power but makes it more sensible of the value of that which they covet.

In Germany the elements of discontent are, since the peace with France, assuming fearful proportions. The Socialist party in a recent election numbered 600,000 voters. Its temper may be judged of by the fact that in the single month of October last, in a district of 100,000 inhabitants, the district court punished sixteen men and six women, with an aggregate of thirty years' imprisonment for "Insults to his Imperial Majesty." And the Anti-Socialist law of October 21st, in a single month after its enactment had suppressed 143 societies, thirty-seven periodicals and 401 non-periodical publications. "Among the societies suppressed were twenty-one trades-unions, sixty-two political associations, thirty-six singing societies, four theatrical societies, ten working-men's social meetings and seven beneficial societies."

This looks bilious and formidable. A madman or two whose means are exhausted and their brains damaged by their vices may attempt to assassinate the Emperor as a substitute for and in lieu of suicide, but a law against newspapers, clubs and lyceums is a more serious affair. It is like Shakespeare's

"Taking arms against a sea of troubles."

In the United States when Socialists raise the cry of "bread or blood" and march on the Mayor's office, they may find one of their own number in the office by the time they get there. And a new election is as good as a revolution. But there is but one Bismarck and one Emperor in an age; and the elements of discord and disorganization have standing objects of hatred and assault. When this country is older things may be worse.

But there is no radical cure for Socialism but Christ. In England Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Quakers, Baptists and others have in their turn resisted and disobeyed law and government, and suffered for it. But they were not Socialists; and the more such rebels a country contains the more freedom it will ultimately possess. All the virtues follow in their train. Their industry makes bread; their integrity, character; their zeal, enlightenment; and their prayers bring down the blessing of God. The true remedy of Socialism is the prayer-meeting, the reform-club, and the pledge of abstinence. Let us hope that by the "Spirit of God poured upon us from on high" the Christian communion will be substituted for the camp and Christ become indeed King of nations.

"A Daniel Come to Judgment, Yea a Daniel."

The Chicago Standard has at length come out on secret societies in an article of over two columns by Rev. C. B. Henderson. The doctrine of this whole long article is contained in the following extract:

"Secret societies are to be classed with savings banks; their aim is the same; it is neither selfish nor philanthropic, nor benevolent; it is business. They can never take the place of aid societies, charity hospitals and asylums, whose object is to relieve distress without regard to previous relations.

"It follows from the purely prudential aim of these societies that they cannot take the place of religious organizations."

I know not the gentlemen who conduct the Standard, but I know that paper is the accredited organ of a great, intelligent and influential denomination of Christian people called Baptists; and the office ought to contain piety, integrity and brains enough to prevent the denomination being misled on fundamental questions which the paper sees fit to take up.

But I need not say to those who have but slightly acquainted themselves in the Masonic discussion, that the statement in quotation above is not only absolute error, but exceedingly mischievous and damaging error. If this Rev. Mr. Henderson should say of the brothel, or of the Mormon Endowment House, "It is business," he would utter a sentiment no more ignorant or absurd than when he says that of the lodge.

"Business" (!) done in a lodge by night, with sword-guarded door, entered by a deist's confession of faith, initiated in a stripped and semi-nude condition, sworn in kneeling at an "altar," blindfolded, with his hands on the Bible, promising perpetual concealment of all a Master Mason's crimes but two, or those of a Royal Arch Mason's crimes without exception, under penalty of being murdered by savage and disgusting mutilation, and calling on God to help him keep that oath!—the man who can coolly call such stuff business, Rev. or irreverend, is either very ignorant or very wicked. And the Standard owes it to the great and respectable denomination which it represents, to wash its hands of this attempt to shield a foul and "accursed thing," and mislead a trusting and intelligent people.

Our Public Schools.

The Catholic Review quotes with approbation the following from the New York Witness:

"Unquestionably all education should be religious as well as secular, and certainly the state is not well fitted to administer the religious elements. Let Protestants support and manage their own schools, and Roman Catholics the same, and Jews the same. In this way no class will be taxed to support what it regards as deadly error; and in this way schools as well as churches will be got out of politics.

"This is, we are satisfied the true course in theory, but yet we are ready to admit that the present American school system has worked out far better results on the whole than the theoretically correct course would have done. Our common school system comes from New England, and was eminently suited to a homogeneous religious people, but now the population is no longer homogeneous in New England or anywhere else, and continually recurring difficulties are sure to grow out of our present school system. These, indeed, are likely to worse and worse."

We confess our surprise at the above sentiments from that excellent paper. We had supposed that Horace Mann's aphorism, that the hanging power should be the educating power, was all but universally admitted to be sound. Why should the state build a gallows, and not empower its citizens to read the law by which they are to be hung, or even the words on the finger board which points the road to the gallows.

The State of Pennsylvania was long without a system of public schools. The Friend Quakers did not wish their children educated with others, and the German counties disliked to vote the tax. Thaddeus Stevens at last carried a free school system, and hundreds of school houses rose in all parts of that great State, and thousands of children learned to read who would otherwise have died ignorant of letters.

It is easy to say that competition between Romanists and Protestants would gather in the children, but would it be so? Why does it not educate the children in France and Mexico and in the French portions of Canada. It is within my memory that one in two hundred French Canadian children could read and one in five hundred write. If the state did not educate, indifference, vice and miserliness would consign whole districts to ignorance, and diminish the wealth of property-holders one half.

Romanism never did and never will educate the masses but upon compulsion, direct or indirect. If the Romish church was heartily for education the difficulty could be got over about the Bible in schools. The Douay Bible is ten thousand thousand times better than none. It is a reasonably good translation of the Sacred Scriptures; and if the teacher should be a Protestant, he might be confined to the Lord's Prayer in his school devotions. Anything, but to eject from the school its sole standard of law and morals.

The Romanists know that a system of education without God is an impossibility; and the managers expect the word of a priest would be put in place of the Word of God if that were cast out.

Nor is the idea of divorcing education from the state any relief to the question of taxation. The Romanist schools would still receive grants from the state in one way or another, where their vote could control elections.

Our only salvation lies in purifying our churches, and seeking power from on high, by the Spirit and Word of God to make Romanists and Protestants one in Christ.

—Bro. Stoddard went to Livingston county, Mich., after leaving Adrian, and spoke seven times in the neighborhood of Brighton. He would gladly have complied with the earnest wishes of the brethren and remained through the week, but the work in Indiana could not be delayed. He reached Marion, Grant county, Indiana, on Thursday morning last.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman has visited Derby, Beacons Falls, Straitsville, Watertown, Woodbury, Terryville and Plymouth, Ct., since last report. His experiences at these points are replete with interest and may be expected next week. He finds southwestern Connecticut yet in bondage to a stifling conservatism, the relic of former sympathy with Southern slavery. After a few more lectures at Bristol and Plymouth he expects to turn toward Massachusetts.

—Bro. J. P. Richards of Bowensburg, Ill., whose work in Iowa will be remembered, is ready to respond to calls for lectures. Every man who is ready to do such work should have enough to do. Write to Bro. Richards. He is anxious to see our list reach the 10,000 mark and is doing what he can for it.

—Bro. John Dorcas of Shiloh Iowa, writes approvingly of the plan suggested by Secretary Stoddard for the State Conventions, and hopes there will be general approval. To friends in Iowa he says: "Might it not be well to postpone our meeting until the time suggested which would be September 16, 1879. I hope the friends generally will be heard from promptly, as a better organization is greatly needed." Let the friends in that State send a postal card to us giving their views for, the benefit of the officers of the State Association and friends generally.

—The visit of King Kalakaua, of the Sandwich Islands, to this country in the winter of 1874-5 will not soon be forgotten, especially in Masonic circles. While in Chicago the gentlemen of the lodge seemed anxious to impress "his majesty" that outside of Masonry there was nothing worth seeing. Oriental Lodge, noted for its wealth and grand scenic display at initiation ceremonies, was ready, and it needed no urging to gain a request from the king to see it. The following invitation was issued:

"His majesty, King Kalakaua, having expressed a desire to witness the conferring of the third degree by Oriental Lodge, a communication of the lodge will be held for that purpose on Friday evening next at their Hall, No. 122 Lasalle Street. You are cordially invited to be present. E. Powell, Master.

January 12, 1875.

Kalakaua no doubt gained "more light in Masonry" while here, for lately the Ames Manufacturing Co. of Chicopee, Mass., sent two elegant jewelled swords to be used by the King and Governor of the Sandwich Islands in the 33d degree. Will the time come again when these islands will be moved to destroy their idolatries?

—While this more refined but not less real idolatry gains so strong a footing in the Sandwich Islands, England keeps pace in the down ward road. The Prince of Wales is not only Grand Master but is also a Sovereign Inspector General of the 33d degree. It is reported that on the 6th of November last he was present while his younger brothers, the Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold were advanced to the same degree. They are thus among the favored few who are in full fellowship with Ben. Butler and Albert Pike, who is yet at the head of the Southern Freemasons.

—The Washington correspondent of the Woman's Tribune says that the wives of the Members of Congress were for the most part dressed very plainly and sensibly at the New Year's reception of Mrs. Hayes. The occasion is said to be one of the most brilliant for twenty years.

—The Good Templar exposition now appearing weekly in our columns, is a document long been called for. The publishers expect a large sale so soon as the work issues finally in pamphlet form. The American Freeman, Albany, Mo., notices the work thus warmly: "For calm, unimpassioned, but perfectly irresistible indictment of the Good Templars' order, and secondarily of the whole system of minor secret orders, "temperance" or otherwise, we refer all to the prefatory chapters of this work. It is evidently from the pen of one who has known something from experience of what he says, and before the bar of whose maturer judgment the minor secret orders, 'temperance' or otherwise, are compelled to confess themselves guilty and retire abashed. The work should be in the hands of every friend of real temperance and pure religion."

Woman, the Home Protector.

Streator, Ill., Jan. 14, 1879.

Editor Cynosure:—A fresh impetus was given to the cause of temperance in Streator last Sabbath by the "Home Protection" petition presented in a masterly address by Miss F. E. Willard, President of the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Nearly one thousand persons crowded the M. E church to hear this able advocate of every good cause, and about four hundred signatures were obtained. Could anything be more reasonable than to give woman the ballot for this protection? If men may have their oath-bound secret orders for the protection of their clans, may not those excluded by them have the ballot to keep off the common enemy, alcohol? P.

PETITION.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Illinois:

Whereas, In these years of temperance work the argument of defeat in our contest with the saloons has taught us that our efforts are merely palliative of a disease in the body politic, which can never be cured until Law and Gospel go hand in hand in our beloved State; and

Whereas, The instincts of self-protection and of apprehension for the safety of her children, her tempted loved ones, and her home render woman the natural enemy of the saloons: Therefore, your petitioners, men and women of the State of Illinois, having at heart the protection of our homes from their worst enemy, the legalized traffic in strong drink, do hereby most earnestly pray your honorable body that by suitable legislation it may be provided that in the State of Illinois the question of licensing at any time, in any locality, the sale of any and all intoxicating drinks, (including wine and beer,) shall be submitted to and determined by ballot, in which women of lawful age shall be privileged to take part in the same manner as men when voting on the question of license.

Signatures to this petition should be sent at an early date to Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.

News of the Week.

—The bill granting to soldiers of the late war arrears of pensions, was passed again by the Senate last Thursday and was sent to the President for his signature. The bill passed the House on the last night of last session. There is a difference of opinion as to how much this bill will cost the government. The Commissioner of Pensions estimates that under it about $20,000.000 will be necessary within the next ten years, and that this sum will be distributed among 50,000 families. There is a general belief that President Hayes will follow Grant's course and veto the bill for arrears of pensions. The friends of the measure, however, are confident that it can be passed over a veto.

—A strange case is reported from Indiana. Leonidas Grover, a farmer living near Newton in Fountain county, was on Tuesday night of last week killed by a meteoric stone. This weighed twenty pounds, and, penetrating the roof, struck Mr. Grover, while asleep, passed through the bed and the floor, and buried itself in the earth underneath to the depth of five feet. The case is the only one of the kind on record, and has caused much excitement.

—The blasting fuse factory of Brickford & Co., at Simsbury, Conn., was blown up last Thursday. Three persons were killed and two others injured. The accident was caused by the friction of the machinery.

—Captain Kane, of the schooner Flirt, from Gloucester, Mass., says while ice-bound in Placentia Bay, Southeast Newfoundland, on the 5th inst., he discovered the hull of the French brig Adelaide Falanet imbedded firmly in the ice. After cutting away the ice the bodies of four men and a woman were found frozen solid. The vessel left St. Pierre on Nov. 16th with a load of fish for France.

—Additional information has been received from persons who had lately seen Mrs. Stewart, corroborative of the statement that Mrs. Stewart had said to a gentleman and lady within the past ten days that the body of her husband had been delivered to Judge Hilton, after the payment of $50,000, through a firm of New York lawyers; that the identification was entirely satisfactory, and the remains placed by Hilton in a secure vault, there to await their final movement to the Garden City crypt. So far as can be ascertained, Hilton does not deny that the body is found.

—An expression of opinion has been invited from John Taylor, president of the Mormon church, regarding the Supreme Court decision in the Reynolds case, but without response. The Mormon papers claim that the law is wrong, and the decision of the Supreme Court wrong. Nothing is said about obedience to the law in the future.

—The medical experts who accompanied the Congressional yellow fever investigation committee, will hold a daily conference until they make their final report to the Congressional committee. A majority of the experts favor the enactment of a law which shall give the government authority to establish a national quarantine, and, as a majority of the Congressional committee are of the same mind, a bill granting such authority will doubtless be introduced, and probably passed.

Home Circle.

HOME.

All in happy home we dwell,
The star of hope above us,
Among the friends who know us well,
Forgive our faults and love us.

Naught fear we in this home of ours,
Naught envy in another's,
While we are fenced like tender flowers,
By father's love and mother's.

Ours is a plain and pleasant cot,
With whispering trees to cheer it;
And mother's cherished garden-plot
Is all a-blossom near it

The bird-songs thrill the trembling leaves
With thoughts no tongue can utter,
And up and down among the caves
The swallows dart and flutter.

O, we shall miss the birds and flowers
When winter comes to rout them,
And yet this happy home of ours
May well be gay without them.

The flowers may die, the birds may roam,
When warring winter wills it,
For that which makes our house a home
Is but the love that fills it.

Of all earth's blessings good and bright,
'Tis love is best and brightest;
Of all the places love doth light,
A love-lit home is lightest.

—Youth's Companion.

WILLIAM DE FAREL.

[From the Christian Statesman.]

On the mountain slopes of Dauphiny, under the shadow of Jura, in a deep sequestered mountain dell, lies a little hamlet called Farel, or Fareau. Orchards and vineyards clothe the slopes behind it; and above it, embosomed in the dark masses of pine wood, are the ruins of a chateau, which, in the fifteenth century, was the home of a noble family of the name of Farel.

Above this ruined mansion tower in wild sublimity the everlasting hills, and all around it is a pleasant mountain land, presenting every aspect of picturesque beauty, from the snowy peaks of Jura, flushed with the roseate glow of sunset, and frowning in severe sterility upon the fertile valleys at their feet, to the laughing beauty of luxuriant corn fields, vine-terraced slopes, smiling brooks, and meadows dotted with chestnut trees. A fair land, even as Canaan was of old, but still, with all its beauty, emphatically a mountain land, and, as such preserving a certain degree of freedom and impatience of restraint. Even in Rome's hour of greatest power, the mountaineers of Dauphiny and Picardy were disloyal and rebellious subjects to her sway, claiming the right of private opinion and judgment in matters of faith, and were more or less deeply imbued with the Vaudois heresy. Under the shadow of their hills they read the Vaudois Bible, and in their deep sequestered valleys listened to the wandering colporteur, as he recited portions of the sacred story of the cross, rejoicing, amidst the dense darkness that surrounded them, in this glimmering of Vaudois light.

This pure and holy faith, transmitted from father to son, was strengthened and fostered by the sublime natural objects among which their lives were spent. The solemn majesty of the great mountains had a silent but powerful effect upon those reared amid their solitudes, imparting to them a purity, a dignity, a depth and intensity of imagination, a greatness of soul, akin to their own solitary grandeur. In the gorges of Jura, the scattered inhabitants, often alone, and separated alike by necessity and inclination from the pleasures that engrossed the gayer world, learned to think, to look below the glittering outside surface, to recognize the great truth that the church of Rome was evil and corrupt, her sanctuaries unhallowed, and her priests ignorant and dissolute.

No such free-thinking had, however, found access into the chateau of Farel; there all was unquestioning faith—deep, credulous belief that admitted of no doubt. In this devout and orthodox family a son, named William, was born toward the close of the year 1489. He was an unhealthy, almost ugly child; and unlike his great successor, Calvin, who was eminently handsome in youth, he grew up to be a puny, insignificant man. Like the great apostle Paul, "his bodily presence was weak, and his speech contemptible." The mind enshrined in this feeble casket was, however, that of a giant—he had mental and moral attributes which made him Calvin's worthy forerunner; a clear brain, a rough and ready eloquence, and a courage so indomitable, that it spurned that caution which prudence teaches even to the brave. He had the faults as well as the virtues of an ardent temperament. Had his salvation depended upon it, he could not, like Erasmus, have remained for a lifetime a halter between two opinions; his fault was too much decision; he was at times violent to excess; and the fits of ungovernable passion, which in childhood gave his parents no little trouble, did not altogether leave him in after life.

When he was seven or eight years old, his parents, alarmed by his increasing delicacy, resolved to take him on a pilgrimage to a shrine in the neighborhood. Four leagues from Gap, at the source of a rapid flowing stream called the Durance, was a little picturesque temple perched upon a rock, named, from the relics it contained, St. Croix. To this place, which was accounted peculiarly holy, the halt and lame, the diseased in body and the uneasy in mind, repaired in crowds to prostrate themselves at the foot of a cross, constructed, according to local superstition, of a piece of the wood upon which our Saviour suffered.

To this shrine Monsieur and Madame Farel conducted their little William, and having made the sickly child clasp his hands and repeat a short prayer, they also fell upon their knees and listened with devout amazement to an account of the wonders of the place. These were marvellous enough to try even the credulity of that credulous age, but not the faith of the Farels—it was proof against all assaults. Such a belief, sincere and earnest despite all its degrading superstition, had in it a noble simplicity, as well as singularity, in an age whose distinguishing characteristic was the facility with which the utmost licentiousness of life was conjoined with the most rigid observance of unmeaning religious forms — an age in which murder's red hand stained the steps of the altar, and vice looked on with leering eye from under the confessor's cowl and the nun's veil, and a prelate mingled, with a Borgia's subtle skill, cunning draughts of death in the sacramental wine.

From these contaminations, Dauphiny, enclosed by her mountains, had escaped in part. The corruption that at that time threatened to dissolve in France every tie that held society together, had scarcely penetrated beyond their rugged barriers. Their giant summits, towering in proud sublimity to the skies, turned aside the overwhelming flood of vice, and elevated, with an unconscious, ennobling influence, the souls of those who dwelt beneath the shadow of their eternal snows. They had, as might have been expected, a strong influence upon the imaginative and enthusiastic Farel; awakening in him noble and lofty aspirations, and inspiring him with vague yearnings after that God who was almost unknown to him as He was to the ancient builders who reared the altar with that mournfully suggestive inscription in Athens of old.

Groping, in his blind zeal, from one shrine to another, young Farel sought truth, and found it not, and at last asked his father to allow him to study.

To this request Monsieur de Farel turned a deaf, unwilling ear. In his estimation book and learning were for priests, and for priests alone.

"What more wouldst thou have, thou foolish boy?" he asked. "Thou hast thy rosary and thy sword?"

These had filled up sufficiently for him the narrow circle of life, and he could not conceive how his son should require other weapons and a wider field.

At last, however, seeing that his boy was restless and unhappy, he yielded, and after some years of preparatory study, sent him to Paris to attend the famous university there. Farel arrived at this celebrated seat of learning, a simple, earnest, country lad, with manners somewhat brusque, a considerable store of scholastic erudition, and a devotion to Rome as unquestioning and sincere as it had been in the days when his parents bent his knees and folded his hands in adoration before the hallowed crucifix of St. Croix.

Many and strangely diverse are the roads which have conducted God's children to the narrow way and strait gate of eternal life. Farel's bigoted devotion to the false faith in which he had been reared, led him unawares to a fountain of purer knowledge. Among the crowds who flocked to the shrines which he still frequented eagerly, he observed an old man of reverend and striking appearance, whose devout demeanor impressed him so much, that he desired and obtained and introduction to him.

DRINKING IN GERMANY.—How beer and wine drinking promote temperance (?) in Germany may be seen from the following:

"In the Grand Duchy of Baden the number of saloons and drinkhouses has increased from 5,910 in 1868 to 8,935 in 1877; the breweries have increased in the same time from 1,566 to 1,702, and distilleries from 25,276 to 27,757—an increase in the number of saloons and drinkhouses of 71 per cent."

A similar state of things, it is said, exists in the whole German empire.

In the Bank of England is a curious machine, into which sovereigns are poured, like grain into a mill. As they pass on one by one, all that are light weight are thrown to one side, those of full weight to another. So that the distinction is made with unerring certainty. So will it be in the last day. No sin will pass the Great Judge undetected. He knows the secrets of all hearts. Whatever has lain undiscovered by men will stand forth in naked reality then.

DAVID'S BIBLE AND OUR BIBLE.

"The men that keep thy law with care,
And meditate thy word,
Grow wiser than their teachers are,
And better know the Lord."

In the days of King David the Bible was a scanty book; yet he loved it well, and found daily wonders in it. Genesis with its sublime narration of how God made the world, with its glimpses of patriarchal piety, and dark disclosures of gigantic sin; Exodus, with its glorious marching through that great wilderness, its thrilling memorials of Jehovah's outstretched arm, and the volume of the written law; Leviticus, through whose flickering vistas David's eye discerned the shadow of better things to come; Numbers, with its natural history of the heart of man; Deuteronomy, with its vindication of the ways of God; Joshua and Judges, with their chapters of providence, their stirring incidents, and peaceful episodes; the memoir of Job, so fraught with spiritual experience; and the annals of Ruth, which told her grandson such a tale of divine foreknowledge, and love, and care, all converging on himself, or rather on David's Bible; and he desired it beyond all his riches.

But you have yet an ampler Bible —a Bible with Psalms and Prophets in it, a Bible with Gospels and Epistles. How do you love that? How often have you clasped it to your bosom as the man of your counsel? How often have you dwelt on its promises, until they evolved a sweetness which made you marvel? How many times have you praised the Lord for the clearness of its light, the sanctity of its truth, and the sureness of its immortality?

"This precious food our heart revives:
What strength, what nourishment it gives!
O, let us ever more be fed
With this divine, celestial bread."

The two parts of which the Scriptures consist (the Old and the New Testaments), are connected by a chain of compositions (the prophecies), which bear no resemblance in form or style to any that can be produced from the stores of Grecian, Indian, Persian, or even Arabian learning. The antiquity of these compositions no man doubts; and the unstrained application of them to events long subsequent to their publication, is a solid ground of belief that they were genuine predictions, and consequently inspired.

"Watch not the clouds above thee;
Let the whirlwind round thee sweep;
God may the seed-time give thee,
But another hand may reap.

"Have faith, though ne'er beholding
The seed burst from its tomb;
Thou knowest not which may perish,
Or which be spared to bloom.

"Room on the narrowest ridges
The ripening grain will find;
That the Lord of the harvest coming,
In the harvest sheaves may bind."

The Bootblack, and what he Became.

More than a hundred years ago there lived in the city of Oxford a boy whose name was George. He was very poor, so much so that he was compelled to clean the boots of the students at the University to obtain money with which to buy the necessaries of life. His countenance was one of no ordinary appearance. His eyes were keen and piercing, his forehead noble and lofty, and every feature of his face was perfectly developed. By his easy and polite manners, his obliging disposition, and his warm and generous nature, he soon won the confidence and esteem of many of those upon whom he waited. The poverty of clothing served better to show the richness of the mind, which needed only cultivation to make it one of the brightest in the whole country. The students of the University seeing such noble qualities in the lowly and humble bootblack, determined to educate him, and many of them devoted no little share of their time to that purpose. They found him ready, willing and studious. He lost not a moment of his precious time, but applied himself diligently, perseveringly, to his studies, and soon became equal, if not superior, to some of his instructors.

His advance in merit was very rapid; so great was it, that numbers were unable to recognize in the gifted and talented young man the once poor and needy bootblack. About this time there was a great change in the religion of England. There arose a sect which were strict observers of the Sabbath, faithful readers of God's Word, and who had stated engagements in prayer. With this party George immediately connected himself, and soon became one of the ablest and most consistent members. The youths who once sought his company now treated him with sneering contempt.

Those who once considered him a young man of extraordinary abilities then considered him a reckless fanatic, and avoided his society as they would have done a poor drunkard. All this did not move him. He was as firm as a rock. Nothing could change him. Like Moses, he preferred a life of Christian consistency to the enjoyment of sin for a season. His unchanging conduct won for him many warm and ardent admirers, and numbers who formerly branded him as a fanatic became his best friends. I have not the time, children, to say more concerning the character of this interesting young man. It will be sufficient to add that he became one of the most pious and talented preachers in England, and such numbers flocked to hear him that the largest house in London could not contain them.

He preached in the open fields to thousands upon thousands, and the great amount of good which he did eternity shall tell. Dear boys, do not mind the sneers of your companions. Do your duty, let consequences be what they may. Be industrious, energetic. Don't mind difficulties. They only make your arm stronger, your heart braver. If this poor boy could arise from the lowly position of a bootblack to that of one of the most pious and elegant preachers England ever produced, cannot you go and "do likewise?" You have no idea what you can do till you try. Energy, combined with earnest prayer, will accomplish the most difficult task.

Would you like to know the name of the boy who blackened the boots of the students at Oxford University? It is George Whitefield.—Our Banner.

A Word to Boys.

What do you think, young friends, of the hundreds of thousands who are trying to cheat themselves and others in the belief that alcoholic drinks are good for them? Are they not to be pitied and blamed? Do you want to be one of these wretched men? If we are to have drunkards in the future, some of them are to come from the boys to whom I am writing; and I ask you again if you want to be one of them? No! Of course you don't!

Well, I have a plan for you that is just as sure to save you from such a fate as the sun is to rise to-morrow morning. It never failed; it never will fail; and I think it is worth knowing. Never touch liquor in any form. That's the plan, and it's not only worth knowing, but is worth putting in practice.

I know you don't drink now, and it seems to you as if you never would. But your temptation will come, and probably will come in this way: You will find yourself, some time, with a number of companions, and they will have a bottle of wine on the table. They will drink and offer it to you. They will regard it as a manly practice, and very likely they will look upon you as a milksop if you don't indulge with them. Then what will you do? Eh? What will you do? Will you say, "No, no, none of that stuff for me! I know a trick worth half-a-dozen of that?" Or will you take the glass with your own common sense protesting, and your conscience making the whole draught bitter, and a feeling that you have damaged yourself, and then go off with a hot head and a skulking soul that at once begins to make apologies for itself, and will keep doing so during all his life? Boys, do not become drunkards.

LESSON V.—February 2, 1879—THE READING OF THE LAW.

SCRIPTURE.—Nehemiah 8:1-8.

And (Ezr. 3:1; 7:6) all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses, (2 Chron. 34:15: Deut. 31:11) which the Lord had commanded to Israel. | And Ezra the priest brought the law (Deut. 17:18) before the congregation (Deut. 31:12) both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. | And he read therein (Luke 4:16-20) before the street that was before the water gate from the (light) morning until midday, before the men and the women, and those that could understand; and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the (Mat. 7:28) book of the law. | And Ezra the scribe stood upon a pulpit (or tower of wood) of wood, which they had made for the purpose; and beside him stood (Neh 10:25) Mattithiah, and Shema, and Anaiah, and Hilkiah, and Maaseiah, on his right hand; and on his left hand, Pedaiah, and Mishael, and Malchiah, and Hashum, and Hashbadana, and Zechariah, and Meshullum. | And Ezra opened the book in the sight (or eyes) of all the people; (for he was above all the people:) and when he opened it all the people (1 Kings 8:14) stood up: | And Ezra (2 Chron. 6 4) blessed the Lord, the great God. And all the people answered (Jer. 28:6) Amen, Amen, with (Ps. 28 2) lifting up their hands; and they (Gen. 24:26) bowed their heads. and worshiped the Lord with their (Mat. 26:39) faces to the ground. | Also Jeshua, and Bani, and Sherebiah, Jamin, Akkub, Shabbethai, Hodijah, Maaseiah, Kelita, Azariah, Jozabad, Hanan, Pelaiah, and the Levites (Mal. 2:7) caused the people to understand the law: and the people stood in their place. | So they read in the book in the law of God distinctly (Luke 24:45) and gave the sense and caused them to understand the reading.

NOTES ON PERSONS.

[From Scholar's Handbook.]

"Ezra," a famous scribe and priest. He came from Babylon to Jerusalem, B. C. 458, with about 3000 Jews, having received a commission from Artaxerxes. He caused the Jews to separate from their heathen wives. After this he is not again mentioned until in the present lesson, Neh. 8:1. How he spent the intervening twelve years is not known. It is supposed that he returned to Babylon and then revisited Jerusalem in Nehemiah's time. There is no mention of him after Neh. 12:36. Traditions as to his death are various. His reputed tomb is on the Tigris, twenty miles above the uphrates To him is ascribed the work of arranging the Canon of Jewish Scripture, and the authorship of the books of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, and perhaps Esther.

EXPLANATORY.

I. An eager audience. 1. "The street," the court or square; "the water gate," this was probably a gate from the inner to the outer temple, on the north side, and perhaps leading to the remarkable cisterns which have been discovered by Capt. Warren, south of the modern Haram.—"Ezra the scribe," see Notes; "book of the law," the first five books of the Old Testament, and perhaps Joshua. The public reading of the law was required every seventh year, Deut. 31:9-13; but the practice had fallen into neglect. 2. "First day, seventh month." This was the day of the "Feast of Trumpets," which was specially observed, Lev. 23:24.

II. A Memorable Bible Reading. 3. "Before the street," an error for "in the street." "Morning until midday." At least six hours, during which time a quarter of the whole Pentateuch might be read. 4. "Pulpit," rather a high tower or high platform, large enough for at least thirteen beside himself. "They read." Ezra and the Levites. "Gave the sense." The law was written in pure Hebrew, while the people spoke Chaldaic. Hence many words and phrases might need explanation. They were very ignorant of the law, and some of them had probably never heard it read before.

[From the International Lesson Quarterly.]

The Connection. The new difficulty was one we might not expect. Chap. 5. The work was great, and as all were called to service, it disclosed the fact that some of the nobles and rich men had taken usury from the others. This Nehemiah denounced and corrected. Then the enemies tried their sixth device. They proposed a union meeting for consultation, to be held in the plain of Ono (the valley of craftsmen). Chap. 11:35. But Nehemiah knew better than to form an alliance with unbelievers, and the scheme failed. This led to the seventh plan, which was treason within. Some of the nobles were related to Sanballat (chap. 6:18), and he gained them, and hired Shemaiah to lead Nehemiah to make a fortress of the temple, and they would use that to prove him a usurper who aimed to be king. Chap. 6:6-13. But this servant of God would not be betrayed, and all their plans came to naught. Many will ask: If we are not to unite with the world or depend upon men, what are we to do? Chapter 8 is the answer to this. We are to follow the teachings of God: his word is our light and guide.

The time of this lesson was the seventh month, "Tisri" (equal to our September and October), B. C. 444. This month was the beginning of the civil year, but God changed the new year when they came out of Egypt. Ex. 12:2. The feast of trumpets came at this time (Lev. 23:23 25), and it now celebrated the beginning of a new national life, being the first great gathering for feast-keeping since the captivity.

The place is called "a street near the water-gate" (verse 3). This was on the south side leading to the temple, and the water for the temple use was brought through this gate. The people were probably gathered in the public square of Ophel.

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

[From the S. S. Times Quarterly.]

What other instances, in the Bible, of people gathering "as one man?" What king of Judah had the people regularly instructed in the law? What king of Judah had the newly found law read before him? Give one or more passages showing that Jesus is our teacher. One or more that show the Holy Spirit to be our teacher. What Old Testament passage speaks of teaching one line at a time and reviewing? Who shall be wiser for having instruction? What occasions of preaching the Gospel are recorded, where the exercises lasted longer than half a day? When and where did Jesus preach when his position was lower than his audience? What things besides the Bible teach the being, eternity and power of God?

Free Missions.

At a meeting last Friday evening of the committee appointed by the Illinois State Convention to carry into effect the recommendations of that body respecting the Associated Churches of Christ and missions free from the lodge, a constitution was adopted which is adjoined. The committee not being fully represented it was voted to print the paper, adopted informally, and secure the approval of absent members as soon as possible. It is as follows:

The Illinois State Christian Association meeting in the College Chapel, Wheaton, Ill., Nov. 20 to 22, 1878, appointed the persons named below a committee to take charge of and superintend the cause of missions connected with The Associated Churches of Christ, with power to increase their numbers and fill vacancies and to act on their own responsibility, viz: Milton Wright, J. Blanchard, J. B. Walker, J. M. Snyder, Amos W. Wheeler, A. H. Hiatt, E. B. Thompson, J. L. Barlow, J. F. Browne, Geo. R. Milton and E. L. Sheldon.

Bishop Milton Wright, living out of the State, empowered J. F. Browne to call the committee together. A previous informal meeting having accepted the trust, and organized for action, a quorum assembled at the College building, Jan. 13, 1879, and appointed J. Blanchard and J. F. Browne a subcommittee to prepare and report a constitution and address to Christian people on the following Wednesday, which report is as follows.

CONSTITUTION.

I. This committee shall be called and known as the Christian Commission for missions divorced from secret lodges and false worships, and from whatever organized or established evil obstructs the kingdom of Christ.

II. It shall elect the necessary executive officers, who shall hold office one year, or till their successors are chosen.

III. No Freemason or member of any secret order, or one whose practice and life plainly conflict with the precepts of Christ, shall be a member of this Commission, nor shall any such be accepted as missionaries under our supervision.

IV. This Commission will aid and assist as it may be able, good men, sound in the faith, who seem manifestly approved of God, who go as volunteer missionaries; and will encourage all donors who can do so, to send aid directly to missionaries whom they may desire to aid; and it recommends to all who receive such aid direct from donors to report the same regularly through the Christian Cynosure, for the sake of system, and the encouragement of others: the object and intent being to make, so far as possible, all Christians a committee of the whole for bringing the world to Christ.

V. But, whereas, the one who gives "two mites which make a farthing," could not pay for a postal order; or, in many cases, judge of the fitness of missionaries or the value of missions, this Commission offers its aid to all who sympathize with the Associated Churches of Christ, in spreading the Gospel of Christ free from the idolatries which now corrupt the churches and curse the nations of the earth.

VI. It is the desire and intention of the commission to act simply as receiving and disbursing agents; to assume no responsibilities, except in judging of and commending missionaries; to accumulate no debts; but to cultivate in ourselves and others associated with us a habitual dependence on God for means and guidance in the missionary work: and the expressed wish of donors will, in all cases direct the application of funds given.

VII. Five members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum for business.

—The revival meetings continued at Wheaton through last week with unusual interest. Saturday was observed as the week before, with meetings from 10 o'clock till 2, and in the evening. This week the work will be continued from night to night and on Saturday it is expected that the day will be given up to religious work among the unconverted with an afternoon meeting from 2 till 5 o'clock.

FREE METHODIST.

—Bro. C. H. Rawson, of the last class at Wheaton College, has been quite successful in ministering to the church at Athens, Ill., and also in protracted meetings at other points. He has been laboring in revival meetings with Rev. H. S. Abbott at the Big Grove and Long Point churches near Waynesville, Ill.

—Rev. W. F. Manley is engaged in a revival effort at Maywood, a few miles west of Chicago, which promises to be a great blessing to many souls.

—Thomas B. Arnold, associate editor of the Free Methodist, does not yet fully recover from his severe sickness of last fall. He has been compelled to give up his work in connection with the paper for more healthful out-door employment, hoping for restoration in time and a return to a work in which he has shown great fitness.

—The expositions by Past Master Ronayne at Oakland City, Indiana, opened the way for a reform church. The Methodist Episcopal brethren will not pay an oath-bound minister and Bro. Geo. Wilson responds to calls to open a Free Methodist class.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. J. M. Snyder of Wheaton is busily preparing for his removal to Nebraska, having already shipped part of his goods. He has received numerous responses from Wesleyans scattered through the late-settled regions of that State. He will have abundance of work as a pioneer missionary of a reform Gospel.

—Since writing the above we learn that Bro. Snyder started on Monday morning for the West intending to remain long enough to get his family comfortably settled when he will return to Wheaton until the meeting of the Illinois Conference which will be held at Wheaton in October.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard writes from Brighton, Michigan, that the labors of brethren Rathbun, Ronayne and others in that region are bearing much fruit to the glory of God; and the attempt of the M. E. church to force their members to support a Masonic clergy has driven a number of their conscientious members to the Wesleyan brethren, who are in a prosperous condition and maintaining a faithful testimony for Christian reforms.

FRIENDS.

—B. C. Hobbs of Indiana and Charles Tyler of Manchester, England, have just reported the success of their mission to Berlin and St. Petersburg in behalf of those religious communities of Germany and Russia who are suffering on account of their objection to war. At the court of the Czar they were received by M. De Gier a colleague of Prince Gortschakoff, with Baron Sacken of the Department of Public Instruction. They make the following report:

"M. DeGier stated that the emperor was too closely occupied to receive us, every minute being assigned to official duties till his departure. He said that he did not consider the Mennonite question to be definitely settled, and that consultations were then pending with some foreign governments, naming Sweden and Norway, to bring about a concurrent policy in dealing with those subjects who conscientiously refuse to bear arms. He promised to place the statements, and other papers, into the hands of the emperor before he left St. Petersburg, which would be on the 26th.

In answer to our desire for information relative to female education and other subjects of a religious and moral character, Baron Sacken, the next day, kindly introduced us to Baroness Reskden, a Protestant lady of the court, from whom we learned some interesting and valuable particulars. She informed us among other things, that the laws forbidding conversions from the Greek church, and compelling the bringing-up of children of mixed marriages in the Greek communion, are now by imperial order virtually abrogated, and that no impediment is now placed to freedom of religious profession. We were with her nearly an hour. The interview was concluded with a season of religious fellowship and prayer, which refreshed our spirits and called for humble gratitude to our Father in heaven.

Before we parted from Baron Sacken, B. C. Hobbs gave him a copy of the Appeal on War in English and French, and of the plea on "Liberty of Conscience (ed. 1856), to be forwarded to the emperor, with other copies in envelopes for distribution, with a note to the emperor referring to these documents as containing a full and clear presentation of our Christian principles on these subjects.

In connection with this subject we ought to state that we were informed that the Malakans, whose principal centers are Timboo and Serator, on the Volga, were now in trouble because of an imperial order which forbids them to employ substitutes from the Greek Church, had lately sent a delegation to the emperor desiring relief, and the Sthundisto in Bessarabia, a kind of Bible Christians, analogous to the Malakans, were included among the sects that desired relief from the military requirements of the government. Gen. Todleben had been sent by the emperor to inquire into their characters, who reported them as "good subjects, industrious and moral." The emperor replied on hearing it: "The age of persecution is past."

BAPTIST.

—Bro. Palmer of Batavia, N. Y., writes that there is a mistake in the note of two weeks ago, stating that a Baptist church in Wyoming county, New York, had expelled several prominent members because of their adherence to Freemasonry. The story was started by the Masonic editor of the Spirit of the Times and is untrue and libelous. "The facts are just the reverse. The Baptist church in Perry has recently expelled eight of its old members, because they refused to sustain and fellowship Freemasonry in the church. The Baptist church in Perry has held out long against the encroachments of Freemasonry; but has finally gone over to the adversary. There has been a long and bitter contest, resulting not in the turning out of those that troubled Israel, but the friends of truth.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—Elder Parker Hurless has made arrangements to have the mechanical work of his paper, the Christian Radical, done at the publication office, Polo, Ill. Since its establishment Arnold Bros. of Sycamore, Ill., have printed it. The change is made to facilitate the work of the office.

—Two new churches were dedicated last Sabbath at important points; one at Des Moines, Iowa, the other at Danville, Illinois. Bishops Wright and Weaver officiated respectively.

—The U. B. Sabbath school of Shelby, Ohio, held a fine entertainment on New Years. The attendance was large and the equal to any Christmas festival, and without any popish alloy.

GENERAL.

—Charles Demond Treasurer of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, has resigned by request of the Executive Committee, who publish a notice that this action was necessary on account of recently discovered malfeasance in office on the part of Demond, who had made an unauthorized disposal or use of the invested funds of the society. The committee decline to make public further particulars, claiming they do not know as yet whether the Society has lost anything by the operations of Demond's action in changing the invested funds of the society without having authority for so doing. The amount at risk ranges from $50,000 to $100,000.

—The seating capacity of the churches of the State of New York is sufficient for 2,600,000 persons.

The number of church members of all denominations is 1,300,000. The aggregate value of churches and church property is $117,610 000. A recent writer says: "The three denominations having the largest number of organizations are, the Methodist, 1,785; Baptist, 823, and Presbyterian, 716. Largest number of edifices: Methodist, 1,766; Baptist, 812, and Presbyterian, 708. Largest number of sittings. Methodist, 619 800; Roman Catholic, 388 000, and Presbyterian, 335,000. In membership, however, the Roman Catholic church is far ahead of all others, the three largest being: Catholic, 582.000; Methodist, 181,000, and Presbyterian, 112,000. The Protestant Episcopal denomination owns the largest amount of church property, $24 602,000; the Roman Catholic comes next with $22,700,000, and the Presbyterian third, with $19,115,000. The sum annually paid for salaries of clergymen is $5,310,000, of which the Methodists pay $1.140,000; the Presbyterians $952,000, and the Episcopalians, $811,000. The average for each organization in the State is $840."

—Mr. Henry Varley will make Melbourne the scene of his future labors, and a tabernacle is to be erected for him capable of accommodating 5,000 persons.

—The Presbyterians of Canada have gone into the work of evangelizing the Roman Catholics of their Dominion with great earnestness. It is stated that there are now twenty-one French Presbyterian ministers in charge of French congregations in Canada, with elders, deacons, communion-rolls, and all other features of a Presbyterian church.

—The Bishop of York, Episcopal, of England, says that disestablishment at an early day is not improbable, and added: "I am not one of those who have abject terror of such a state of things. There are circumstances under which it would become our duty, one and all, to wish for such an event."

Crooked Creek Colony, Kansas.

BY REV. P. S. FEEMSTER.

I take this means of answering the many letters of inquiry which come to me from the readers of the Cynosure.

My claim is not in Harvey county, but in the northwest corner of Meade county, Kansas, twenty-seven miles more or less from Dodge City. Dodge City is on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road, and is the nearest railroad point. To reach there one must first go to Topeka, the capital of the State, and thence on the Santa Fe road to Dodge City.

The land, to all appearance, is very fine indeed, Lying in and around the big bend of Crooked Creek there is a beautiful valley, perhaps fifteen miles square, combining more advantages, in my judgment, than any place I have found. It is nearly all first class bottom land, and the higher lands around it are all good. It is well watered. There are some good springs. Water can be had any where in the valley by digging from ten to thirty feet. In the high lands around it you would have to dig perhaps eighty or ninety feet, but every where so far as tried the water, when found, is abundant and good. Crooked Creek is an unfailing stream and affords stock water in abundance.

No farming has been done in the valley as yet. One year's gardening was all the test I could hear of, having been made near Dodge City. That one experiment was reported to me by a very intelligent lady as having been very successful. She named especially her lima beans as having been very fine. Millet and the small grains have been grown with great success along the railroad even farther west than Crooked Creek. Corn, thus far, has not been a great success. These facts and others too tedious to mention, have satisfied the people there that they have a first class country for pretty much all products of the farm except corn. For corn, it may not be more than second or third rate. Hence it is a country adapted to cattle and sheep and not to hogs.

Usually cattle and sheep live tolerably well on buffalo grass the winter through. With a very small amount of extra feed they do well, and the butter or wool furnishes what, above all things else, the emigrant needs,—quick returns of money. Every emigrant to that section ought to make a start, be it large or small, in cattle or sheep. Sheep are exceedingly healthy there. Texas cattle are healthy, but are not usually good milkers and are wild and hard to manage. Domestic cattle are a fortune to a man if they live, but they are painfully liable to the Texas fever. The timber in the vicinity is very limited, though there is some.

Prices in Dodge City run as follows:

Flour,	$2.00	per hundred.
Corn,	75	" "
Buffalo beef,	04½	per pound.
Butter,	30	" "
Eggs,	25	per dozen.
Hard coal,	8.50	per ton.

Dry goods and groceries not much different from what we find them in good business points every where. Dimension lumber is $3 50 per hundred. If a man is willing to fall in with the manner of living prevalent there, he can live at very little cost.

He can shoot his own meat, raise his own butter and eggs and have a little to sell. Build a sod house costing from five to twenty-five dollars, and burn wood and buffalo chips. The latter make a wonderfully good fire and can be gathered by the ton at every man's door.

In this valley there are six families already there. About the same number of single men have made their homes there and perhaps from twelve to twenty homestead claims have been taken and will be occupied in the spring.

This makes me believe, taking into view the character of the settlers so far as I have been able to learn it, that I will be able to organize a Congregational church in the spring or summer. And I expect to move to my claim in the spring in the full confidence that I will have school privileges also for my children very soon.

There is as yet plenty of first-class land to be taken in the valley, but the tidal wave of emigration has already reached that point and it will soon be full. There are three ways of taking up this public land:

By Preemption.—You file your claim in the land-office at Larned. This will cost you $2. You then build on and occupy your claim for six months, pay $1.25 per acre and get your deeds.

By Homesteading.—On this plan your office fees will be your whole outlay. These will amount to $14. You must be on your claim in less than six months; occupy it for five years, and then get your deeds.

By Timber Claim.—Your office fees again are $14. You are not required to live on your timber claim. Only one timber claim can be taken in a section and that only on sections which have no timber on them. You are required to break five acres the first year. The second year you must plant this five acres in timber and break five more. The third year you must cultivate the first five, plant the second and for five years more you must keep your ten acres in a growing condition after which you can get your deeds. A soldier can get a hundred and sixty acres in any of the three ways and take it anywhere where public land can be found. And he can have his claim laid by another person by giving him a "power of attorney." A citizen must take his claim in person. He can take one hundred and sixty acres in any way and anywhere except that if his claim lies inside of the railroad land grant he can only homestead thirty acres. No lands are taxable or liable for debts until the deeds are secured.

I wish also to say in closing that I have no power to prevent any one who wishes from taking these or any other public lands, but it is my earnest desire that this fine valley be occupied by a people devoted to the service of Christ with singleness of heart. I would have them set their face as a flint against intemperance, and I would class the use of tobacco as a kindred crime. I would have them stand aloof from the whole system of secretism as a conspiracy against society, and abhor the lodge worship as an idolatrous thing.

My address for a few months will be Eldorado, Butler county, Kansas; and I will be happy to answer inquiries from those who wish to join in such a colony as I have described.

The Spare Bed.

Almost every family has a spare bed. It is generally in a spare room, remote from the living room, where it would never feel the influence of any fire that would usually be kindled; or in a chamber, with no arrangement for warming it in winter. Into this spare room and spare bed, company is put, frequently without the least thought that there is the slightest danger of injuring their guests. This is done with the kindest intentions, out of respect to their friends, who they wish might enjoy the best they have. Strong, healthy persons, in the vigor of life, might not experience any serious inconvenience. Not so the feeble or aged. Many under these circumstances have taken a cold that has brought on severe cough, sometimes congestion of the lungs and even death itself.

It ought to be known that an unoccupied bed, in a cold room in winter, not only becomes cold but also gathers moisture, and is dangerous to the most robust and healthy, but especially so to the aged and infirm. None are more exposed to this danger, than ministers who preach with two or more churches alternately. Sometimes they arrive at the house where they intend to spend the night, late in the day thoroughly fatigued and chilled; or at the close of the labors of the Sabbath, are completely prostrate. In either case the system requires rest and comfort, and is in a poor condition to be taxed with an extra effort to keep up animal heat, in a cold, damp bed, and the result is a sleepless night, cold and hoarseness in the morning, protracted cough, congestion, or consumption and death.

These dangers are easily remedied. The least trouble, perhaps, where it can be done, is to kindle a fire in the room, or an adjoining room, and open the bed an hour or two before the bed is occupied; or it may be warmed by a a hot soap-stone, bottles of hot water, or the old-fashioned "warming-pan," or by applying heat in any way that a thoughtful woman can find out. Extra quilts and comforters will afford no protection. The cold and dampness and dangers are in the bed.—Morning Star.

In answer to the question, "Why are farmers so liable to rheumatism?" the Science of Health says: "Because they wear wet clothing, heat and suddenly chill the body, overeat after very hard work, and because they do not keep the skin in a vigorous, healthy condition. If farmers would avoid suddenly cooling the body after great exertion, if they would be careful not to go with wet clothing and wet feet, and if they would not overeat when in an exhausted condition, and bathe daily, using much friction, they would have less rheumatism.

Dr. Rachel Swain on Diphtheria.

The term diphtheria is generally applied to malignant forms of epidemic throat diseases, to the exclusion of the milder and more numerous cases of illness induced by the epidemic influence.

This disease seems to have made its appearance in this country about the year 1855. In 1860 it prevailed in New York to such an extent, and the mortality was so great, that some of the medical journals intimated that the medical profession was ignorant of its nature; and the Board of Health of that city issued a document recommending disinfectants, cleanliness, sunshine, ventilation, etc. One year later it reached Ohio and Indiana and made havoc among the school children and others: the mortality ranging from twenty to fifty per cent.

The per cent however of fatal cases varies more in different seasons than any other disease.

This may be, in part at least accounted for by the great diversity of circumstances, the different constitutions of patients and their varied habits; and I fear very much is due to the errors of our present system of practice. It is stated in Orange, Connecticut, there were fifteen cases and four died; and the one saved removed from the town and from the doctor as soon as the disease attacked him. In a town in Kentucky, there were thirty-five cases reported, and there were thirty deaths.

Dr. Prescott after an experience of forty years of drug medication, treated several cases by the Hygienic system and lost but one. The mortality in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, was about equal to that in the Eastern States. In New York city in 1857, two cases were reported; in 1858, five cases; in 1859, fifty-three cases; in 1860, four hundred and twenty deaths were reported.

The cure of diphtheria can be made so certain that not more than one or two cases in a hundred will prove fatal where the patients have the usual amount of vitality. The following rule can be relied upon and adhered to with but slight variation.

"For all practical purposes, diphtheria may be regarded as an inflammation of the mucous membrane of the mouth and throat sometimes extending into the windpipe and even to its bronchial ramifications into the lungs, attended with an exudation of fibrous matter which concretes into membraneous covering, as in some cases of croup. The exudations should be arrested by a prompt and persevering application of cold wet cloths, and iced water or ice itself, frequently applied to the mouth and throat."

It may be found necessary to use a gargle of hot milk between the times of using the ice. Hot fomentations to the nose and lungs are often found beneficial.

Electricity in its gentler applications, running the currents from the inflamed surfaces to the extremities, or given as a tonic, stands paramount in the prevention of the more dangerous symptoms; often arresting the progress of the disease at the start.

Now ladies for your part of the prevention: If you have delicate or scrofulous children, rear them out doors; keep the extremities well clothed, and use your houses more for places of shelter and protection. Keep the stomachs as well as the entire cuticle of your children clean, and use as much care in providing food for them as your husbands would in providing for their domestic animals. Study how and when to bathe, and guard against the use of hard water, and well-water in cities; make it a point to use pure soft water unadulterated with either vegetable or mineral substances.

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertainment will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLURKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 18, 1879.

Topics of the Time.

The return of such old political managers as Logan of Illinois, Carpenter of Wisconsin, Conkling of New York, and J. D. Cameron of Pennsylvania, to the Senate by election, and the return of Chandler of Michigan by appointment of the governor already talked of, very significantly points to powerful influences operating in the politics of the Northern States. There is doubtless a degree of reaction from reform politics. New and inexperienced men have not accomplished all that was hoped for by their constituents, who are willing to give the old leaders another trial, since time has partly obliterated the remembrance of their unworthiness. It means, too, at least in New York and Illinois, that the lodge is turning the force of its machinery upon politics with too great success. The time of our deliverance from this evil yet delays.

Switzerland and Sweden are feeling the pressure of "hard times." In the old city of Geneva the council of state has asked for ninety thousand francs to relieve destitute workmen. Along with English manufactures, the watch trade has come into our hands and will remain with us while we can invent superior machinery. The cause of commercial distress in Sweden is not given, but while it exists and our skies are brighter we must expect a large Swedish immigration. The English dispatches already foretell what must be expected from that country. It is a compensation for our prosperity that we must give homes and the ballot to the world's poor. We need not, however, allow them to remain ignorant of our religion and of the great principles of our government, which are their only hindrances to good citizenship.

Mr. Evarts, Secretary of State reiterates very emphatically and truly the sentiment expressed in 1872 by Charles Francis Adams. Mr. Evarts says: "The great bane of our elective and political system is to be found in the never-ending discussion of campaign matters, even when no campaign is pending. What the country needs, and what the people themselves want, is peace and quiet, freedom from political excitements of all kinds, that they may settle down to the serious and more material business of life."

The professional burglar and cutthroat has aliases in proportion as he is desperate. The secret societies of the South follow the same rule, The men who would rob the negro of his blood-bought rights and kill him if he resists, were "Ku-Klux," "White Leagues," "gun clubs," "Hampton brigades," and now in northern Louisiana they are known by the figures 298, and their badge is a crescent embellished with these figures. In other sections they are known as "advisory committees," ready to enforce their "advice" with the revolver; or the latest, "Buggy brigades," with every vehicle a traveling arsenal to suppress the fifteenth amendment.

While the Senate committee is gathering voluminous evidence of fraud and wholesale murder of the blacks in South Carolina and Louisiana during the last fall elections, the spirit that animated these outrages is threatening a repetition of the days of Davis and Toombs and "Bully" Brooks in Congress. Last week an honest-spoken Democrat from Wisconsin spoke his mind, and that of every loyal man, upon the Southern claims. He bid these claimants count the billions spent to put down the war and strike a balance with $35,000,000 claims. He was willing the past should be buried and did not want it brought up in one form or another for the purpose of getting money from the Treasury. His speech fired the Southern members, and Ellis of Louisiana replied glorifying the war from a rebel view and confessing that slavery and not State rights was its great object. Those who were in the rebel army were the only loyal people in the South. They had been loyal to their country, to their God, and to the noblest, highest, and manliest emotion ever breathed by a human soul. Mr. Ellis was not alone in this outburst of anger and disloyalty, but was sustained by a number of his Southern friends, who were with the greatest difficulty restrained by the cooler members of their party.

The last Indian hunt and massacre will renew the fight over the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The Congressional Committee is equally divided on the question. The whole country will agree with the four gentlemen who advise the transfer that the history of our dealing with the Indian has been one of shame and mortification; the last chapter is enough to prove the indictment. A little company of Indians after repeated efforts for liberty are hunted through the snows and bluffs of Nebraska, corralled and shot down like wolves; and then the officials who ordered the hunt sit down to "investigate" the affair! Were these Cheyennes in the Montinegrin fastnesses their struggles would be called heroic. There must be a settlement of these difficulties soon; for if American Christians can look helplessly on such slaughter, knowing that it is the result of criminality in officials of their own making, God himself will be avenged upon us for our cowardliness and treachery, and will require this blood of us.

"THE DECEIVABLENESS OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS."—The Roman Catholic members of the German Reichstag (Congress) voted with the Socialists who have repeatedly, by their agents, attempted to murder the Emperor. The Catholic Review of New York justifies their vote, and as usual lays the blame of the "blood or bread" saints on Protestant Christianity. All the trouble comes by Bismarck and the Emperor and party not belonging to the Romish church. Then all would be lovely. "The Church" would take care of all. Why then did not "The Church" keep her leal children from tearing up railroads and burning down depots? Was that also Bismarck's oppression that made the Irish destroy millions of property and many lives? The answer is one and the same. Since Cain killed Abel, mere man-made religious worships, such as popery is made of, have been inhabited and wielded by Satan, who is a "liar and murderer from the beginning." And no fraud is too barefaced, no cruelty too bloody, no rancor, cunning or inconsistency too great for the priests of these rites to practice. "Neither," as saith the prophet, "can they blush."

—President Limbocker of the Michigan State Association approves of the suggestions of Secretary Stoddard. On account of age and ill health in his family he cannot give personal attention as a member of the Executive Committee to the arrangements for the State Convention, but will contribute liberally and aid as he can. He wishes to emphasize the proposition that if anything is done, it should be done thoroughly.

Freemasonry a Religion.

Opposers of the system of Freemasonry have not been agreed as to what extent it is a system of religion, and hence while some have opposed it as a rival of Christianity, others have partly or wholly rejected this ground of opposition.

One of the latest authorities in testimony of the religious aims of the order is M. Eugene Revillaud, of France, who has published a book entitled "La Question Religeuse, et la Solution Protestante." He was reared a Roman Catholic, but some time ago rejected that church, and at the time of writing his book was not a believer in Christianity, but desired to be such. He has since become truly converted and joined the Reformed Church of France, and is now an active and eloquent evangelist.

In his book he shows with great force that men need an object of worship and a faith in a future life. He rejects Roman Catholicism as a satisfactory system, and shows how revolting to the mind are many of its teachings. After this he shows how philosophy has been tried in vain as a religious system. Freemasonry, he says has been offered and tried as a supply for the wants of the soul. The French Revolution did not remedy the matter, and made the great mistake of not substituting a satisfactory religion for popery. The author finally sees no hope but in Protestantism.

Hence we see how this writer, who is a well-known journalist and public speaker in France, views Freemasonry. He regards it, as a matter of course, as a system of religion, professing to offer a hope for the soul of man. As a religion it has been tried by thousands, and with what result we need not ask M. Reveillaud, though he pronounces it a failure. We all know that French Masonry has recently declared itself atheistic, rejecting the only idea of religion held by the best national branches of the order, namely deism. If the whole order in every country declares itself atheistic few Christians will have the face to apologize for the system except through the spirit of fear. But if it is indeed, in any country, still a system of deistic religion, should it not be opposed as the rival of Christianity? If this alone of all the hindrances in the way of the salvation of men and the conversion of the world is to be let alone in its work of deceiving souls, where is the Scriptural or even rational authority for treating it with courteous silence?

The amazing thing is that the religious papers are generally silent about a powerful system whose existence they cannot pretend to ignore. Why they do not examine the claims and merits of this system, so as to give their readers the benefit of information as to whatever merits it may have is very strange. But we do not find any religious paper to be the open advocate of the excellencies of Freemasonry.

W. O. T.

How Scripture is Used by the Lodge.

BY GEO. H. WILLIAMS.

I charge against Masonry, that when in its rituals it quotes from the Bible passages in which Christ's name occurs, it takes out.

Compare with 1 Pet. 2:1, and Isaiah 28:16, the following quotations from the Bible in the rituals, in the charge to be read at the opening of the Mark Master's lodge (Mackey Rit. pp. 271, etc.): "Wherefore, brethren, lay aside all malice, and guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings. If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious, to whom coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious; ye also as living stones, be ye built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up sacrifices acceptable to God. Wherefore also, it is contained in the Scripture, Behold I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste to pass it over. Unto you, therefore, which believe, it is an honor: and even to them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner."

A few more verses from the second chapter of 1st Peter are then quoted in the ritual, and then comes the following note: "The passages of Scripture here selected are peculiarly appropriate to this degree. The repeated reference to the "living stone," to the "tried stone," the "precious corner stone," and more especially to "the stone which the builders disallowed," are intended to impress the mind not only with the essential ceremonies of the degree, but also with its most important and significant symbol. The passages are taken, with slight, but necessary modifications, from the second chapter of the 1st Epistle of Peter, and the 28th chapter of Isaiah."

"A slight, but necessary modification!"—to take out the name of Christ, and the plainest inspired references to him, and, so far as may be, to hide from the reader or hearer, the important truth that Christ is "the living stone," "the tried stone," "the precious corner-stone," and "the stone which the builders disallowed," But he is the stone which the Jewish builders then disallowed, which the Masonic builders still disallow.

Note the mutilations of the passages from 1 Peter, 2nd chapter. Note the jump from the midst of the 6th verse, into the midst of the 16th verse of Isaiah 28, and the jump back to 1 Pet. 2:7. Note well what "slight" modifications of God's Word here are "necessary" to fit it for Masonic use.

In 1 Pet. 2:5, the words "spiritual" (before the word "sacrifices") and the words "by Jesus Christ," at the end of the verse, are omitted in the ritual. No sacrifice can be acceptable to God, otherwise than "by Jesus Christ," the only High Priest whom God the Father has ordained to this office. (Heb. 5:5, 6, 7; 21–28; and 8:1.) It is the devil who teaches the contrary.

The quotation from 1 Pet. 2:6, ends at the word "Scripture," the jump hence to Isaiah 28:16, it is plain, is made to avoid the words "on him," (in 1 Pet. 2:6) i. e., on 'Jesus Christ," whose name was taken out at the end of verse 5. Masonry here refuses to "confess that Jesus is Lord" (Phil. 2:11), the "Lord" named in 1 Pet. 2:3, and "the Living Stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God and precious," mentioned in verse 4. So also, right here, Masons now, as did the Jews of old, "disallow"—reject Christ, "the living stone," "chosen of God, and precious," mentioned in 1 Pet. 2:4; the "tried stone," the "precious corner-stone," the "sure foundation," (Isaiah 28:16).

But further note Masonic "slight but necessary modification" of 1 Pet. 2:7, "Unto you, therefore, which believe, it is an honor." No word "he" must be allowed here, no more than the words "on him" may be allowed in verse 6 No "living stone" must be so much as referred to, lest the language call for Christ, but "it," a dead stone that cannot mean Christ, is the "slight but necessary modification" of this portion of God's Word, to fit it for Masonic use!

Only the devil can be the architect of the builders of Masonry, as he was of the Jewish builders, who rejected, "disallowed," Christ the "tried stone," which "has become the head of the corner." Masonry rejects Christ, the Rock of Ages, and builds on the sand. But her doom is recorded in Isaiah 28:17, 18, and Mat. 7:26, 27.

In the ritual in the Mark Master's degree are quotations from the Psalms, in prophecy concerning Christ. This passage is quoted by Christ, as recorded by Matthew, Mark and Luke, in which he shows the Jews that he was the stone referred to, and they were the builders who were rejecting him; and by Peter (Acts 4:11) showing the same. But Masonry in every case fails to quote the verses in connection which show that Christ is the stone referred to. Here are the quotations:

The stone which the builders refused is become the head of the corner.—Ps. 118:22.

Did ye never read in the Scripture, The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner?—Mat. 21:42.

And have you not read this Scripture, The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner?—Mark 12:10.

What is this then that is written, The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner?—Luke 20:17.

This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner."—Acts 4:11.

The three passages quoted above from Matthew, Mark and Luke are by them recorded as following Christ's parable to the Jewish rulers who demanded of him by what authority he taught. The parable is of the wicked husbandmen who stoned the servants and killed the son and heir of the owner of the vineyard. Christ applied the parable to these Jewish rulers and their treatment of him; and when they rejected this application, he, by this passage quoted from the Psalms, enforced his application of the parable. But Masonry gives not a hint of all this; nor that Christ is the rejected stone.

So in the passage, Acts 4:11. Peter had been arrested, imprisoned, and brought before the Jewish rulers, for teaching the people on the occasion of healing the lame man. The rulers demanded in what name, or by what power they had healed the lame man. Peter replied, (Acts 4:10) "By the name of Jesus of Nazareth, whom ye crucified;" and added, "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." (Acts 4:11.)

Masonry quotes in its ritual this 11th verse, which use, a term of practical masonry, mentions "the stone set at naught," etc.; but she hides the fact set forth in the next preceding verse (10) that Jesus of Nazareth is this stone, and that by the name of Jesus of Nazareth, they wrought their miracles.

"The chief corner stone," a Masonic term, is used in Eph. 2:20, concerning the church: "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." But Masonry finds this too hard a case for her to fit for Masonic use by her "slight but necessary modifications," and prudently leaves it.

There are also Masonic terms in Isaiah 28:17. Masonry quotes part of the 16th verse, but the "line" and "plummet" she cannot easily, by "slight but necessary modifications" of the verse, adapt to her use. The whole passage reads:

"Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men that rule this people which is in Jerusalem. Because ye have said, 'We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves.' Therefore they saith the Lord, 'Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste [i. e., shall not flee to some other refuge]. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, ye shall be trodden down by it."—Is. 28: 14–18.

Is not history now here repeating itself? Is not Masonry doing just what the "scornful men" that ruled in Jerusalem did? Has not Masonry made lies her refuge, and hid herself under falsehood?

There are other instances of the omission of Christ's name in quoting from the Bible. In the opening of the Royal Arch Chapter (Mackey Rit. pp. 348, 349) II. Thess. 3: 6-16, is quoted. The words "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," (verse 6th) are omitted, and also the words "by our Lord Jesus Christ" (verse 12th).

The Artillery of Evidence.

BY ELDER A. D. FREEMAN

Among the most important features of the work we have before us, is that of showing that it is an incontrovertible fact that Masonry has been revealed by many, very many, of its own members, in multitudes of instances, and in numerous ways. This, I think, should be made as prominent and be regarded as important as any feature of our work, for this reason: There are many, very many, that affect to, or do really disbelieve that Masonry has been revealed at all. Now I believe that there is evidence enough that may be massed together, not only to convince even the willful unbelievers, but to silence those that affect to disbelieve; except such as have no respect for themselves or any body else, and hate all common or uncommon honesty. This reform can make no headway only so far as men believe, and when unwilling are made to believe by massing overwhelming testimony. This immense (for it is immense) pretended or real unbelief, induced by the false statements of seemingly good men, must first be removed from every mind before that mind can be wheeled into line with our work, or even to feel any interest in it, or any sympathy with us who are engaged in it. True, this has been a part of the work of all engaged in this enterprise; but I am afraid that its importance has been undervalued or not properly considered. Much has been done in this direction, and there remains much more yet to be done. By gathering all the evidence from the history of the past fifty years and more, by those capable of doing it, (and let every one lend a hand) the gainsayers and willful unbelievers will be overwhelmed as by an all enveloping avalanche and put to silence.

A. K. Richey, Northfield, O., writes: "I trust that this reform is the work of God and that it will increase and go on conquering and to conquer, until secrecy, unwarrantable organized secrecy, shall hide its head and cease wholly to exist, together with all kindred evils."

C. K. Bitters, Valparaiso, Ind., writes: "I will see about getting up a club soon."

The Relation of Churches to Social Reforms.

BY REV. A. R. MEDBURY.

Essay read before the Wisconsin Baptist Ministerial Union, met Oct. 9 h 1878, in the First Baptist church, Racine. (Official copy—see editorial note.)

In an age when undue attention is given to mere external culture and refinement, strong tendencies to overlook the real condition of the inner man of the heart usually prevail. At such times society and the churches are apt to attach too much importance to those transient upheavals of human feeling, commonly called moral reforms.

These reforms are too often animated by self-righteousness, and based upon the assumption that the Gospel of Christ is a failure. Not infrequently they attempt to displace the prayer meeting with the lodge meeting, and the Bible by some society manual.

But what does any "reform" amount to when it is but the confirmed continuance of a life of uncertain duration in rebellion against God. No man is secured against absolute degeneracy so long as his moral nature is poisoned by a love of sin. Circumstances may serve to restrain this sinful nature, or a mere change of circumstances may serve to develop the dormant evil in the worst possible form. Moral reform, based upon self-righteousness, is moral safety for no man. An evil put away outwardly, but still loved from the heart, continues the mastery over the whole man. Our difficulty does not lie in the love of any particular form of sin. All sin is kindred.

Many good Christians think that in attempting to reform men from special vices they are helping men to take the first step towards Christ. But all so-called reform supported by self-righteousness is a widening of the gulf between the sinner and Christ. The churches of the living God can recognize but one beginning of true reform. "Except ye repent ye shall likewise perish." "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God." But when a man is born again he receives a nature, the vital controlling principle of which is holiness; and this nature is one of necessary and perpetual antagonism to the fairest forms or slightest degrees of evil. There is no point in the moral universe where infinitesimal evil can blend with infinitesimal holiness. A gulf great and eternally impassible is fixed between the two opposing principles, and spiritual regeneration alone will put a man on the right side of that gulf. The new life in Christ gives a man new aversions. He now loathes sin, not the outer form of some particular sins merely, but sin itself in any shape or without shape. If he is not set free from all his old habits at once, he is nevertheless set free from the dominion of sin when he is free from a love of it. New desires come with the new life. Since its germ is holiness, its aspirations must be holy. Not the kingdom of heaven with an ideal gladness is put first in this life, but "the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness."

Born from above a man's will begins to flow on willingly and gloriously with God's will, hence reform thus begun never goes backward, is never transient, because volitions in harmony with the Infinite will can never be transient or retrogressive.

It is written of the Christian "he" hath everlasting life. "Hath it," now? In the sense that henceforth and forever he shall exist and grow in holiness; as opposed to that moral and spiritual death which is existence, but existence in the love of sin, the bondage of its service and the bitterness of its eternal consequences. There are earthly reforms many, as there are earthly idols many. But as there is only one true and living God, so there is only one divine regeneration for earth or heaven. Here is the solitary beginning of all effectual reform. Regeneration is adapted and intended to make a new earth as well as a new heaven. It is God's method of reform. A true Gospel church is built upon this doctrine; built up of regenerated members, bound together and bound to Christ by the ligament of the new life. Hence such a church is the highest possible reform society on earth. Moreover that very doctrine of reform, and the distinct character of that divine benevolence by which Christ's church lives and which it teaches, puts such a church organically and utterly apart from every other moral, benevolent or reformatory society on earth. A Gospel church is placed in an attitude of vital antagonism to any moral scheme in which Christ is not pre-eminent, to any reform society based upon or animated by self-righteousness; to any benevolent organization, secret or open, all the benevolence of which is merely mutual commercial self-protection. What divine right has a church of Christ, or any member of it, to make yoke fellowship and oath-bound fraternity with any organization which opens its doors to men regardless of repentance and regeneration. The churches of Christ are sufficient of themselves in Him to furnish all the society any regenerated man needs on earth. This is the design of the church. However far Paul may have been made all things to all men that he might save some, he bore no unequal yoke with unbelievers; he held organized fraternal relations with the churches of the Lord Jesus Christ alone.

Because the Christian must work from a beginning, with motives and agencies, in a spirit, and for an ultimate end, all radically different from those of the average moral reformer, and radically different from the beginning, spirit, motives, agencies and ends, of any impenitent men or organization of impenitent men, for such reason the Christian cannot work effectually as a Christian, either in lines of benevolence or reform, if he be yoked up in organizations with confessedly impenitent men. Such yoke-fellowship necessarily sinks the Christian identity, banishes the Christ spirit, destroys the Christian aims, and even if Gospel agencies are used, it simply perverts them. Hence, for any Christian to attempt to work for social reform in any other yoke-fellowship than that afforded by the true church, is a fearful waste of time and opportunity, and power, if it be not worse than waste.

The believer in the Son of God knows that the only hope of rescuing this lost world, or any man in it, is one and inseparable with that love of God and man combined with that hatred of sin, which the new birth stimulates, and the New Testament church ever puts foremost. This alone of all moral forces can lay hold of the evil spirits of caste and dishonesty, hatred and malice, selfishness and pride, covetousness, drunkenness and lust, and all the legion by which our race is crushed and cursed, and thrust them forever out of human society. Other agencies may do something to hold the great forces of evil in transient check when such agencies can breath an air impregnated by the great Christian truths, and when such agencies are supported by strong indirect influences begotten of a radical Gospel and the leavening power of the true churches of Christ.

But if the mighty combinations of evil in the world are ever overcome; if sin is ever purged from the earth; if men are brought to pure unselfish living; to a blessed equality with all righteous diversity; to a holy and eternal brotherhood of love, it will be by those agencies, and those churches of the living God which ever work upon the broad radical plan of divine spiritual regeneration. Before this great truth, then, let every human idea and system of assumed moral reformation bow down, and let it reign to the complete subordination of pretended substitutes.

Above all let the churches of Christ stand together with solid front and eternal unity upon this question, whatever other men may think or say. Let Christians exalt the high calling of God and Christ more and more. Let every child of God "cry aloud and spare not, lift up the voice like a trumpet" everywhere, and tell men, not that they need a so-called reformation merely, but that to be effectually reformed and forever saved they must be born again, "born from above."

Notes from a Secedee.

It is a first principle in a lodge of Freemasons that political differences are held in abeyance and never allowed to be agitated there. I presume the claim can, in general, be justified. But in cases where all are agreed in the same political views, or, are supposed to be so, the rule is disregarded. "Politics are utterly interdicted in our lodges," is a Masonic axiom. Yet I have seen a lodge in its sitting, while the tyler and all the other officers were on duty, turned into a political caucus. One brother, I remember, proposed that the lodge should purchase all the paper within several miles of the poll, in order that the opposing party, having no paper on which to write votes, might be defeated. To that, it was answered that the "Old Major" would hold the poll open until paper could be procured. Further it was said that enough would be found among the blacksmiths and merchants who would give their unwritten day-books and ledgers, so that the scheme, good if it could be practiced, would fail. The predominant sentiment was that the gun if it was fired would kick harder than it would shoot.

In regard to religion, I never in my acquaintance with Masonry, encountered an assault upon any sort of it. So far as my knowledge goes, a large English Bible was a part of the furniture of every lodge. It was open and a square and compass lay upon it during the spell of its intensest cabalism. Both the Old and the New Testament are there; indeed, in the outdoor display of Masonry, an ostentatious spread of the Bible is made. I do not suppose however, that any doctrines get air within the walls of a lodge that would disquiet a brother who was a Jew or a Turk. What was offensive to me in the religion of the brotherhood was, not the religious quantity, of which there was a sufficiency, but the religious quanty,

God was reverenced above the "Worshipful Master" indeed as very far along in the higher degrees. He was spoken of as the "Great Architect." That appellation is, I know, very extensively applied to God—perhaps it is safe to say it is the prevalent one. In accordance with the notion concerning God which is discoverable in the appellation, is the work which he did in creation. He proceeded upon the Masonic scheme in laying the foundation of the earth.

Solomon has long been a declared Mason, and Job could never have had such conceptions as stand out in the twenty-eighth chapter of his book, if he had not taken the degrees—at least so I have heard Masons say—Christian Statesman.

Western College, Iowa.

This institution is situated in Linn county, with a good country in every direction, and in the quiet village of Western. It is accomplishing a good work for the United Brethren church and for all persons who share its salutary influence. It is thoroughly opposed to all secret combinations, and takes pains to inculcate the uncompromising principles of Christianity. It sent as large if not the largest number of soldiers to defend the Union, in proportion to the number of students in attendance, of any college in the United States; in consequence of which the College was financially crippled. The old debts have been paid, however, but it was done in part by borrowing money to pay them, and hence we are yet suffering from the terrible war through which we have been saved, but at the expense of much blood and treasure.

Now I appeal to all the friends of this church and school who can, to help us. There are many of our brethren who read the Cynosure, and members of other churches and friends who are in sympathy with its mission that will be glad to help build up this reform College. Let me say—without flattery—that no paper in this country has a better class of readers. How natural then does this appeal for help flow out from such confidence! When Prof. C. A. Blanchard's appeal was published in the Cynosure and Telescope for money for Wheaton College, it was bread cast upon the waters, which returned in about ninety days the good fruits of more than $20,000,—my heart rejoiced, and all the friends of reform were glad.

Two of our orators on last Commencement day made telling allusions to the wickedness of secretism as a growing evil. It is not too much to say that nine-tenths of the twelve thousand members of this church in the conferences co-operating with this College are opposed to secret societies. That there should be more enthusiasm and activity of all the opposers of this, the most dangerous of evils in this country, is but too apparent. We have a right to expect more efficient workers in this reform from our anti-secret colleges than from other sources. This warfare of truth against falsehood must go on. There is no release until victory or death. Cowardice and desertion are treason to our country and to Christ, the King of saints. We want soldiers to enter the field with their voices, their pens and their money. Western College represents one of the recruiting and drill stations which needs more strength. It takes money to build Gibraltars. But these we must have. Our enemies are strongly fortified. Truth will conquer, thank God.

Send drafts for large sums, money orders for $50 and under, and registered letters with notes and requests to M. S. Drury, Treasurer, Western College, Iowa.

Reform News.

New England Notes.

Terryville, Conn., Jan. 15, '79.

Dear Bro. Kellogg:—Because southern and south-western Connecticut had extensive commercial relations with the South, it was always pro-slavery and anti reformatory, while the northern and eastern parts of the State are quite the opposite. The political history of the State shows this and in its relation to the anti-secret reform the same is apparent.

January 4th I visited Derby and spent the Sabbath with I. J. Gilbert, a life-long reformer. I was introduced to the pastor of the Congregational church, who, though not a Mason, had no sympathy with those who "break a solemn oath and betray a sacred trust," and was altogether indisposed to aid me. An hour's talk, however, let a little light into his mind and he confessed the subject was deserving of investigation. Another Congregational minister here was a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and begged me not to lecture on the subject. He thought it would greatly injure the cause of religion. He earnestly defended Masonry and thought the Jews who belong to the lodge were greatly benefited morally by their relation to Christian Masons. The pastor of the M. E. church had been a Mason, but had not been in a lodge for twenty-five years. He thought that if I lectured on Masonry I would be in danger of being put into the river. I attended the M. E. church and on Monday evening lectured in a hall to about fifty intelligent men, and hope a good impression was made.

Next day I went to Beacon Falls and visited the place where I was born and the scenes of my childhood. The hills, brooks, and most of the old houses seemed scarcely changed. The lilac that grew by my mother's window fifty years ago, grows there still, though the house is gone. The school-house where I learned to read looks just as it did then. I stopped and talked with the teacher, an intelligent young lady, but found no one whom I had ever known or heard of. The little village (Straitsville) had greatly gone to decay, though the old church had been repaired and looked better than my recollections of it. Sadly sweet were the memories of childhood, and as I hurriedly reviewed the past, I asked myself if I would live over these fifty years since I ran and played here, and my heart said no. I am almost home. I have no desire to go back.

At Watertown I found intelligent sympathy in the pastor of the Congregational church, but could make no arrangements for lectures. At Woodbury a large Masonic temple is erected on a rocky bluff and overshadows the town. There are two Congregational churches, besides Protestant Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal. Rev. Mr. Noyes of the South Congregational church told me that he had taken the Entered Apprentice degree and was disgusted with it, but he could give me no help. I found quite a number of Anti-masons, but they feared the lodge more than the Lord.

At Waterbury Rev. Dr. Anderson, pastor of one of the Congregational churches, said that Masonry and Odd-fellowship were good institutions, and that he could see no objection to a religion of "pure theism," and that Anti-masons had "a morbid conscience." Rev. Dr. Beckwith, of the other church, thought all secret societies wrong, but had no desire to aid our work. He, however, wished me an earnest God speed.

At Terryville and Plymouth both the Congregational pastors expressed their sympathy. At Plymouth I preached by invitation in the forenoon (Jan. 12) and lectured on Africa in the afternoon. This church has been pre-eminently aggressive and reformatory in its character and history. I had a long talk with the widow of a former pastor, Rev. Mr. Hart. Mrs. H. is nearly 89 years old, and retains her mental and physical powers in a remarkable degree. She says they were settled here at the same time that Lyman Beecher was at Litchfield. During her husband's pastorate the Litchfield South Consociation met here and investigated the subject of Freemasonry. Several Masons were sworn and testified to the facts of Freemasonry. The Consociation condemned it, and recommended the church not to admit any more Masons. The church voted to do so, and that vote is still unrepealed. This was about 1831. There are a few Masons now in the church, but they gave me their lecture room last night, when I addressed an attentive congregation. Dea. Dunbar of this church is at 76 an active worker in this reform. I have arranged to lecture twice at Bristol and shall probably come back here.

Another month will probably finish my work in Connecticut, after which I expect to go to Massachusetts. May the Lord bless us, for "except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it."

Yours fraternally,

H. H. Hinman.

From the Secretary and General Agent.

Marion, Ind., Jan. 22, 1879.

A few days in this region has furnished me abundant evidence that previous labors have not been in vain. I have visited Fairview Wesleyan church and Union Chapel and spoken three times at each of these points. At Etna I found a protracted meeting in progress and thought it not best to hold meetings. In Van Buren I failed to meet Bro. Cochran as I had hoped, and not falling in with others interested, failed of appointments. I have been very kindly received by friends who have lost none of their interest in our reform work. I came here this morning and attended Friends meeting at 11 o'clock A. M. and a funeral service in the Tabernacle at 2 P. M. The deceased was one of the many unfortunate victims of strong drink, and the last farewell by the wife and children was sad to witness. He was but thirty-seven years of age and his death should be a warning to many who are traveling the same slippery path. I go this evening to spend the night with Bro. Isaac Elliott two and a half miles in the country, and thence to Jonesboro and Fairmount, where I purpose spending a few days as the Lord shall direct. I hear of the decease of Bro. Thomas Baldwin one of our true friends and work-fellows at Jonesboro, but have not learned particulars. People here as elsewhere feel the pressure of hard times, but have an abundance of the staple products of this fertile land. Bro. Hinman is remembered and inquired after with special interest. Should he return this way no one would meet a warmer reception among the friends. I hope to reach Chicago by February 1st.

J. P. Stoddard.

Michigan State Meeting.

Weston, Mich, Jan. 16, 1879.

Dear Cynosure:—I have just seen Bro. Stoddard's account of the State meeting at Adrian, and his recommendation about the 26th and 27th of February, and say, Let it be done. We are much disappointed at the result, but it was the week of prayer and if it had been carried out many could not have attended who would have desired to do so. I secured the insertion of a notice in the Adrian Times, with the promise of the editor to be present, and also a notice in the Michigan Christian Herald of Detroit, the Baptist paper of the State, besides writing several letters to friends in regard to the meeting. Was in town Tuesday and Thursday, but saw only D. B. Hecker of Ogden, who is a true yoke-fellow in the cause. I hope the suggestions of Bro. Stoddard will be acted upon at once. Have the bills printed at least two weeks before the meeting and sent to reliable friends in various parts of the State with plenty for distribution in Adrian. The matter of finances is a very important one. Let our friends obtain all the help they can in their several locations, and send or carry it up to the treasurer of the convention. No reform that ever blessed the world was carried on without a sacrifice of time and means, and this is no exception to the rule. Yours, etc.,

C. QUICK.

A Good Platform.

OAKLAND CITY, Ind., Jan. 13, 1879.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In order to strengthen and facilitate true reform in southern Indiana, we have organized the American Christian Association of Gibson County. As yet we are independent of the State Association. Thus far we have been blessed with the very best of consequences, and a glorious future seems to be dawning. The object of this Association is fully set forth in Art. II. of the Constitution, which is here given: "Its business and object shall be to expose, withstand and remove secret societies, Freemasonry in particular, and other anti-Christian movements, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved, to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption.

Article I. of the by-laws reads as follows: "The membership of the American Christian Association shall consist of the persons incorporated, together with those whom they shall from time to time elect to increase their number or to fill vacancies. Any person recommended in writing or orally by two members of said Association, who is in sympathy with its objects, and who shall receive a two-thirds vote of the members present, shall be declared elected." "Belonging to a secret society, denying Christ, or immoral conduct shall forfeit membership in this Association."

The third clause in the platform of the American Party, to our minds is the true policy on the temperance question. The officers of the Association are elected for a term of four months, when their successors are chosen. This Association will meet on the first Thursday of each succeeding month, at 2 o'clock P. M., at their principal place of business, for the performance of such duties as may be required at their hands.

As the business and object as well as what it takes to forfeit membership in this Association has been given, it may be ae well to enumerate some of those conditions of mortality which do not forfeit the privilege of membership. The candidate need not be twenty-one years of age. He may be free born, or he may have been born a bondsman; he may be of able body, and "of limbs whole as a man ought to be," or he may be blind, lame, halt, decrepid, in his dotage, with one arm, with a crooked knee; and with whatever other unhappy conditions of body that might befall him, in which case the charities of a Christian people would be extended to him. He should have the desire in him, well cultivated, to pay all just debts and make none that could be avoided. Love truth for the sake of truth. Fall out with no man on account of difference of convictions.

W. L. LEISTER, Cor. Sec.

From Philo Elzea.

Jan. 20, 1879.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—It is now about three weeks since I left home to begin a winter's campaign against secrecy, the foe of our country and of humanity.

I have not accomplished as much as might be desired; but after receiving substantial tokens of friendship on the road, reached Lockport on Saturday evening and put up with Father Preston whose heart and hands are open for the advancement of this cause.

With a note of introduction and recommendation from him, the next morning (Sunday) went to Homer four miles distant, saw some friends, made arrangements, and announced for a lecture on Monday evening, when there was something of a congregation, but on Tuesday evening it fell off considerably and no further effort was made. The church in this place is Congregational and professes to be anti-secret, but the members seem to be afraid to have the subject discussed for fear it will take a political turn and lessen the number of votes of the Republican party, not recognizing the fact that the lodges control the parties and that lodge ties are stronger than party, and that lodge men of whatever party will work together, rather than that dear brethren shall be left to suffer.

I stopped next three and a half miles north of Wilmington and gave one lecture about five miles from that place, then left and reached Norton, Kankakee county, on Friday evening and Saturday saw two of the trustees of the M. E. church who readily gave consent to have lectures in their church two and a half miles from the village. This was in the morning. It was their quarterly meeting day and in the afternoon they added two to their number of trustees, and then went back on what had been agreed to in the morning. But I am told that the two were manly in insisting that their engagement ought not to be interfered with, but were overruled. I am confident that the minister gave his influence against the lectures, though he told me that he was not and never had been a Mason, though he did not tell me that he had never belonged to any secret society. The lecture was changed to the Wesleyan Hall, where four lectures were given to good houses, I think with good effect,—one on the religion of secrecy.

Arrangements were made to give a course of lectures in what is known as the Johnson school-house, but only one is given and I leave to go into Putnam county.

For the war,

P. ELZEA.

Correspondence.

Cheer on the Van Guard.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It is too late to wish you a Happy New Year, but not too late to wish you well. Your weekly visits, fraught always with interesting news to me, are more welcome than those of any other paper I take up. May God who has given you and the cause you represent such victories, continue your life and add to your conquests.

Your boldness in attacking wickedness in high places is criticised by those who would "deal tenderly" with Absalom.

Masonry is the parent of all organized secrecy, and without the pale of all decency, and therefore the language used in opposing it should give no uncertain sound. Every report of each piece of ordnance should dissipate all hope for quarter. What are you fighting? How few of us, even readers of the Cynosure, know, and too few care to know the hugeness of this the greatest enemy the church has. What vast numbers of intelligent men and women who would be ornaments to and workers in the church of Christ, are swallowed up body and soul, bound hand and foot by horrid oaths which they consider more sacred than even their duty to God.

Then the few of them who do unite with the church, it may be for pecuniary motives, or the label necessary to ship their offspring through respectably in a Christian country, so effectually close the lips of the ministry, that the uninformed, hearing all for, and nothing against, are rather prepossessed in its favor, and are astounded if you drop a hint of their "Baal worship" and hellish practices. God bless your publishing house in all its interests, and the brave men who under your auspices go out with their lives in their hands to battle for the Lord and his Anointed against those who plot secretly to break his bonds and cast off his cords!

I know there are those who prefer praying to fighting. I prefer both.

The Amalekites were receiving hard knocks while Moses' hands were held up. Nathan's recital of the "ewe lamb" story set David to judging others, but the "Thou art the man" brought him to his knees. In all of the Israelitish journey from Egypt to Canaan, the people were only once told to "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord," and Moses took the responsibility of that, together with the advice to "hold their peace" and God would do their fighting. What a rebuke to Moses is couched in the "Wherefore criest thou unto me" and doest nothing? "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Every one must do something in this emergency. Go to work yourself and "lift up thy rod and stretch out thy hand over the sea," and when all are engaged in watching and working and praying, the angel and the pillar which were their pilots, became their rear-guard —light to them and darkness to their enemies.

God has never ordained that such systematized iniquity shall be overthrown by prayers only, and much less by that general kind, void of all relation to either disease or specific.

Lately I was told by the editor and publisher of a church organ (which church professedly fellowships no secretist) that he did not approve of this ding-dong Cynosure policy, inasmuch as it would tend to harden good lodge men (save the mark!). There is not a Mason who is intelligent and active in Masonry on the face of the earth that has not metamorphosed himself into a "wolf" by his selfish and ungodly oaths, either knowingly or by inexcusable ignorance, and hence not fit to be amongst "sheep." How can you harden such men? I believe I cannot recall an instance in which the plain home thrusts of law on Gospel principles ever either turned out or kept out any one from the church, to the regret of that apostle who uttered it. The absurdity of mincing any denunciation of Scripture in presence of a man who, while pretending to "present his body as a living sacrifice," has already sold from one to thity-three mortgages on its members to the powers of darkness, is too palpable for argument.

Go on, fearless Cynosure, and great-hearted lecturers; keep slinging your "smooth" stones, chosen from the "brook" of God's Word. What if you are esteemed but "striplings," —when you return with the "Philistine's head" in the one hand, and the dripping sword of divine truth in the other, your prowess must be acknowledged. You are holding on high a stupendous fraud on the world, the church and the souls of men, for the execration of ministers and people, and if you do not reap the full harvest in your day, you shall live in the laudations of them that complete your unfinished work. The congratulations of men are good and useful. They are but the "angels" on the "ladder." The Lord that stands above it is your director. He only can say, "I am thy God and thy fathers' God," and "I will help thee." JOSEPH MCKEE.

Church Fairs and Christmas.

BRODHEAD, Wis., Jan. 14, 1879.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I peruse your columns with deep interest, not only for the firm, pronounced objections to secret societies, but for the plain, outspoken utterance against church festivals and theatrical performances and the very many foolish and wicked appointments tolerated and encouraged by the churches of our Lord and Sav-icur Jesus Christ. Reading a communication from Joseph McKee with the heading, "Church Fairs in Allegheny City, Pennsylvania," in the Cynosure of Jan. 9th, I made up my mind to do what a score of times before I had been inclined to do, but for want of ability I felt constrained to desist—to put on record on the pages of the Cynosure my disapprobation of these things. I have often expressed my views of these things in the church where I hold a standing and among mine acquaintance.

The writer alluded to above says: "You could hardly attend service in any one of the six churches in Allegheny and not hear a dissertation on their low and ebbing spirituality by the ministers who are first and last in promoting these ridiculous side shows." And the land over we hear the doleful lament. "O how low the vital and spiritual life of the members of our church. What can we do to elevate spiritual piety among our membership, especially the young?"

One thing can be done; we can cease from doing these foolish things. "Put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; learn to do well."—Isa. 1: 16, 17. Cease to patronize these ridiculous and absurd doings. This would remove one of the obstacles to a higher tone of spiritual life in our churches.

"Even Christmas," says J. McK., "a popish ordinance usurping the time of the regular weekly prayer meeting, to Christians almost sacred [to the spiritual quite] for the purpose of catering to the flesh." Not only popish, but it dates back to heathenism, and this day is seized upon to exhibit the Christmas tree, the fish pond, Jacob's ladder, the ship, etc., etc. But I forbear. I am soul-sick and must withdraw from the scene. And pray, O Lord, for Zion's sake, turn the captivity of thy people. O Lord save from utter desolation.

The brother above named says in conclusion: "Among my brethren I stand almost alone in this matter, and perhaps am in darkness." It is well for us to examine faithfully our position and have our minds open to conviction. I feel at times that I am almost alone in these matters. But I call to mind the prophet Elijah under very peculiar circumstances, when he said, "and I am left alone." "I have reserved to myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal," was the answer of God to him. "Even so at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace."—Rom. 11: 3, 4, 5. Thus saith the Lord, and may it fill our hearts with peace and encouragement! "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal. The Lord knoweth them that are his. And let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity."—II. Tim. 2: 19.

AIR—See Musical Fountain, page 34.

Come and join us in our pleasures,
We are seeking purest joy;
In pursuit of richest treasures
We our moments here employ.
Come and join us in our labors,
We are working for the right;
Come and join us, friends and neighbors,
In the temp'rance cause unite.

Guided by the voice of duty,
To the poor and outcast go;
And let manhood, youth and beauty,
Join to banish want and woe.
Come and join us, etc.

Joy of doing good is ours,
Joy of saving souls from woe;
Joy of planting fruits and flowers,
Where the thorns of evil grow.
Come and join us, etc.

PRAYER.

Chaplain. Now may kind Heaven smile upon us once more. Father of all Mercies! God of all Grace! Thou who didst say that "inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me," fill us now, and so long as we shall live, with such a measure of Divine Love that we may cheerfully do thy will, especially unto those who have been robbed by intemperance of everything dear to the human heart. And may it be the mission of those who now stand so strong in faith and hope to-night, to go forth from this sacred altar to comfort the afflicted, lift up the bowed down, carry sunshine among those who sit in darkness, and scatter the rich blessings of overflowing souls everywhere among those so sadly cursed by the foe of all mankind. Fill our hearts and souls with this overflowing charity, for the sake of him who taught us, by his example, to love even our enemies; and may our lives, like his, ever praise thee. Amen.

Degree Templar. Brothers and sisters, we kindly greet you at this altar; and we believe that when the ceremonies of this degree are ended you will say, "it is good for us to be here."

In this degree we teach our duty unto others. However strong may be our resolves to abstain forever from the use of all that can intoxicate, we still are in danger of falling, if we forget the welfare of those around us. You have been useful members of subordinate lodge; you have been true Templars of Fidelity, true to yourselves; will you now pledge us your aid that you will be true to HUMANITY, and will work for the redemption of all men from the curse of intemperance? [Candidates answer.]

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.) You will place your right hand upon your hearts, and assent to this our solemn

OBLIGATION.

You having already taken our obligation, do solemnly promise to keep the same inviolate, and never to reveal the words, signs, grip, signals, or other private work of this degree to any one, except in a lawful manner. And you promise to do all you can to carry out in life and work the charity we here inculcate, and further promise to protect and defend each and every member, so long as you shall live.

Degree Templar (one rap, all but officers seated.)

Chaplain. God help you to glorify him, by raising up fallen humanity.

Vice Templar. Angels will rejoice, as you fulfill your noble mission of saving souls.

Past Degree Templar. Desolate homes shall bless you, and desolate hearts be made glad, as you redeem the lost.

Degree Templar. And in saving others you save yourselves.

[While the ode is being sung, the officers retire to their respective stations, and the Marshal advances with the candidates to the chair of the Degree Templar.]

V. ODE.

AIR—"Greenville."

Onward, still to duty pressing,
Now we find a sweeter tie,
Blessed bond of charity—
It with rarest gems may vie.

Every virtue round this clusters,
But amid them all it shines,
Peerless, as a lustrous jewel,
Set midst rubies from the mines.

Degree Templar. My brothers and sisters: From the Temple of Fidelity you come to us to learn more of duty. Nobler you come, having kept your vows, for self-conquest is the noblest victory achieved on earth. "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city." But remember one more truth—and let it sink into your hearts and influence you while you live—SELFISHNESS ALWAYS DEFEATS ITSELF! There is no escape. We cannot live to ourselves; we are destined to influence others for weal or woe. The human family is one common brotherhood. Each member of that family has an interest equal to your own. The humblest man is your brother. The most degraded woman is your sister. By so much as they have fallen, by so much are you injured. As you elevate them, you elevate yourself and those near and dear to you. You suffer, I suffer, society suffers, by the loss of its most insignificant member; while all are benefited by the reformation of the most despised among us. We are so interwoven into the fabric of society, that not one fibre can be influenced for good or evil, without such influence extending to all in contact. To melt the stony heart; to build anew the fires upon the heart's almost ruined altar; to teach duty and the way to discharge that duty; to re-vivify the soul, and nerve the arm to deeds of benevolence; to educate our members in the principles and practice of a Christ-like charity, is the object of this degree and its teachings. To render the subordinate lodge efficient in rescuing and saving every unfortunate victim of the cup, is our noble mission.

The Marshal will now introduce you to the Chaplain.

Marshal. By direction of our Degree Templar, I present these friends for instruction.

Chaplain. "God hath made of one blood all nations that dwell together upon the face of the earth." The same heart, the same feeling soul, in its essential attributes, is the gift of Heaven to each human being. Love of life, of home, of friends, of children, of country, of the same Supreme, characterizes all.

To all, the voice of Divine wisdom is "YE ARE MY PEOPLE" saith the Lord. To educate the ignorant, refine the gross, make virtuous the depraved, is the duty of the patriot and the Christian. Heaven's displeasure rests upon neglect of duty, and chastening always follows.

The Divine Word teaches us a positive duty toward every member of the human family. "Who is my neighbor?" asks Holy Writ. "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain priest that way, and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side! And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side! But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was, and when he saw him, he had compassion on him, and went to him, and bound up his wounds, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence and gave them to the host, and said to him, take care of him, and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee."

Which, now, of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbor to him that fell among thieves?

Vice Templar. He that showed mercy on him.

Past Degree Templar. He that showed mercy on him.

Degree Templar. He that showed mercy on him.

Chaplain. The Divine injunction is, "Go thou and do likewise!" Paul, the great apostle, says, "Who is weak, and I am not weak?" "By the grace of God, I am what I am!" It is this sinking of self, this self-abnegation, and this recognition of equal worth in a weak or fallen brother, that Heaven so richly rewards. Christ looked with compassion even upon a Magdalene, and looked her sins away! You and I have a mission to perform in this temperance field. Wrecks of humanity lie scattered all around us. It is the mission of this order to save such. All classes call upon you for aid; each victim, high or low, rich or poor, has a claim upon you.

By the love you bear yourself, by the love you profess for your Saviour, by love of home, kindred, country and humanity, I charge you not to forget your brother with whom you walk side by side to a common destiny.

Degree Templar. Marshal, you will now conduct the candidates to the altar. Please sing the ode, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Degree Templar (three raps, all rise.)

VI. ODE.

AIR—"Balerma."

Am I my brother's keeper? Yes.
Bound by the social ties
Which link us to our fellow man—
Can we his soul despise?

Then turn, oh! turn a brother's lips
From drink's destructive snare;
Allure his steps t'ward heavenly rest—
God's smile will greet you there.

Degree Templar (one rap, all but officers seated.) [The Vice Templar will advance and meet the candidates at the altar.]

Vice Templar. My sister! My brother! May kind Heaven give you of its richest stores, as you come and go on your errands of mercy. Welcome as workers in our Temple of Charity. [Gives the hand of welcome.]

Need I say more to kindle in your hearts "that charity which suffereth long and is kind; which is not easily provoked; which is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly—which thinketh no evil?"

You have heard, from other lips, the general lessons of this degree. We now wish to come home to practical charity. If your relations to the outer world, to even the outcast, are so near, so binding, how much more sacred the relation in this family circle, in this band of brothers and sisters? Bound by fraternal and social ties, banded together for the moral elevation of all who come within these sacred walls, it is our duty to cherish each other, give the word of encouragement, of gentle chiding, of friendly rebuke and fraternal counsel, and thus live up to, and live out the solemn obligation to which we gave our sacred word.

Wealth may be lost and gained. Misfortunes may come upon us, but ere long the skies are bright once more. Death comes and takes the dearest household-pet, and time kindly heals the bleeding heart. But honor, reputation, character, in value weighing down the wealth of ten thousand worlds, the priceless jewel of earth, when once tarnished, what in the whole world can restore its former purity?

And does it require some mad, rash act to do this? Nay! A careless word, a hint, or a whisper from the perjured lips of the vile! Against such a word, such a thought even, we warn you. Each brother here is a brother for you to sustain, respect and defend. Each sister is your sister. As you loved your mother, protect, cherish, venerate her reputation in your sister. Let the good name of each be your good name, and sooner fall yourself than allow another's name to be tarnished by the tongue of the thoughtless, or the lips of those who speak guile.

We meet here to learn duty; to receive encouragement from others; to do good to each member of our family circle; to add to the happiness of those who gather around our altars. We go from here to work, and as we become strong here, we work efficiently there—hence our meetings should always be harmonious, social: a true family re-union, wherein not a single member is slighted; not one is wronged; not one even suspected. What weakens human endeavor so much as discord or lack of confidence in us at home? What makes us all so happy as children, so encouraged and stimulated as youth, so strong for usefulness as men and women, as the love of all at the home altars? Then remember kindly these words of admonition, and be true to your vows, and to each member of this fraternal band.

We need this strength, my brothers and sisters, for vast is the work before us. We plead for your soul's best efforts to save the wife's heart from its bursting agony at the loss of the once kind, noble man, to whom she promised the wealth of her young heart's love. He is a fallen brother to-day—that once noble man! He never spoke an unkind word to that devoted wife, when sober. No man loved his children better than that kind-hearted father, when not under the influence of the demon of drink—now they hide at the mention of his name. Flowers once bloomed around his cottage-home; the library, the pleasant parlor, the family altar, the happy circle around the cheerful hearthstone—alas, they live only in bitter memories now.

Such is the fate of thousands and tens of thousands in our otherwise happy land to-night. Desolate homes! Aching hearts! Blasted hopes! Ruined reputation! Dying wives! Heart-broken mothers! Starving children! Weeping friends! Such is the record, outside these walls. What a contrast to the peace we here enjoy! Let this calm moment be but the precursor of active work to seek and to save as you go hence. Remember the lessons you have taken, the instructions you have received, and seek out and save your brother, your dying sister, the father, the mother, and the worse than orphaned children cast out upon the angry sea of life from the family wreck. Remember well what you have heard; study well our plans as they shall be revealed to you; and never forget that you have a mission none on earth but you can fill!

I plead for the little waifs of the street, dying in heart for a mother's love; I plead for the boys and girls, homeless and friendless, whose father might be saved; I plead for the old mother whose only son is not now the staff upon which she fondly hoped to lean in her declining years; I plead for the wife, who still hopes at times that the dreams of her girlhood may yet be realized; that that broken family circle may be re-united, that broken altar rebuilt, that man reclaimed! We beg you, in Heaven's name, to work with us to save and redeem him! A crown is just above thy brow; reach out, and down if need be, and save thy ruined brother, and the angels will crown thee with a wreath of immortal bloom!

Degree Templar. Marshall, you will now conduct our friends to the Past Degree Templar. Please sing the ode—"Meek and Lowly."

Degree Templar. (Three raps, all rise.)

VII. ODE.

AIR.—"Charity." (A set piece.)

Meek and lowly, pure and holy,
Chief among the blessed three,
Turning sadness into gladness,
Heaven-born art thou, Charity!
Pity dwelleth in thy bosom,
Kindness reigneth o'er thy heart,
Gentle thoughts alone can sway thee,
Judgment hath in thee no part.

CHORUS.—Meek and lowly, pure and holy,
Chief among the blessed three,
Turning sadness into gladness,
Heaven-born art thou, Charity.

OUR MAIL.

Wm. Hargrave, Independence, Kan., writes:

"This place is overrun with the lodge to a very great degree. You can scarcely meet a man who does not belong to some one of these dark orders, and many boast of belonging to all of them."

J. S. Yaukey, Fayetteville, Pa., writes:

"My prayer is that God's Spirit may strive mightily with the hearts and minds of the people, so that they may see clearly their duty in reference to secret societies, and be prompted to action."

John J. Swain, Viroqua, Wis., writes:

"I have only three or four copies of the Cynosure on hand, the balance being distributed; some going one way, some another. The Cynosure is read in our postoffice by some of the Masons. I think the effect is good, as they don't seem to be as much interested in the lodge meetings as they used to be. Mr. Hinman's lectures here I think have done an immense amount of good. I wish that we could have another lecture here. Some of the Masons have tried to frighten me by sending me written threats on valentines, etc., but I am here yet."

N. Bourne, Cedar Rapids, Ia., writes:

"From all I can learn Bernard's Light on Masonry is the best official authority extant."

John Compher, Smyrna, O., writes:

"I have no fear of defeat, I believe the cause we advocate will ultimately triumph for I believe Jesus, the King of glory, is at the head of it, and will lead us to victory. I have an Odd-fellow minister almost or quite converted. I gave him Sarver's sermon to read, and Rev. J. W. Bain's little book, and some others, and I think the victory is about won with him. If we could only get them to read and hear, I believe hundreds would leave, and thousands would stand aloof from the lodges."

T. L. Moore, Milneraville, O., writes:

"I take a great interest in the Cynosure and the cause it supports. I have worked in this since 1826. I am now nearly eighty years of age. I have had time and opportunity of knowing the danger of secret organizations. M. A., who sends fifty cents for circulating tracts, is between eighty and ninety years of age. She is an earnest and fast friend of the cause. I know she has done much to further it. She can do much, for she is an earnest, sincere Christian. Such a one has power with God, like Jacob of old, and will prevail. * * I worked through the discussion of Masonry from 1826 to 1833, when Joseph Ritner was elected Governor of Pennsylvania. I saw the lodges sold and rented as the best that could be done with them. I took the first Anti-masonic paper published in Ohio. I wore the harness till I saw Liberty triumph in part, for there is yet work to do. I uphold all true reforms. I hate shams. I love the Anti-masonic cause, because it is a reform much needed."

John Milner, of Greenfield, O., writes:

"I had a talk with an M. E. preacher the other day, and he told me that he was a high Mason, and that it was all taken from the Bible. Where the Bible was not known Masonry was not known. I never heard two Masons tell the same story about the craft. What do the two letters "A. L." mean on the Masonic temple?"

They are the initials of the Latin words, "Anno Lucis," meaning the year of light, that is the creation of the world, from which Masonry begins to date.

P. N. Clapsaddle, Ilion, Herkimer Co., N. Y., writes:

"Some who have read the paper would like to take it * * but dare not exercise their right for fear of the lodge."

Rev. R. J. Thompson, El Paso, Sedgwick Co., Kan., sends the subscription of Wm. Swaney, and writes:

"Less than one year ago Bro. Swaney renounced the Masonic lodge, and by a profession of religion connected himself with the United Presbyterian church. O that the ears of all true Christians within the lodge were opened, that they might see that it is impossible for them to practice the rites of paganism in the lodge on week nights, and then acceptably practice Christianity and worship God on the Sabbath. Paganism and Christianity are antagonistic. They cannot be mixed any more than water and oil. We must love God supremely and worship him only. Otherwise our services will not be acceptable to God nor profitable to us."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JAN. 30, 1879.

THE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN has a very sensible article on those women-suffragists who have lately visited President and Mrs. Hayes to plead against the anti-polygamy law of 1862, without saying a word against polygamy itself. Such women stand related to polygamy and concubinage as jack-masons do to the lodge; with this difference, that they are women. It is a matter of great patience to hear ministers and members of churches criticise and oppose those of us who are seeking the overthrow of the lodge; but who are careful to say not one word for or against it which would please or displease an Anti-mason or a Mason. There is a depth of meanness in the moral status of such a person, which makes them disgusting to the Infinite God, as "neither cold nor hot." But a WOMAN neutral on polygamy, is an object of loathing to men and angels as well.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.—We have just received an exceedingly able letter from A. M. Milligan, D.D. of Pittsburgh, Pa., answering questions proposed to him and others on the relation and bearing of the Supreme Court's decision in the polygamy case. We shall insert and try to answer his letter next week. Yet I tremble some at the thought of attempting an answer, in the face of all history that the nearer conscientious men are together when they start into controversy the farther they are apart when they quit. The discussion however will do good by calling attention to a grave practical matter on which the destiny of our country largely rests. Of one thing Bro. Milligan may rest assured, I have thought too long and spoken too much on the "Religious Amendment" to go back on those who are striving for it, among whom I count myself.

THE MASONIC PRESS — COLORS HALF-MAST.—Albert G. Mackey, M. D., whose name has for years appeared as editor of the Voice of Masonry, Chicago, disappears, leaving his associate, John W. Brown, sole "editor and proprietor" of the Voice. The July number of this large and well-printed monthly, 1875, says that it has absorbed into itself the following Masonic publications: The National Freemason, Washington, D. C.; the Freemason, St. Louis, Mo.; the Evergreen, of Iowa; the Masonic Mirror, of California; the Masonic Mirror, of Texas; the Masonic Trowel, of Illinois, and the Masonic Tablet of Mississippi. Since then one or two other Masonic papers have given up the ghost, or rather their ghosts have taken refuge in the Voice of Masonry. And now, January, 1879, A. G. Mackey, whose prolific pen used to fill half its pages, more or less, glides quietly out of the editorship without saying "good-bye." Let no one suppose this means the speedy death of the lodge. Neither literal nor spiritual brothels exist by arguments and types; but by lures addressed to lust; and all error is shifting as the sand.

INCIPIENT DIVORCES. — Twenty-five wives sent up petitions to the noon prayer-meeting in Farwell Hall one day last week for unconverted husbands. Of course there is no means of knowing, but probably every one of these men belonged to the lodge. A few years since I was in a mission meeting to take measures to form a new Congregational church in Chicago. A committee reported on the ground forty-five women ready to join the church and not a husband of them all, ready to join with his wife. The pastor of the church whose mission this was, is a weak and voluble good man, who knows and sees the evil and ruin thus working among his people, but is like those good kings of Israel who "did right in the sight of the Lord," nevertheless the high places were not taken away, "the people still burnt incense in the high places." O for a good Josiah for a single year!

MASONIC HOLINESS.

We notice in the American Wesleyan and also in the Free Methodist that Messrs. Inskip and Macdonald of the National Holiness Association, have formerly been Masons and have taken many degrees. By their published statements it appears that they have retired from the lodge but say nothing to condemn it, or warn ignorant young men against it.

There are these objections to such a course:

1. By the maxim "once a Mason always a Mason," which is as much a part of Masonry as the oath of any degree, those brethren are Masons till they renounce.

2. By refusing to reveal the ritual they show that they feel bound by their Masonic oaths, and so are Masons, for the oath makes the Mason.

3. If the reason for their leaving the lodge was good for them, it is good for others, and not speaking against the lodge they "keep back what is profitable," shun to declare all the counsel of God, and so are living in sin.

4. By saying in their paper that they wish "bad men in the lodge may become better," they imply that they can be good enough Christians without leaving the lodge. And this is a complete defense and justification of Masonry.

It is fearful to see what havoc the lodge has made in the moral nature of these men; that they can swear to conceal crimes, swear oath upon oath, keep those oaths and at the same time profess holiness!

THE NEW EVANGELIST.

I have to-day (Jan. 22d) attended at Farwell Hall and heard for the first time, the new evangelist, Rev. G. F. Pentecost. He resembles Mr. Moody in his physique, except that he is a little below him in stature. He attends and leads the noonday prayer meeting in Farwell Hall, and labors with and at the call of three churches on the West Side (Chicago.) The meeting to-day was marred, a little, by two good old gentlemen, who loved to talk better than others loved to hear them, and weakened the impression of what the evangelist said. But what he said was good, and it is to be hoped a general attention to religion will result from his coming. The singing of Mr. Stebbins is rather better than Mr. Sankey's, but not so pious, quite.

Our readers will remember that Mr. Pentecost, in Hartford, Conn., a year ago, said that he had been a Mason but thanked God he had left the lodge. After that, in Providence, R. I., he was reported to have toned down his testimony against the lodge, observing that he was a Mason, on the principle "once a Mason always a Mason," but he gave some general advice against the lodge on the score of time, etc., etc.

If this writing should reach the eyes of Mr. Pentecost, or any of his advisers, I beseech them, as Paul did, to "suffer the word of exhortation." A man conscious of murder would be rejoiced to find himself only indicted for horse-stealing. Freemasonry is worse than wasting time. It is a mass of falsehood, swindling, blasphemy and idolatry. It shows, by its prevalence and power, that its nature is exactly the same with those secret rites of which Moses said (Deut. 14: 6-8, 9):

"If thy brother, the son of thy mother; or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly * * * thou shalt not consent unto him * * * neither shalt thou spare; neither shalt thou conceal him. But thou shalt surely kill him. Thine hand shalt be first upon him to put him to death; and afterward the hand of all the people. Thou shalt stone him with stones that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the Lord thy God."

The crime thus fearfully punished was none other than that practiced in lodges at the present day, viz, ceremonies without Christ.

Now the Rev. Mr. Pentecost has practiced these rites of false worship, which leave in the soul a taint of corruption, a mesmerism of Satan, which nothing will wash out but repentance, including confession, and the blood of Christ. We are never cleansed till we confess. "But if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us." And confession is a serious business, not lightly done. I have dealt with five men who quit the lodge and joined the church. In my fear of going too far, I only insisted that they quit the lodge, but did not insist on their testifying against it. They have all suffered loss, and stumbled, and one or two have gone back.

The practical, prudential question is, 'Shall an evangelist or other public man, by coming out against the lodge before a sinful, ill-informed multitude, drive them beyond his reach and power to do them good?' Such questions must be decided by each one for himself, alone with God. And no man must "JUDGE" his brother in such cases, but only advise him as best he can.

In the present case, the multitude have more or less light. When Mr. Pentecost said in his remarks that "Baal worship was practiced to-day as of old," many persons in the hall, who have never acted with us, supposed he meant the lodge. If he did mean the lodge, and did not say so, he plainly felt that "fear of man that bringeth a snare." Christ never gave hints while dealing with souls. He made himself definitely understood. Heaven and sin and damnation are serious, practical, eternal realities; and the least flinching to make himself understood, if perceived by the hearers, will harden their hearts and grieve the Holy Ghost.

Meantime we hope every reader of the Cynosure will, on reading this article, offer up prayer to God for Chicago and the young and interesting evangelist now here. If any man on earth needs to be surrounded with invisible "horses of fire and chariots of fire," it is this evangelist. Let all attend his meetings and "pray without ceasing." Christ is near us.

ALMOST CONVERTED.

The Voice of Masonry, now the chief printed exponent of the lodge in the United States, with the silent vanishment of A. G. Mackey from its staff and columns, has taken a new departure and seems almost ready to "experience religion." Take the following specimens from the elegant January number just out:

On page 1st, article "Our Anchorage," the writer, Cornelius Moore, says he has taken between forty and fifty degrees and, "In all these different Masonic bodies and organizations, as well as in each particular degree and grade, I have found the Holy Scriptures to be the great light of Masonry." And that there may be no doubt what he means by Holy Scriptures, he says: "More than forty years ago, when I presented myself at the door of a lodge * * I was met by a member sent from within with a copy of the Holy Scriptures in his hand. Presenting it to me he asked in what light I regarded that book. I said, 'It is the Bible, is of divine authority,'" etc., etc.

On the next page, same article, Mr. Moore says:

"Now suppose we omit 'Holy Bible' and insert 'Koran' [in the definition] will the Grand Lodge of Illinois or the Grand Lodge of any other State admit it to be a legal lodge? * * Who would give anything for Masonry, with its unusual claims and high pretenses, if that book were omitted or another substituted for it?"

"But I am met with the assertion that such a doctrine destroys the universality of Masonry. So be it! The pretended universality of Masonry, in the sense claimed for it by some modern learned brothers, I regard, and have always regarded, as utter nonsense."

Three or four other articles in this same number teach the same doctrine. See on page 71, Grand Orator Wallace, Colorado, gives a summary of Masonic teachings thus:

"2d. A well grounded faith in the divinity of the Holy Scriptures. 3d. A settled conviction of a future state and final retribution, according to human action in this life. 4th. An avowed acknowledgement of the theological truth that the moral code enunciated from the brow of Sinai, is the rule by which all human deportment is, and shall be tested."

What then is to hinder these high Masons, and those who believe their teachings, from going around and holding revival meetings to save men from "final retribution" in hell; and from the fearful penalty of God's violated law? Instead of such revival meetings we have here in Chicago (Inter-ocean, Jan. 22d), "the fourth of the series of Soirees Dausante," given by the Masons,—women dancing with strange men, from 11 o'clock at night onward. But to show the crazy contradictions and falsehood of these sanctimonious lodge pretensions, which, if true, would reduce the lodge to the "bigotry" of another Christian sect, take from Chase's Digest of Masonic Law (12th edition) the real law and doctrine of the lodge respecting the Bible:

"To require that a candidate profess belief in the "divine authenticity of the Scriptures," or a "state of future rewards and punishments," is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry."—Chase's Dig. p. 206.

In 1856 the Grand Lodge of Ohio passed a resolution requiring of candidates "a belief in the divine authority of the Holy Scriptures." This action of the Ohio lodge was generally condemned or dissented from by other Grand Lodges in this country and in France. The language of one Grand Lodge is as follows:

"Your committee believe the Ohio Resolution all wrong. The Jews, Chinese and Turks, each reject either the New Testament, or the Old, or both; and yet we see no good reason why they should not be made Masons. In fact Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else."—Sayre, and G. L. Ala. 1855; Chase p. 208.

Thus these writers in the Voice contradict in terms the fundamental law of the order given by Chase, and also the known genius of the system, by saying that Masonry requires belief in the "Bible" and future "retribution." The only explanation of this conduct is that they are pressed by the reform and are resorting to falsehood and hypocrisy to save the lodge from going down, as it soon must when Christians leave it. Let us hail these tokens with thanksgiving. But let us remember that the god of the lodge is a Proteus and that "The serpent takes a thousand forms

To cheat our souls to death."

We must go through with Christ, receive him into our hearts, and run the whole race of life "looking unto Jesus."

A Bugle-note from the Sunset State.

I give below two extracts from a California letter. The writer once traveled and preached in the prairies around where Wheaton now stands.

The first extract contains sound, practical business sense and shows the qualities which under God and with his blessing, have enabled the writer to rear a family of ten children, and after wearing out years with little or no pay, finds himself with a fair property in real estate, and with a young heart in his bosom at sixty-four years of age.

"I think," he writes, "that money spent now for lectures will not pay so well as it would to pay Bro. Campion or some other suitable man to get subscribers for the Cynosure and for scattering tracts and selling books, and occasionally putting in a lecture with a view to getting subscribers.

"I believe the Cynosure is the cheapest and most potent power in the field, and it works so quietly and so constantly, that it puzzles the enemy to combat it; and next to that I have great faith in Ronayne's new book, I think that a plenty of them in community, will kindle internal fires which will weaken the enemy's ranks and hunt out supporters of lecturers and more rapid modes of working."

The extract below reminds one of the speeches of the Covenanting Presbyterians from the scaffold; or when kneeling to be shot by Claverhouse and his men. Victory, glory, exultation and triumph blend in the strain which closes the letter.

"O where was Roderick then?
One blast upon his bugle-horn,
Were worth a thousand men."

I would God that every minister of Christ who feels the weight of the lodge-curse, but "don't know what to do," might hear it and heed these words:

"And I live with the hope that, when released from my post, I will be allowed to meet for awhile at least, in convention with the workers for God in these and other ages, and I expect to see Jesus there, to cap the climax of reformers; and then I will cheerfully take another mission if required. Bro. Blanchard you doubtless feel depressed at times by the forces of the enemy; but we are happy men. We could not afford to swap possessions with any of them.

"I close as ever yours for Christ and truth. L. B. Lathrop.

—Elder Rathbun begins work in Elgin, Iowa, this week. He will not go to Indiana at present.

—Past Master Ronayne returned last Friday from Angola, Ind., where he gave an exposition of the three degrees last week. The meetings were a grand success. We are under the necessity of taxing the patience of our friends until next week, and ask them to wait until then for the report. Bro. Ronayne has also some practical suggestions of great importance. His new work is still in the printer's hands but is being hastened, There is yet room for subscribers. There should be a thousand on the list before it is published.

—Several inquiries have reached us respecting cancer remedies. "Wild tea" has been recommended in our health department, but we are unacquainted with the plant and it does not seem to be mentioned in the best botanies. So we are unable to describe it. Every body, however, is acquainted with the common red clover. The blossoms of this plant, dried and steeped, produce a tea that must be regarded as a certain cure if used daily with proper restriction of diet. Mr. Dwight Needham of 64 Lake street, Chicago, near this office, himself cured of cancer, will send a circular for a stamp showing how any sufferer from this dreaded disease may cure themselves without the aid of a physician by the use of clover. From long acquaintance we can endorse Mr. Needham's representations.

—We reprint from the official printed report the essay of Rev. A. R. Medbury, read before the late Baptist Union of Wisconsin. Bro. Harris of Delavan, it will be remembered, at the time highly commended the sentiments of the paper, as did also Bro. W. W. Ames in his address before the Illinois State Convention. It was therefore a surprise to read what purported to be Mr. Medbury's paper in the Standard a few weeks ago, which, while much longer than the present article, contained sentiments both fallacious and unjust. Bro. Quick of Michigan has sharply but candidly reviewed it in our columns, and yet another review is waiting till next week. All who read the Standard will recognize in the document we print an altogether different presentation of the case. Having confidence in the integrity of the editors, we are compelled to believe that they have been imposed upon in this matter, and that the hand of the lodge has been at work to suppress the truth.

Love Lightens Labors.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn,
And thought, with a nervous dread,
Of the piles of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed,
There were meals to get for the men in the field,
And the children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned,
And all to be done that day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was wet as wet could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A lot of cake for tea.
The day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily, as she said:
"If maidens knew what good wives know,
They would be in no haste to wed!"

"Jennie, what do you think I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eyes fell bashfully fell.
"It was this," he said and coming near,
He smiled, and stooping down,
Kissed her cheek—"'twas this: that you were the best
And the dearest wife in town."

The farmer went back to the field, and the wife,
In a smiling and absent way,
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day.
The pain in her head was gone, and the clothes
Were as white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light and her butter was sweet
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think!" the children all cried in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't I know, if he only had
As happy a home as we."
The night came down, and the good wife smiled
To herself as she softly said:
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
It's not strange that maids will wed."

William De Farel.

[From the Christian Statesman.]

This old man was a doctor of Picardy, whose name was Lefevre. Monsieur Lefevre, to much learning and piety, added a slight knowledge of the reformed doctrines, a faint glimmering of light through the darkness, with which he was contented. Not so his pupil. The young mind he had so powerfully impressed, followed, at first painfully and timidly, his flagging steps, but whenever the full glory of the light shone upon him, he flung from him at once the leading strings which were destined to trammel forever the steps of the preceptor. Lefevre never was a reformer. Farel was. The master truly believed, and was no doubt truly saved, but if he saw with the eyes of his spiritual vision the road out of Rome's mazy labyrinth, his foot never followed it. He was too old for so great a change; but with his young and ardent disciple it was far otherwise; yet even for him the struggle was not an easy one—to cut one's self loose from family and kindred, and the good opinion of one's fellow men, is not done in a moment—and it was only after much anguish, after months of painful weighing of new convictions and old prejudices, that Farel chose his part.

"God gives salvation freely to all men," said Lefevre, and Farel listened, and in time believed, but shreds of his old faith clung about him long. The intercession of the saints especially was a dogma to which, for a time, he adhered with much tenacity. "The cross of Christ alone opens the gate of heaven, and shuts the door of hell," said the old doctor; but, although his words were not without their due effect, his pupil could not at once relinquish the myths that had filled up with a multitude of living shapes the long bright days of childhood and youth. The combat was long and severe, but truth conquered at last, and he ceased to think of the holy dead, or of the mother of our Lord as intercessors with an offended heaven, regarding them henceforth only with that reverence which is a fitting tribute paid to the memory of the great and good.

Having freed himself from this last remaining fetter of superstition, he turned himself, as Luther was wont to turn himself in moments of darkness, to the Bible, which he studied diligently both in Greek and Latin.

It has been common to call Farel the Luther of France, but a patient analysis of the characters of both men serves rather to point the contrasts, than to show the accidental resemblances between them. Both were undoubtedly, and in a pre-eminent degree, men of action, but that was almost the only marked characteristic which they had in common. Luther had an eminently constructive mind; he could reorganize and build up what his hands had pulled down, while Farel sought instinctively only to destroy, leaving to others the task of repairing the fabric he had taken to pieces. Both came through much mental tribulation to the kingdom of God, but conviction came sooner to the quick French temperament of the Dauphinese noble; and the impress of this natural ardor was visible in all his work. Like his great Saxon fellow-laborer, he was a champion ever ready for the fray,—a man of attack and battle,—a pioneer to whose strong hand every weapon was welcome that could hew him a path to men's hearts; but there the resemblance between the two reformers ceased. Farel, in many things,—in moderation, and genius, and kindly human feeling, in the wisdom of the serpent and the gentleness of the dove, alike,—came behind Luther.

At first he remained in France, teaching as a professor in the renowned college of Cardinal Lanome, under the protection of the Queen of Navarre, the only sister of the king, Francis I. This princess, like the ill fated sisters of the young Emperor of Germany, was a true and fervent adherent of the reformed faith. No more striking illustration of God's almighty power can be adduced than the fact that his ministers, even from the earliest centuries of the Christian era, have had converts in the most unlikely situations. Paul had disciples in Nero's household. The German reformers, even under the ban of the empire, won souls for Christ under the very shadow of the imperial purple; and the good tidings of the Gospel, penetrating through jest and epigram, reached, in her brother's brilliant court, the beautiful, talented Margaret.

Through dangers, through difficulties, in defiance alike of threats and blandishments, she preserved her faith intact, and God preserved to her her influence with the people and her place in her brother's heart.

Fickle, capricious, shifting as the wind-swept sea-sand, Francis was steady and unchanging in the constant affection he manifested towards this gifted sister; and his love and indulgence gave her power to protect, even in his very court, the adherents of a faith to which, personally, he was bitterly hostile. A day came, however, when her power did not decline, but was temporarily paralysed; her husband was killed in battle, and the grief of her early widowhood drove her from Paris and the court to a sequestered chateau which had been a gift to her from her brother. Her absence was the signal for the Popish party at once to assume the offensive; their opportunity, they were aware, might not be long, and they were resolved to make the most of it: a short but fierce persecution was begun, the murderous fires of death were kindled, and the headsman's axe was busy. Then, in common with a vast crowd of emigrants, Farel quitted for ever a country in which a sudden and violent death threatened to quench his labors in blood.

Basle, which had been a hold of Adullam to so many noble malcontents of the age, opened her gates also to him. He was learned and of noble birth, and Erasmus evinced some faint signs of interest in his arrival, but Farel had no idea of flattering or conciliating any one. Erasmus was to him only an illustrious time-server, and he turned contemptuously from the door which had so lately been closed against Ulrich Von Hutten. No one is proof against contempt; the cold Erasmus winced under the young Frenchman's disdain, and complained of it loudly.

"I have no time to linger with Balaam on the heights of Moab. The fields of Canaan are white unto the harvest," was the anwer of the fiery reformer, and he left Basle for Montbelliard. There he thrust his sickle into the ready grain and reaped. This province, the last and smallest of the possessions of Duke Ulric of Wittenburg, had afforded a retreat to this young and cruel prince, when he was driven from his other states. A fugitive, poverty-stricken and oppressed, he was like Manasseh in his affliction, he remembered God, and applied to the Swiss reformer, Ecolampadius, for a teacher of the reformed faith. This good man, on receiving the application, immediately recollected Farel, and wrote to him.

"Behold," he said, "how little Jesus Christ is known by those who speak the French tongue. Go to them and tell them of the Saviour."

Farel, who had been waiting for such an opportunity, eagerly responded to the call.

Behold him then, at Montbelliard. Basle and Strasbourg, with the printing presses which rendered them the focus of light, lay behind him, and before him stretched the wide half French, half German provinces of Franche Comte, Burgundy, Lorraine and the Lyonnais. It was such a post as he had craved. He had been singled out to lead the forlorn hope of truth and progress, and he filled the post with vigor and ability. Crowds flocked to hear his preaching, and a multitude of converts hailed him as their spiritual guide and father. His days were spent in preaching and in traveling from town to town, and his nights in study. No sooner did a new book appear in Germany, than it was sent to him to be translated into French by his indefatigable pen. Then after being printed at Basle, the copies were again transmitted to him, and by him intrusted to pious, humble men, medieval colporteurs, who hawked them from house to house.

Egyptian Antiquities and the Pentateuch.

Nothing impressed us more forcibly in the land of Egypt than the likeness between the pictures, monuments and other remains of the old Egyptian civilization long anterior to the Ptolemies, and the word pictures, in Genesis and Exodus, describing life scenery from Abraham to Moses. No one day of all the journey was crowded so full of important facts as the day we spent in the gallery of Egyptian Antiquities in Cairo, under the lead of the famous Egyptologist, Prof. Brugsch, who kindly gave us a whole morning, and read for us the hieroglyphics on the monuments. When we reached the hall containing the most ancient remains, we found much to remind us of the life of Joseph and Moses in Egypt.

Prof. Schaff, in a recent essay, has admirably arranged the points of contact between the monumental history of Egypt and the history in Genesis and Exodus under four catagories. First, the chronology; second, the visit of Abraham; third, the history of Joseph; fourth, the exodus of Israel.

As to the chronology, we were pleased to find that Prof. Brugsch was indisposed to accept the extravagant theories of those who affirm that the dynasties of Egypt reach back to five or six thousand years before Christ. He regards the Egyptian chronology as exceedingly uncertain. So we know the Scripture chronology is not a settled point, Hales making the creation 5400 B. C., and Usher 4004 B. C. All that can be said, therefore, is that there is nothing in the Egyptian chronology as now accepted by the best Egyptologist in conflict with the chronology of Scripture—both being uncertain.

In regard to the visit of Abraham, it is a coincidence of some importance that in the sacred record we find the Egyptian king called Pharaoh—a generic name describing a king, just as the term "Czar" is now used for the emperor of Russia, or the "Sublime Porte" for the ruler of Turkey. This corresponds with what is known of that ancient era from the monumental records. A picture taken from one of the tombs well represents just such a reception by the king as that of Abraham and his large attendance. An ancient papyrus of the twelfth dynasty, declaring the wife and children of a foreigner confiscated to the king, explains Abraham's fear to have Sarah known as his wife.

As to the story of Joseph, everything is Egyptian, as described in the pictures. His sale as a slave, his imprisonment, the dreams of the butler and baker, the elevation of Joseph, etc., though no direct reference is made to him, yet all the pictorial scenes from the tombs accord beautifully with the scenes described in Genesis. Prof. Brugsch thinks he finds an unmistakable allusion to Joseph's scheme in an inscription in one of the tombs at El Kab, declaring, "I gathered grain, a friend of the God of harvest. And when a famine arose, through many years distributed the grain through the town in every famine."

As to the coincidences with the story of the exodus, it would not be expected that Egyptian history would say much. Prof. Brugsch says, however, very confidently, "The new Pharaoh, who knew not Joseph, who founded Rameses, is no other, and can be no other, than Rameses Second, of whose buildings at Zoan the monuments and papyrus rolls speak in perfect harmony. He is the Pharaoh of the oppression, the father of that unnamed daughter who found Moses on the river." This Pharaoh is the Sesostris of the Greeks. All the authorities, with slight differences, put his reign about 1400 B. C., which accords with the Scripture chronology. He figures more prominently among the monuments than any other king. Mention is made of his many buildings, especially along the canal from Goshen to the Red Sea. Rameses, his capital, has been clearly identified. And in the papyrus rolls, the Hebrews are expressly mentioned under the Egyptian title of Aperu in official reports, and described as employed in drawing stone for the fortification of Pe-Ramesson.

These may suffice as illustrations of the nature of the coincidences between the monumental history and that of the Pentateuch, confirming the narrative as true to the life scenes in ancient Egypt.—Louisville Presbyterian.

HARRY'S ANTI SOCIETY.

It was a startling sight that met Mrs. Goodwin's eyes on Tuesday afternoon as she crossed Sixth avenue, and turned into Fourteenth street on her way toward home. "Could it be?"

She hastily brushed aside her veil. Yes, there was her own boy, Harry, walking along the street with James Williams, each puffing a cigar! Both boys were young, bright, and intelligent looking. Mrs. Goodwin stood a moment in blank astonishment—her boy smoking! And what other bad habits might he not have contracted, all unknown to her? Harry passed on without seeing her, but she fancied he looked pale and ill.

The mother went home with a burdened heart. She had trusted her son; believed that he had been frank and confiding toward her. Was this his first cigar? Had he been tempted to taste the intoxicating cup also? Mrs. Goodwin was a judicious mother; she watched Harry anxiously that evening, but said nothing about what she had seen in the afternoon. She was earnestly considering how she could best accomplish the object she had in view. A pattern for mothers.

Wednesday afternoon, Harry returned from school earlier than usual. As he entered the library, where his mother was sitting, she greeted him with a smile, saying:

"I was hoping you would get home early, Harry. I was going out and wanted company."

Harry made some vague reply, which attracted Mrs. Goodwin's attention. She saw his face was serious and troubled. Harry turned to his writing table, and soon commenced writing. Anxiously his mother watched his grave face. At length she rose, and went softly toward him. She laid her hand gently on his shoulder.

"Harry!"

The boy looked up, and met his mother's loving glance.

"What is the trouble, Harry?"

"I am forming an Anti Society," said he with an impetuosity which would have amazed his mother had she not known instinctively that it resulted from deep, suppressed feeling.

"Anti means against. What are you against, Harry?"

"Mother, I am against smoking, swearing and drinking."

A rush of joy came to the mother's heart. She leaned over and pressed her lips upon the boy's open brow, and silently thanked God that he was saved. Then she sat down beside him.

"Now tell me all about it, Harry."

"Well, mother, of course I know smoking and drinking and swearing are bad habits. But ever so many real nice boys in our school do these things, and they are always asking me to take a cigar or something and laugh at me because I don't. Yesterday I did smoke a cigar—and sick enough it made me, too—and at recess James Williams gave us boys some kind of wine or spirit he brought to school in a bottle, and we all talked as I know is wrong. But, mother, isn't it dreadful? James was found drunk in a grog shop last evening—really drunk. Our teacher told us about it just before school closed. And I want to sign a pledge to help me from drinking and smoking. See, mother, this is my constitution."

And Harry read aloud:

WHEREAS, drinking intoxicating liquor does not do any good, and leads to drunkenness; and whereas, to chew and smoke are useless and filthy practices; and whereas, to swear is a sin against God; therefore, in order the more effectually to keep from these vices, I do, praying for the divine blessing and help, form myself into a society to be called "The Anti Society," and bind myself to observe strictly the pledges contained in the following articles:

I. I will not drink anything that intoxicates.

II. I will not take the name of the Lord in vain; nor will I make use of vile or profane language.

III. I will not use tobacco in any form.

(Signed.) HARRY GOODWIN.

"An excellent pledge, my son," said Mrs. Goodwin, "only you should have a hundred names signed to it instead of yours only." And they talked over the matter together.

The next day at recess, Harry collected the boys of his class together, and said:

"I hold in my hand the constitution of a new society, called the Anti Society. My name is already down. Shall I read it? All that are in favor say, Aye."

"Aye, aye," ran round the circle again and again.

Harry read slowly and distinctly. A deep silence followed. The boys looked at each other with sober, questioning faces.

"My name is down," repeated Harry, as he placed the paper on which the pledge was written upon the desk before him. "Who will join?"

Another moment's silence; and then James Williams, pale and serious, but with a look of stern resolution on his face, stepped forward, and amidst the unbroken stillness affixed his signature to the pledge.

No other argument was needed. One after another the boys came up until every one had signed his name. This society, formed by one boy's influence, became a regular organization in the school, the teachers giving their hearty approval. Various officers were chosen, Harry Goodwin being elected President. And, what is better than anything else, the boys have nobly kept the pledge.—H. L. Hastings, Anti-Tobacco Tract.

LUCKIE.

Kardoo, whose life is given by a missionary in India, had a baby brother called "Luckie," whom she loved dearly. His mother loved him, too, but often wept when kissing him, and was always sad, while his father turned away from the boy, grave and stern. When Luckie was about nine months old, Kardoo found that her father and mother, with the baby and his nurse, were going on a pilgrimage, but could not take her with them, and she feared that they were going to fulfill a foolish vow.

In about ten days her parents returned without the baby. Poor Kardoo received no answer to her many questions about Luckie. Her mother never smiled; it seemed as if her heart had been turned into stone. It was only when the nurse came, who had remained behind a few days, that Kardoo heard her darling brother had been offered a sacrifice—thrown into the Ganges by his own mother! The mother saw him rise upon the water; then he sank as a great shark opened his mouth to seize him, and the water was soon colored with his blood. The wretched mother uttered a wild cry, and threw herself upon the ground. What a dreadful story for poor Kardoo to hear! and she could not speak of it to her parents; their religion taught them it was right.

Thank God that you were born in a land of Gospel light. And will you not help to send the blessed Word of God and the living teacher, that the heathen may put away their heathen gods, and turn to Jesus?—Well Spring.

Sabbath School.

LESSON VI.—February 9, 1879.—THE KEEPING OF THE SABBATH

SCRIPTURE.—Nehemiah 13: 15 22.

In those days I saw in Judah some treading wine presses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day: and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals. | There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem. | Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? | Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath.

And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath day. | So the merchants and sellers of all kinds of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice. | Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the Sabbath. | And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates to sanctify the Sabbath day.

Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy.

CONNECTED HISTORY.

[From Scholar's Handbook.]

After reading of the law, the Feast of the Tabernacles was celebrated with great rejoicing, Neh. 8: 9-18. Two days later a solemn fast was proclaimed. The people made a solemn covenant, Neh. 9 and 10. They were distributed by lot, in the proportion of one to Jerusalem to nine in the other cities; and the names of the families, priests, Levites, etc., were recorded, Neh. 11 to 12: 1-26. The dedication of the wall of Jerusalem took place with imposing ceremonies. After being governor twelve years, Nehemiah returned to the Persian court. He again came to Jerusalem "after certain days," Neh. 13:6, probably from nine to twelve years. Nehemiah expelled Tobiah; restored the tithes to the Levites; took measures for sanctifying the Sabbath; and for the putting away of strange wives. It is supposed that he returned to Persia and died there. About this time the prophecy of Malachi closed the Old Testament history and Canon. Then there was an interval of 400 years before Christ came.

EXPLANATORY.

I. SABBATH LAWS BROKEN. (15.) "In those days," after Nehemiah came back to Jerusalem; "lading asses," the commandment gave the beasts also a rest, Deut. 5:14; "sold victuals," people are very ready to excuse the sale of food, etc., on the Sabbath as "necessary," when the necessity is often imaginary. (16.) "fish," the Mediterranean was very prolific in fish, comp. Ezek. 47:10; "all manner of ware," if food is sold, the sale of other things quickly follows. (17.) "the nobles," not the rulers as in verse 11, but the leading people generally.

II. SABBATH LAWS ENFORCED. (19.) "Began to be dark," after sunset; "gates * * shut," the gates of Eastern walled towns are always shut at night, but these were kept shut during all the Sabbath day; "no burdens brought in," those who wished to come in for worship might be allowed to do so, possibly. (20.) "Lodged," perhaps spreading out their wares and trying to sell. (21.) "Will lay hands on you," have you arrested for breaking the Sabbath laws.

ILLUSTRATIONS

VALUE OF THE SABBATH.—A successful merchant once said, "Had it not been for the Sabbath, I have no doubt I should have been a maniac long ago." Said another, "That is exactly the case with Mr.——. He was one of our greatest importing merchants. He used to say that the Sabbath was the best day in the week to plan successful voyages. He has been in the insane hospital for years and will probably die there." Sir Robert Peel said, "I never knew a man to escape failures, either in mind or body, who worked seven days in a week."

Dr. Farre, in an able report to the British Parliament, said as a physician, that a rest of one day in seven was required by man and beast, and a loss of proper bodily vigor was sure to follow seven days of weekly work, ending in a breaking down of the system, and shortening of life.

EXCUSES FOR SABBATH BREAKING.—A little girl being ordered to place a piece of work under her shawl and deliver it on the Sabbath, asked: "Is it not Sunday under my shawl?" A Syrian convert being ordered to work on Sunday declined. "But," said his employer, "does not the Master say that if a man has an ox or an ass that falls into a pit on the Sabbath day, he may pull him out?" "Yes," answered the convert, "but if the ass had the habit of falling into the pit every Sabbath he ought to fill the pit or sell that ass."

[From the International Lesson Quarterly.]

The time of this lesson is not certainly known. Nehemiah returned to the Persian court about B. C. 433, and from the abuses that sprang up it seems that he must have remained there several years, and returned to Jerusalem from 428 to 423 B. C. (chap 13:6). The prophecy of Malachi must have been written soon after this. The last book of the Psalms (107-150) should be read with these lessons concerning the restoration—as many of them were written at this time.

The persons mentioned in the chapter have been mentioned. We find Eliashib the priest, at this time was allied to Tobiah, and had allowed the house of God to be fearfully desecrated (verses 4, 5). The Levites had been wronged (verse 10). The men of Tyre came with fish, and merchants came with goods on the Sabbath.

ADDRESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS.

To all who are "Children of God by Faith in Christ Jesus:"

Whenever a Christian people depart from God, all their institutions become corrupt, and the only salvation, national or individual, is to return. Business, amusements, corporations, families, States, churches, in short, every thing human hastens to decay. Such is the present condition of Christendom. Tested by the slave question, our country showed a preponderance of dross. It required the effort of the strongest mind in the Cabinet of President Lincoln to insert in the Emancipation Proclamation the words, "as an act of justice." And most of the national church organizations which were rent by the discussion, left slavery in both ends of the split. No one of them regarded chiefly their duty to God, but their denominational life, and in grasping for majorities took in slaveholding, which caused the disruption.

The present grapple with secret idolatries is disclosing in the churches a diminished spiritual life. In New England Drs. Hawes, Ives and several other prominent ministers in the churches, with Dr. Beman of Troy, N. Y., and later, Barnes of Philadelphia, proclaimed the truth against slavery, more or less faithfully. But in the present struggle that grade and class of churchmen quail and stand silent before the lodge.

Yet it is not because the truth is dim or doubtful. The lodge set down its dark foot in Massachusetts in 1733. It was then regarded by the ministry with loathing and abhorrence. Dr. Hopkins of Rhode Island, said it belonged to the "kingdom of Satan." Dr. Williston, grandfather of Dr. Storrs, of Braintree, Mass., said, "A Freemason is hand-in-hand with the devil." And these were the current feelings and opinions of the New England clergy one hundred years ago. Fifty years ago the Andover Faculty published a united testimony against the lodge, and now a Knight Templar and Freemason of 33 degrees leads organized Congregationalism in the United States, and many New England pastors are members of the lodge.

This fearful change is not brought about by reason, investigation, or by the fear of God; but by silent, yet manifest love of this present world.

The missionary organizations do not and cannot rise above the spiritual level of the churches which support them. For many years Hon. Linus Childs and Chancellor Walworth sat annually in the center of the stage at the annual meetings of the American Board, and both were sworn liege servants of the lodge. The good Dr. Badger was a consistent enemy of the lodge, and asked for tracts for distribution to the missionaries of the American Home Missionary Society. But that Society now increases the number of Freemasons in its employ from year to year. Even the American Missionary Association, which, as Secretary Whipple used to say, was "committed to reform" from its birth, presents, and will present no steadfast opposition to the lodge. When with great difficulty several years since a resolution of advice against secret societies was carried at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, a member of its business committee was a Mason, and it has since employed a Knight Templar to found churches in the South.

No way is left to the children of God but to withdraw from these organizations. We have waited, labored, contributed and remonstrated for years, and things have grown steadily worse. Forsaking Freemasonry and the boards and councils which tolerate and sustain it, is not forsaking the church of Christ. It is not even forsaking our denominations; for mission boards are not churches or denominations. It is simply a change of agencies. But even if it were otherwise we are commanded to "flee idolatry," and Masonry is idolatry.

The whole administration of God on this globe is one long and terrible protest against mixing human or man-made worships with Divine. Adam and Eve were driven from Eden by the flaming sword of God because they listened to the god of this world. Cain was branded as a caitiff and murderer, by reason of his religious inventions. Abraham was called to forsake home and kindred that he might escape their idolatries, and found a pure worship of Christ. The fire of God burned up Nadab and Abihu for offering strange worship. These strange altars and their worships sent the whole Hebrew nation into captivity seventy years. Even during their captivity God hewed them by the terrible denunciations of Ezekiel. The issue debated by Elijah and the court prophets of Ahab and Jezebel was this same issue between God and Baal, and the whole stupendous fabric of the Hebrew nation was one diversified protest against the "abominations" of the heathen, to wit, their false worships; of which the "work" of the lodge is a transcript, as standard Masonic writers in their works declare. Indeed, that omitting Christ from its creed at the door omits Christianity from all within, is too obvious to need even assertion. And when the Saviour is putting forward the reason on which the final destiny of wicked men is to turn, he puts it on this very omission of Christ which the lodge practices, "inasmuch as ye did it not unto me."

Beloved brethren, let us be followers of Christ. Let us forsake these dark worships. And when the light of God, reflected by our consistent example, is poured in on these abodes of idolatry and superstition, our brethren will come to us, and "God, even our God, will bless us and that right early."

—On Monday, Jan. 27th, the Publishers of the Cynosure forwarded to Rev. Eli Tapley, Columbus, Miss., the following missionary contributions which had been sent to this office:

From Mrs. A. B. Kellogg, Wethersfield, Ill.....	$4 00
Josiah Shaw, Eau Claire, Wis.	1.00
Wm. Mosher, Stillwater, N.Y.	5.00
Total.....	$10.00

We hope to publish frequently such lists as this. It is the intention of the mission committee to enlarge upon the work, so that those who wish to aid Christian missions elsewhere than at the South may do so.

—The revival work in the College church at Wheaton grows more and more upon the brethren there. Saturday was again observed as a day of fasting and prayer, and an afternoon meeting was held in which most of the other churches in the place were represented. On Sunday Prof. Blanchard preached two powerful discourses, that in the evening on the question of repentance after death was listened to by a large evening audience. The meetings will be continued through this week more hopefully than even before. Next Sabbath Professor Blanchard preaches at Streator, Ill.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—The Pacific Telescope remonstrates frankly and in a Christian spirit with the faculty of Otterbein University for conferring the title of D.D. upon one of the leaders in the nullification movement in the church, using these words: "We must protest against the custom of colleges conferring degrees of honor or scholarly attainments upon men whose whole force is being and has been given to defeat the measures of our discipline upon certain questions and issues, the assailing of which deserves censure, and not honor. We question the propriety of a faculty conferring degrees of distinction and honor on Rev. Z. Warner when the sentiments he advances and the denunciatory speeches that he has made are derogatory to the highest interest of our church and as much so to the interests of Otterbein University."

—Pres. S. B. Allen, of Westfield College, has issued an appeal as chairman of the church Board of Education, for the annual collection in aid of educational interests which will be taken up next Sabbath. For two years this collection has been paid over to the Union Biblical Seminary at Dayton; this year it will be loaned, without interest to pious young men who are preparing to preach the Gospel.

WESLEYAN.

—Bro Stratton, of the American Wesleyan, was taken sick while engaged in the revival meeting at Varick, N. Y. He was mending last week with the hope of resuming editorial duties this week.

—Grandison Wilcox, an old and staunch supporter of reform died on the 17th inst., at Coral, Ill., whither he removed from Syracuse, N. Y., not long ago. His remains were taken to the latter city for burial.

—Revivals began with the New Year with the churches at Ft. Scott and Oak Hill, Kan., where brethren Richards and Kiggins are respectively laboring; also at Oakfield, Wis., where Rev. W. Warner was being assisted by his son, a student at Wheaton, and brethren Johnson and Van Driessen.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Prof. E. D. Bailey of Wheaton, preached for the Tonica, Ill., church the last two Sabbaths. Bro. C. L. Blanchard, also of Wheaton, ministers to the church next Lord's day.

—The minority church at Wheaton, which left the College on its own motion a year ago, has lately dedicated a new house of worship 50 by 50 feet, costing some $5,000 for house and lot, with the drawback of a debt of about $1,200. The member who made the motion to withdraw from the College has made a diligent use of papers in the vicinity to show the necessity for building a new church, stating that the minority was turned out by the College Board or its representatives. Whereas, the church acting on a petition of 88 members, headed by the pastor, Rev. L. Taylor, and all the officers but one, and by a more than two-thirds vote, accomplished a separation by disbanding. The majority requested the use of the College Chapel which was granted, and it was afterwards refused to the minority, who under pretense of being the original church kept its name and claimed its privileges. Having no further use for the old name, "First Church of Christ," since it gave a basis for the ex-parte council, that has now been changed to First Congregational church.

FREE BAPTIST.

—The quarterly meeting of the Massachusetts Free Baptist churches was held in Mount Vernon street church, Lowell, Mass., January 15. In the absence of the regular president the Rev. J. M. Durgin of Haverhill was appointed temporary chairman, and the Rev. George S. Ricker of Lowell, secretary. An address of welcome was delivered by Deacon G. W. Knowlton, in behalf of the church. Letters were read from various churches, which concluded the actual business of the convention. At 11 o'clock an interesting discussion on "How to study the Bible" was opened by the Revs. J. Malvern and E. W. Porter and participated in by other members. The evening services were conducted by the Rev. A. L. Houghton of Lawrence.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Foreign Missionary Board have lately appointed Miss Isabella Strang, daughter of Rev. David Strang, to the mission service in Egypt. As she spent a large part of her early life in that field she is familiar with the language and will be ready to enter upon active missionary work almost at once upon her arrival. She will shortly sail from New York.

—Dr. W. H. French of Cincinnati, Ohio, has been invited by the students of Monmouth College to deliver the annual sermon next June before the Christian Union. The Christian Iustructor remarks that it is rarely that a United Presbyterian minister is invited to make this address, which invites the inference that Monmouth students do not regard ministers of their own denomination so highly as they deserve.

MISSIONARY.

—The latest statistics as to the condition of Christianity in this interesting country are as follows:

There are now in Japan 106 Protestant missionaries and forty-four organized churches. Of these congregations twelve are already wholly self-supporting, and twenty-six partially. There are 1,617 church members (native converts), a large proportion being men who have contributed in the year 1877 the sum of $3,552.11. Gradually, a liberal, self-supporting Christian church is being developed in Japan. As helpful to this end there are now three theological schools, with one hundred students in course of preparation. There are already nine native ordained preachers and ninety-three assistant preachers. In the mission hospitals nearly 18,000 patients were treated last year.—Baptist Weekly.

FREE MISSIONS.

—The following interesting item on Mrs. Mumford's work in Bulgaria is taken from Pres. Mahan's paper, the Divine Life, London, Eng. Eski Zara is the city near the Balkan passes that was burned by order of Sulieman Pasha.

"A Bulgarian teacher, who was formerly assistant-editor of a Bulgarian paper, writes that, 'Our whole nation honors and loves Mrs. Mumford for her bravery, heroism, and sympathy in staying by our poor suffering people during their terrible troubles, to bind up their wounds and give them medicine, food, and comforting words.'

"Mrs. Mumford writes that she has constant applications for more scholars. 'My number,' she adds, 'is full unless the Lord sends me more means. It wounds me to refuse these poor people when I could do so much good to the nation through them if I could gather them under my influence for a time. All my girls are from villages burnt by the Turks, and they fled leaving all behind them, barely escaping with their lives. My girls would have been kept at home but for the fact that their parents could not afford them food and clothing. Gana (her Bible-woman) she says, 'has been off for a two months' mission in which in which she has been very much blessed and very successful. I received,' she further adds, 'a letter from Eski Zara, begging me to open a work in that wretched place for women, and let Gana stay all winter. The man who wrote, said he would give her a little house of two rooms rent free to live in, and he was sure hundreds would be led to Christ if they had some one to point them to him, for their sufferings had made them serious and receptive.'"

Contributions for Mrs. Mumford's work can be sent safely through Bro. O. M. Brown, Oberlin, Ohio.

News of the Week.

—Couriers who arrived last Thursday at Ft. Robinson, Neb., confirm the news of the battle between Captain Wessels' command, consisting of four companies of the Third Cavalry and the escaped Cheyennes. The Indians refused to surrender and the troops shot them down like dogs after hemming them in on all sides. When the firing ceased 23 dead Indians were found in their rifle pits including, four squaws and two children; nine remained, all but one squaws, and only three of them unhurt.

—In the United States Circuit Court at Jacksonville, Fla., Judge Settle has sentenced the Brevard Co. Canvassing Board, convicted of making false return of the election. Lee, county clerk, was sentenced to three years. Wright and Johns, sheriff and justice, respectively, one year each in the Albany penitentiary. Lee is also State senator from Brevard county. All the other election cases have been continued till the May term of the court.

—The New York Legislature has re-elected Roscoe Conkling to the Senate; Pennsylvania has sent back Don Cameron, and Wisconsin after once dropping Matt. Carpenter for some unexplained and disgraceful scandals has re-elected him to fill the place of Timothy O. Howe.

—During the late cold snap many of the hillside streets in Allegheny and Pittsburgh became coated with ice, which rendered travel impossible. The boys began sledding on them, and the result is appalling. Within two weeks four boys and a young girl have been killed outright by falling off their sleds or striking some obstacle. Six have been maimed for life, two of whom will never be able to leave their beds, and innumerable others have been seriously injured. The Mayors of the two cities are doing their utmost to stop the evil.

—The largest safe in the world has lately been completed for the United States sub-treasury in New York. It is as large as an average farm house.

—The great St. Louis bridge was sold at public auction from the steps of the court house in that city Dec. 20. It cost over $7,000,000, but never paid expenses. First, second, and third mortgage bonds were issued, and it never earned money enough to pay interest on them. The eastern bond-holders forced the sale and bought it in at $2,000,000. It will be controlled by St. Louis capitalists.

—American coal was selling in Geneva, Switzerland, last week, slightly cheaper than French and German coal, and is much superior. An American locomotive, burning anthracite coal, is running there.

—The Russian and German medical journals state that Eastern Europe is in a state of great alarm at the rapid progress of the plague toward the north and east of Russia, from the Caspian sea along the course of the river Volga. One difficulty in preventing the spread of the plague is the want of physicians. About one third of the Russian doctors died either during the war or from the typhoid fever which followed it, and a large number of young students have been summoned from the hospitals and medical schools to take their places. One medical journal insists on the importance, in the interests of all Europe, of providing Russia with doctors and helping her keep down the plague.

—Violent snowstorms block the Russian railways. Seven thousand laborers are opening communications between Moscow and Sebastopol.

—A London correspondent writes on the highest authority, that the British government, because of anxiety to avoid mishaps in Afghanistan during the February snows, sent dispatches to India Tuesday suggesting that the advance from Candahar and Jelalabad had better be stopped, and also inquiring in regard to the feasibility of holding Candahar through the winter.

—In the Lower House Prince Auresperg said there prevailed in six villages on the Volga river, and island in the river, an epidemic generally considered to be the plague He added that extreme measures do not seem at present justifiable.

Restriction and Prevention of Diphtheria.

[From a Circular Issued by the Michigan State Board of Health.]

NATURE OF THE DISEASE.

Diphtheria is, primarily or secondarily, a constitutional or blood-poisoning disease. It attacks persons of all classes and ages, but most frequently children under sixteen years of age.

In ordinary cases the poisonous principle of diphtheria probably enters the blood by way of the mouth and the air-passages.

The period of incubation of diphtheria, or the time from a person's exposure to the disease to his coming down with it, varies somewhat,—being usually from a few hours to seven or eight days; in some cases it is twelve or fourteen days.

Its most frequent local manifestations are in the mouth, throat, and air-passages. When in the mouth or upper part of the throat only, the disease is, as a rule, less dangerous and fatal, but none the less contagious, than when in the air-passages below the fauces.

The specific contagium developed by the disease itself, and by which it spreads, is diffused by the exhalations (breath, perspiration, etc.) of the patient through the air immediately surrounding him, as well as by clothing or other solid substances that have been brought into contact with the products of the disease.

As a rule the virulence or malignancy of the contagium is in direct proportion to the severity of the case from which it emanates, though malignant cases may result from exposure to a mild case.

The more this contagium is allowed to accumulate in the room where the patient lies, the more powerful does it become.

RESTRICTION OF DIPHTHERIA.

Diphtheria is a contagious disease, and hence the strict observance of the following precautions is of very great importance:

1. Every person known to be sick with this disease should be promptly and effectually isolated from the public; one or two persons only should take the entire charge of the patient, and they should be restricted in their intercourse with other persons.

2. The room in which one sick with diphtheria is placed should previously be cleared of all needless clothing, carpets, drapery and other materials likely to harbor the poison of the disease. This room should constantly receive a liberal supply of fresh air, without currents or drafts directly upon the patient. It will be well also to have the sunshine directly into the room.

3. The discharges from the throat, nose, and mouth are extremely liable to communicate the disease, and should be received on soft rags or pieces of cloth, which should immediately be burned.

4. The discharges from the kidneys and bowels are also dangerous, and should be passed on old cloths and burned, or into vessels kept thoroughly disinfected by nitrate of lead, chloride of zinc, or sulphate of iron (copperas), and then be buried at least one hundred feet distant from any well.

Copperas, dissolved in as little hot water as will dissolve it, is a good disinfectant for this purpose.

5. Nurses and attendants should be required to keep themselves and their patient as clean as possible: their own hands should frequently be washed and disinfected by chlorinated soda.

6. Soiled bed and body linen should at once be placed in boiling water or in water containing chlorinated soda, chlorinated lime, or solution of chloride of zinc.

7. All persons recovering from diphtheria should be considered dangerous, and therefore no such person should be permitted to associate with others, or to attend school, church, or any public assembly, until in the judgment of a careful and intelligent physician he can do so without endangering others.

8. The body of a person who has died of diphtheria should, as early as practicable, be placed in the coffin, with disinfectants, and the coffin should then be tightly closed. Afterward the body should not be exposed to view except through glass.

9. No public funeral should be held at a house in which there is a case of diphtheria, nor in which a death from diphtheria has recently occurred. No children at least, and it would be better in most cases that few adults, should attend such a funeral.

10. The room in which there has been a case of diphtheria, whether fatal or not, should, with all its contents, be thoroughly disinfected by exposure for several hours to strong fumes of chlorine gas, or of burning sulphur, and then, if possible, it should, for several days, be exposed to currents of fresh air.

To disinfect an ordinary room with chlorine gas: Having tightly closed all the openings of the room, place in it an open earthen dish containing four ounces of peroxide of manganese. Pour on this one pound of strong muriatic acid, being careful not to breathe the fumes. When certain that continuous evolution of chlorine is taking place, leave the room and close the door.

To generate sulphurous acid gas, put live coals on top of ashes in a metallic pan, and place on the coals sulphur in powder or fragments.

A convenient way is to place the coals and sulphur on a heated stove plate or cover turned bottom upward in a pan half filled with ashes. To disinfect one hundred cubic feet of air requires the thorough burning of about one and one-half ounces of sulphur.

11. After a death or recovery from diphtheria, the clothing, bedding, carpets, and other cloths which have been exposed to the contagium of the disease, should either be burned, exposed to superheated steam, to a degree of dry heat equal to 240° F., or be thoroughly boiled.

The foregoing methods of disinfection are applicable in all contagious diseases.

CORNS may be cured by a simple and easy remedy. Soak the feet and pare the corn, but not so much as to be painful; then apply as a coating a solution of gum arabic, which should be dried by the fire until it will not stick. Repeat the application each day for two or three weeks without removing the first coating.

The special rate for the Cynosure till March 1st next is $1.50. The regular price is $2 00, which will be resumed after that date. Remember, $1 50 till March 1st for old or new subscribers.

February promises to give a good report of work done to increase the circulation of the Cynosure. A large number of letters are received assuring us of this fact. We publish from a few of these:

Philip Bacon, Weatogue, Conn., writes: "I shall do all I can for the Cynosure, depending on the help of the Lord. I hope to do my part towards the 10,000. May God give an especial blessing to all who are laboring to that end."

Mrs E K Reese, Westerville, O, writes: "I am glad the good work is progressing and will feel condemned if I do not strive to swell the number of subscribers to your paper and conduce to the circulation of unvarnished truth."

A. Holt, Carthage, N. Y., writes: "I am trying to do all I can to accomplish my share of the 10,000 subscriptions.

C. Quick, Weston, Mich., writes: "Getting subscribers goes slow but I intend to keep trying right along."

Wm. A. Bartlett, El Paso, Ill., writes: "May the Lord prosper you, and if it be his will give you the 10,000.

C. W. Kohr, Canal Dover, Ohio, writes: "I am working all I can for the 10,000 subscriptions."

O. M. Brown, Oberlin, O., writes: "I regard the Cynosure as one of the best journals in the land, and intend to keep up my subscription as long as it continues in its present course."

M. H. Sly, Shepardsville, Mich., writes: "I will do all I can for the Cynosure."

T. K. Bufkin, Lynnville, Iowa, writes: "I am trying to do my part for the 10,000 subscriptions. Brothers and sisters, let us 'labor till the Master comes.' This number should, by all means, be had. 'Tis the Lord's work. Let us labor for it."

Z. Ober, Ogden, Iowa, writes: "If the devilish, selfish thoughts were cast out of men and women I could get many subscribers."

J. S. Hickman, East Lynn, Ill., writes: "Hurrah for the ten thousand."

Hugh Nash, Monmouth, Ill., writes: "I want to secure some subscribers for your excellent paper."

Cornelius Halderman, Roann, Ind., writes: "We have been trying to get new subscribers. We intend to 'try, try again,' and may at last succeed."

John Russell, Hammondsville, O., writes: "I expect to send you some subscribers before long."

Rev J H Kiracofe, Mt Victory, O, sends one dollar, which was given to him by an old friend for that purpose, for the Cynosure and writes: "If other men of means would do likewise, this valuable paper might be in the hand of every minister who is not able to take it within himself."

Will those whose subscriptions expire in February please renew promptly? The large proportion of renewals received for the Cynosure is very cheering.

Arrangements are now being made to have the degrees worked at Hicksville, Alexandria, Wadsworth and one or two other points in Ohio, beginning about February 10th. I would like to hear from other localities either in Ohio, Pennsylvania or New York, so that a series of meetings could be held. Wherever desirable let a small fee of 10c be charged on the last evening to defray or help to defray expenses. If the friends in Michigan are going to have their State meeting as suggested by Mr. Stoddard, and if they desire me to attend they must let me know at once. E. RONAYNE.

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertaiument will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLURKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 18, 1879.

All delegates to the Ohio Convention are requested to forward their names by card to James M. Kirkpatrick of Utica, a few days before the meeting, and entertainment will be provided.

Papers friendly to the reform in Ohio are requested to copy the above notices.

The report of the four members of the Congressional Committee, on the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, who do not favor the change was made public last week and is an important document in the history of this business. They state that when formerly under army control abuses and evils were prolific; that there are now but some 15,000 warlike Indians; that the votes of the various tribes for the transfer averages 16 to 1 against it. The report continues: "All religious denominations in this country are absolutely opposed to the proposed change in the management. Their opinions and behests deserve, and should receive, respectful consideration. That we have among the 250,000 Indians some unruly tribes is a lamentable fact, and to this your committee would respectfully call the attention of Congress. We are of the opinion that, in such special cases, the military should have temporary control, and that the President have power to place such warlike or unruly tribes under military discipline, the same as he would a city or State terrorized by mob law or revolution. That the Indian can be anglo-saxonized is proven beyond all cavil in the case of the Winnebagoes and Omahas who reside on reservations in the State of Nebraska. They live in comfortable houses, have good barns, cultivate their land and raise as good wheat, corn and potatoes as are produced through the labor of white men. They have churches and schools and no more orderly community can be found than on these two reservations. They are petitioning to become citizens, a question of such vital importance in their case that it must soon be solved. Is it necessary to place these people under military management? We think not. Whether the management of the Indians remains where it is or is relegated to the War Department, the general system of reform and improvement should continue, and among the most important things commanding immediate attention is to provide that the civil law of the United States be extended over all Indians who will agree thereto, with a code of laws applicable to them, defining crime and providing a judiciary, especially in what is known as Indian Territory."

"I am sorry I ever left the Catholic church to join a secret society," was the confession of James McDonnell on the gallows at Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, January 14th. He and a companion Mollie Maguire that day hung, making twenty-one of that band of Masonic Danites who have paid the penalty of obedience to their lodge orders. The Mollies are part of the "Ancient Order of Hibernians." That order is and has always been in good standing with the Romish priests. Even the Mollies, the worst of them, were intimate with the priests, who scolded them in public but hob-nobbed with them at home. The confession of McDonnell was no doubt an honest one, however, for it was the lodge that brought him to the gallows. A very remarkable circumstance connected with this execution, was a reprieve from Governor Harntranft, giving a few days more of life to the condemned men, which reached the scene barely a minute after the trap was sprung.

The act, so long advocated without success in the British Parliament, to allow a foretaste of home rule in Ireland, by which liquor-selling on the Sabbath might be made unlawful, went into effect last October 15th. After a brief trial cheering results are reported. For the first eight weeks in thirty-nine towns there had been a diminution of sixty-one per cent in the arrests for drunkenness on the Lord's day. Among these towns were several large places like Dublin that are excepted from the general law and allowed to sell a few hours on the Sabbath. One explanation of the difficulty in securing the passage of so beneficent a measure is explained by an item in the correspondence of the New York Tribune which states that the present Parliament, chosen five years ago was elected on purely local issues by the liquor-sellers.

The paragraph in the Tribune from the pen of Mr. Smalley (who bears the special enmity of the Catholic press) is very significant in its estimate of the work of the present Parliament in the foreign relations of the nation. He says: "I think there is a pretty general feeling that this House of Commons has outlived its usefulness. It no more represents England to-day than the Parliament of Bordeaux represented France toward the end of its career. The Parliament of Bordeaux was elected in the agony of a hopeless struggle to make peace with Germany. The English House of Commons was elected nearly five years ago on purely local issues. The licensed victuallers elected it. The publicans have been the real arbiters of English foreign policy all this time, and it really does seem as if the future of India and the Eastern question ought not to be determined by beer."

From 1795 to 1879 France shows progress in the art of self-government. Last Thursday Marshal MacMahon resigned as President of the Republic, and the Senate and House of Deputies, quietly accepting, later in the day elected M. Grevy as his successor by a vote of 536 to 99 for another candidate. The resignation was brought about by the action of the radical Republicans gaining a decided majority in the Senate in the last elections, and voting such changes in the army as MacMahon as an old soldier could not endure. Grevy has been president of the House since 1871; he is a moderate Republican, a man who has been popular, but not a leader. Gambetta is still at the head of affairs, and will probably be made chairman of the House. The Cabinet, though Republican, preferred to follow the President; and M. Waddington, a Protestant and English born, who has been Minister of Instruction, will probably form another. The progress of Republican principles in France, ever since the resignation of Thiers in 1873, when a revolution impended, is most encouraging. It must rest with Gambetta and his friends to proceed carefully so that this progress may continue and be permanent.

The Constitution and the Supreme Court on Polygamy.

Allegheny, Pa., Jan. 20, 1879.

My Dear Cynosure:—In your last issue you ask me a fair question in a fraternal spirit. I feel bound in the same spirit, to give you a frank reply. You ask whether the late Supreme Court decision does not declare (authoritatively) the United States Constitution to be a Christian document? And, if so, what is to hinder the (non-voting) National Reformers from voting next year? To these questions it is perhaps too early to give a reply, as the full text of the decision is not before us, but if the telegraphic report of the decision be correct, the answer is plain:

"The Chief Justice declared that this law is not in conflict with the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom, and showed that the right of Congress to legislate for the protection of public morals, and for the protection of the fundamental principles of society, cannot be abridged by the Mormon claim of religious belief, any more than it could by the claim of certain other religious beliefs that human sacrifices are necessary or that widows must be burned with the bodies of their dead husbands."

I regard this decision as good in itself and at the same time as unconstitutional, and I deny that it in any wise declares the United States Constitution to be a Christian document. It does not declare that polygamy being contrary to the religion of Christ is therefore not religion, or being contrary to Christian morality is therefore an immorality. It does not base its decision on Christianity or Bible morality as such at all. It is entirely in keeping with the declaration of President Woolsey that "the Constitution would need no change to adapt it to a Mohammedan country."

On what does the decision rest? It claims for Congress the right to legislate for the protection of public morals, and the fundamental principles of society. It so happens that public morals in this country favors monogamy, therefore Congress has the right to protect that; but suppose this were a Mohammedan people and their morality favored polygamy, Congress would have the same right to legislate in favor of that. Does not every one see that the basis of the decision is not the law of Christ, but the public sentiment of the country, and in perfect keeping with the declaration of the Constitution that the will of the people as expressed in the Constitution is the supreme law, or the declaration in the bill of rights that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed?" The question between National Reformers and the Constitution is whether God or "The People" is supreme. We say God is supreme and his will is law. The Constitution claims that the people are supreme and their will is law. This decision accords with the Constitution in this respect. The doctrine of Rome is that the Pope is supreme. The American doctrine is that "the people" is supreme. The difference is, Rome has one pope and we forty million popes with the prospect of indefinite increase; or perhaps better stated thus: The Roman See has one head; the American is a hydra-headed monster. The Bible doctrine is, "There is no power but of God." "The Lord is our law-giver."

I said that the decision of the Supreme Court is unconstitutional. I have shown that in some respects it is perfectly in keeping with the Constitution in referring all power to the people, and I may here remark that it is a marvel of diplomatic skill in deciding what is and what is not religion, without the slightest reference to God, the author of religion; and thus, even in matters of religion, managing to be as godless as the Constitution under which they act.

But in another respect their decision is adverse to the Constitution. Amendment to the Constitution, Art. I. says, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." If I understand the meaning of these words it is that Congress shall not make a law either to establish one thing or to put down another that claims to be religion. In other words it has no authority to decide what is or what is not religion, or to legislate for or against anything in the shape of religion. Now with me monogamy is a part of my religion; it is a precept of Christianity that every man shall have his own wife and every woman her own husband, and no partnerships—"they twain shall be one flesh."

It is equally plain to me that polygamy is a part of the Mormon's religion. Their influence in the church on earth and their happiness in the other world are supposed to be increased by the number of their wives. It is equally plain to me that human sacrifices and burning of widows are parts of the religion of those who practice them, and that Congress is forbidden by the Constitution from "making laws prohibiting the free exercise thereof." On this point I quote the high authority of Thomas Jefferson, who says: "I consider the government of the United States as interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions." (Jefferson's Writings, Vol. 4, p. 103.)

Congress has intermeddled with an institution of the Mormon religion, polygamy, and the Supreme Court has sustained them in it; while they have not "established" Christianity, nor said a word about it, they have "prohibited" an essential part of Mormonism. President Hayes intermeddled with a religious institution when he introduced an appeal to God into his inauguration oath. He honored God, but he violated the Constitution. He is the only President since Gen. Washington who had the Christian courage to do so. You say that Garrison and others took the ground in the slavery struggle that the Constitution of the United States was "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." So it was, as the sequel showed. It was that Constitution that held four millions of men in slavery. It was the Constitution that held the nation back from victory for four bloody years, till Mr. Lincoln under a dire military necessity, appealing to eternal justice, under the war power, to save the nation's life, overrode the Constitution and emancipated the slaves. He broke the covenant with death and the nation afterwards by their amendments abrogated the agreement with hell. This whole constitutional scheme to keep God and Christianity out of our government is another covenant with death and agreement with hell, and I am heartily glad that the President and Congress, and now the Supreme Court have had the courage to break it; and I pray God that soon the nation may disannul the agreement; but it is quite another thing to enter into covenant with Christ and accept him as our king, and recognize his will as our law, and make an agreement with heaven; and until the Constitution owns the authority of my Saviour, I as a loyal subject of my king, cannot acknowledge the rightfulness of its authority or hold office or vote under it. You held the South to be in rebellion while they organized under the same Constitution which the nation is organized under because they did not recognize the nation's authority; so we hold this nation to be in rebellion against God, no matter how just and equitable the laws they make, until as a nation in their Constitution they acknowledge his authority, and we cannot participate in that rebellion. It is virtually saying, like Pharaoh, "Who is the Lord that I should obey him?" "Our lips are ours, who is lord over us?"

We may put down polygamy, because it is repugnant to our æsthetic taste and destructive of the family; or we may throw restraints around the Sabbath to save the laborer from oppression, and yet give no recognition to God's authority or acknowledgement of the seventh and fourth precepts of his law. But all that does not constitute a Christian government any more than a fair settlement of a dispute among a band of robbers, would constitute that band a legitimate government.

Hoping that the decision of this question by the Supreme Court will not make you or any other friend of National Reform relax your efforts in its behalf as if the day were won, I trust it will, as an advantage gained, encourage us to intensfy our efforts, and labor on till even the bells on the horses shall chime the glad sound, "Holiness to the Lord."

Yours for the cause,

A. M. Milligan.

Illustrations of Perjury.

The Entered Appentice, on the night of his initiation, is informed that "Truth is a divine attribute and the foundation of every virtue. To be good and true is the first lesson we are taught in Masonry." In his charge he is thus instructed: "In the state you are to be a quiet and peaceful citizen, true to your government and just to your country."

Now let me give a few examples of the way many of our Missouri Masons obey these excellent precepts. I would beg leave, however, to inform Masons that these teachings are largely taught and practiced outside of their peculiar institution.

Example No. 1. A leading member of the order has been doing a large business as a merchant for years, and has a large amount of money due on notes and accounts that are good, besides a well-furnished house and a large farm well stocked; but in his sworn statement to the assessor estimates his personal property at $280, while with horrid oaths he roars, "Perjury, sah!" when he happens to talk of a seceding Mason.

No. 2. A physician in good standing in the order, claims to his friends to have $8,000 in notes and accounts mostly good, besides a well-filled house and a large amount of live stock and farm property; but when sworn by the assessor it dwindles to $1,570, all told. He, too, curses and swears, and yells "perjury," and claims that the church founded by Hiram Abiff & Co. will stand firm when all others are crumbling to dust.

No. 3. The secretary thinks his personal effects amount to only $500 when Mr. Assessor swears him. Well, that is pretty low, but as number three tries to live in the church and lodge too, perhaps he is "splitting the difference" between the two and not going the whole Masonic dodge, as so many others do.

No. 4. The W. M., and past-master too, I am afraid, has forgotten how he promised, when he was installed, "to be a good man and true, strictly to obey the moral law, and to guard against intemperance and excess, for he still sells strong drink to his neighbors and brethren, and in violation of God's law and the statutes of Missouri, and is doing, perhaps, as much damage to the morals of the young as any other dram seller in the county.

No. 5, is a general example, but as usury is a common sin among our officers and money lenders, number five will apply to Masonic morals as well as the other examples.

Gov. Phelps in his message to our present legislature, Jan. 9, 1879, in speaking of the laws on interest says: "Violating the law relating to interest by exacting more than the law permits them to take, their next evasion or disregard of law is to screen their notes from taxation. There are counties in this State where the recorder's office will show thousands of dollars loaned, and the payment secured by deeds of trust or mortgage deeds unsatisfied, whilst the assessment list will show only a small amount of money loaned." I I am afraid many Masons may be truthfully called "perjured." Let us examine their claims to morality, truth and patriotism, and see if their example is as good as some of their precepts are. JOHN V. BAKER.

Leesville, Mo.

On Army Reform—II.

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

The same reasons that continued President Lincoln in office a second term, should have operated to continue Vice-president Hamlin in office. We had gone into the contest for liberty with Mr. Hamlin as one of our color-bearers, and the nobler, more manly, and more courageous course would have been to keep him as color-bearer through the conflict. But the secret counsels of the lodge determined otherwise.

If a change, however, was to be made, it is very evident what kind of a man was needed. A proper respect for our cause demanded a man from the free States, whose antecedents were unmistakably free and Republican, one whose early education had not been neglected, and above all a man who was not given to drink. But under the direction of Masonic politics the man chosen to be our Vice-president, viz., Andrew Johnson, possessed qualities right the reverse of these. Instead of being of the free States, he was a slave-holder; instead of being a Republican, he was a Democrat; and while his early education had been neglected, he was a hard drinker; so much so that he ought to have been impeached for an indecent exhibition of himself, if for nothing else. It is true, that as a citizen, Andrew Johnson was doubtless honest-intentioned and patriotic; but there were other men, in all quarters of the country, who possessed these qualities as well as he, and who had fewer bad qualities.

The great qualification, however, of Andrew Johnson, for the Vice-presidency with Mr. Lincoln in his second term, was doubtless that he, Johnson, was a great Freemason! Masonry had been appealed to as our god of battles, and it overrode all other considerations.

The consequences of this exceeding false policy of the lodge have been exceedingly disastrous. Probably its first and most immediate result was the assassination of Prest. Lincoln; for, with the lodge, assassination has become an established political force, the lives of many kings and rulers having been aimed at by its partisans during the last forty years.

Another ill consequence of this lodge-policy was a conflict between President Johnson and the commander of our armies, Gen. Grant. In this unfortunate conflict, the President, in the exercise of constitutional authority, gave the General an order, which order the General disobeyed. Not only did the General disobey the order, but he remained in the service too; thus sapping the very foundation of all authority and discipline in the army.

The Congress at that time, the creature of the Masonic lodge, was but little else than a Masonic lodge itself. How was it to remedy this conflict between the General whose name had become a pillar of strength, and a President whose chief merit consisted in his being a Freemason! Between a President at the head of all the powerful Masonic lodges of the country, and a General at the head of victorious armies, how was a Masonic Congress to decide?

Reader, please reflect upon what Congress actually did under the circumstances. Having lost the power, by its resort to Masonic counsels, to give a just, honest, constitutional decision to the question, and to sustain the President in the exercise of his undoubted constitutional authority, it settled the dilemma by virtually taking the command of the army, President, General and all, into its own hands! There could hardly be a greater violation of the constitution than this.

The obedience of the General commanding the army was to be rendered to the law, that is, to Congress, instead of the President, as directed by the Constitution; and military commissions henceforth were to be held subject to law, that is, to Congress, instead of the good pleasure of the constitutional commander of the chief of the army.

We are not aware that this action of Congress, so highly unconstitutional, yet so truly Masonic, has ever been repealed. Though the mere act, itself, might be rescinded, yet its disastrous consequences cannot be so readily overcome or remedied. The morale and discipline of the army and the vitality of the Constitution have been seriously impaired, not to say hopelessly paralyzed by it. There cannot possibly be a healthy tone of discipline and subordination in the army where a general disobeys the orders of the commander-in-chief of that army, and still remains in the service, and is sheltered there by Congress. The chief value of our army consists in its morale and its discipline. Take these away, and supply their place with Masonic jugglery and political subserviency, the army will become a leaven of danger to the Republic instead of a source of safety.

A Congress elected under Ku-klux and other Masonic auspices cannot effect a reform in any thing. The very first step necessary to a reform, is to rid the country of Freemasonry; and in order to do that, we must begin by getting rid of the present Congress.

Masonry and our Spiritual Doctors.

Rev. Mr. Medbury, in his essay before the Wisconsin Baptist Ministerial Conference, as quoted by Bro. Quick, says, "the anti-secret society specialist has always proved a greater hindrance to the cause of Christ than all the societies." Notwithstanding Mr. Medbury admits that the association of Christians in such societies is "never morally safe" and "should be discouraged by every Christ-like means." If he had studied Masonry by such lights as he might have commanded, he could have had a score of reasons the most stringent why the connection of Christians with such societies "should be discouraged," and, if by no other means, by the interposition of the church's discipline. He would have found the system not only "morally unsafe," but absolutely heathenish and abominably and unutterably wicked. The "specialist" he refers to knows this, and he knows that the secret combination against which he wars is fraught with imminent danger to our liberties and to pure Christianity. He labors to enlighten the public mind on this subject, to warn men of the danger, and, if possible, to destroy the power of this black engine of night. On what ground, then, is he charged with doing so much harm?

The statement of Mr. Medbury indicates the standard by which he, and those in our churches who think with him, judge of good and evil done. The statement quoted comes from those who are ever ready to sacrifice sentiment and principle to the idea of unity. Whatever may cause agitation, if it only lead to the sloughing off of a dead member, is by them to be deprecated. Pastors are ambitious to preserve and increase their membership, for obvious reasons, and are jealous of the application of "new tests." Their idea of good in a church is summed up in the duty of "dwelling together in unity;" their idea of evil in a church is embodied in the word strife, though it be a strife against evil.

But is this not a low standard by which to judge of what is desirable in a church, popular as it may be with many pastors and religious editors? They have a strong desire to preserve their organizations intact and numerically strong, but such a desire may be wholly secular and selfish, such as influences any worldly association. To overlook the moral and spiritual in such a body is at war with the very spirit of reform, and is to lose sight of the very end to be had in view in the organization. Such pastors seek the prosperity of their churches in the number of their members, in the wealth and standing of their members, and in the apparent harmony of the members. They overlook the fact that union is strength only when based on truth and holiness, cemented by the flowing together of hearts warmed by the love of God and consecrated to the doing of his will. They rejoice in the harmony of worldliness, pomp, pride, stupidity and self-sufficiency, and call such union prosperity. They ignore a system of evils hideous in its deformity—an instrument of darkness and malignity never excelled in any age of the world—and neglect to inform themselves of its dangerous character, lest their inquiries compel them to a warfare against it. They prefer the repose of the churches, even though it be the repose of the body when its vital powers are sinking under some mortal disease. They prefer harmony though it be the harmony of the grave-yard. Surely, this cannot be the true spirit of Christianity. Contentions and divisions in a congregation may be a great evil; but they are less such than indifference to moral character and standing, or the stagnation of spiritual insensibility. The former may be only incidental to a work of moral purification, and a condition of a church's true prosperity; but the peace and harmony that come of indifference to the truth and spirit of the gospel, bring fruitlessness, decay and death.

It is simply reckless to call opposition to such a system as Masonry a "hindrance" to the Gospel. Masonry itself is in entire antagonism with the Gospel, and utterly subversive of it. It is doing more than all other agencies to pervert the Word of God: it makes a blasphemous use of his name; it forbids the use of the name of his only begotten Son; it is guilty of the vilest profanation of sacred and holy things; it exercises its power of combination for the consummation of villainy and crime, and for the subversion of justice; it is known to the world as an abominable imposture, with perjury, blood and murder clinging to to its skirts. It is authoritatively revealed to the world in this character. As early as 1829 more than two thousand seceding Masons had so far absolved themselves from their oaths as to testify to the truth of the revelations that had been made. Acting on the light before them, our churches generally purged themselves of the unclean thing, and after that enjoyed prosperity. Again the monster has wormed itself into the sacred pale, and the churches are enthralled. And the worst of it is that our spiritual doctors (some of them) teach us that the best way to get along with that which is "morally unsafe" is to leave it undisturbed in our embrace.

G. W. H.

SAID the learned Salmasius, on his death-bed: "I have lost a world of time; if I had one year more, I would spend it in reading David's Psalms and Paul's Epistles." None read the Scriptures too much, but thousands upon thousands read them too little.

"The Associated Churches."

We give Prof. Tobey's article given in the Telescope, at our request. As an outsider, his judgment has the more weight. Mark his words: "We trust that there may be such an organization."—Ed. Cynosure.

Our esteemed friend, Bishop Milton Wright, is stongly connected with the movement of "the Associated Churches," and it is by his foresight that the word "United" was not used, so that serious conflictions of names and perplexing misunderstandings may be avoided. The object of this association is to bind together in a general co-operative work, and for aiding missions, all Christians who exclude those practicing abominations and vanities, especially those connected with secret societies. We are as much at sea as the editor of the Cynosure when we come to say what this movement shall and ought to be. Personally, we still expect to give the preference to our own church missionary work, and to push forward the enterprises of the United Brethren church. Except in a general way, we can not serve any other cause than our church as it is the channel in which we believe we are serving Christ, the great Head over all.

But at the same time, we desire to see every possible feature of genuine Christian union. The best union we can think of is that which results from the flowing together of those who speak the truth in love, thus growing up into the incorporation of God's people in their Head, even Christ. No attempt at a forced union in name, outward appearances, or attachment to an earthly head will succeed.

Our individual view about an associated movement of churches opposed to organized secrecy and other evils allowed in some churches is as follows:

1. Let the National Christian Association be the chief center of co-operation. This is an organization with some age, pestige, funds, literature, and agencies, and can accomplish much in creating public sentiment in church and state against the evils which it opposes.

2. Let the members of the various churches continue to support the missions and educational enterprises of their respective denominations, and redouble, if possible, their diligence in this direction. If they fail to do this they cannot be relied upon for much help anywhere outside of their churches.

3. Let there be an attempt made to establish more friendly relations between the anti-secrecy churches, by the sending of fraternal delegates from one to another; and let there be a comparison of their various ways of dealing with members who belong to secret organizations, so that a uniform basis of action in this respect may be adopted by all of these churches. One of the great drawbacks to the anti-secrecy movement among Christians is that the churches which have a testimony against secret orders do not agree as to how church members should walk respecting the orders, and how they should be dealt with for adhering to them.

4. It will be much better to strengthen and harmonize the churches which now bear testimony against the lodge than to attempt the formation of new organizations.

We have nothing to say about any union that churches which are purely congregational in their local capacity may form on the ground of opposition to popular evils, and thus come into the associated relation as a new and growing body. We trust that there may be such an organization. But Wesleyan, United Presbyterian and United Brethren local congregations can not afford to co-operate in an associated movement, except as the denominations at large do so. The reason is that these churches have been and will remain by God's help strongly opposed to all popular evils.

The Ohio assembly is averse to opening the Bible-in-the-schools question, even in so mild a form as the passage of a bill providing that in any district, on application of ten persons sending one or more persons to the common schools, the board of education shall permit the children of the persons so applying in writing to read the Bible in school, but children of parents other than those making such application shall not be compelled to read the Bible. After a deal of skirmishing, mostly for the purpose of avoiding the making of a record, the bill failed of passage, receiving but twenty-one votes.—Times.

Reform News.

New England Notes.

Cheshire, Conn., Jan. 27, 1879.

Dear Bro. K.—At Terryville I met a most kind reception from Bros. C. R. Williams, L. Barrett and the Congregational pastor, Rev. Mr. Griggs. I lectured in Academy Hall to a full house. From here I went to Bristol and stopped with our steadfast friend, Abner Tuttle. This is an important manufacturing place, and the lodge has always ruled. I spoke twice in Printer's Hall, which is rented by the Adventists, who, more than any other denomination in Connecticut, sympathize with our reform. The Masons were out in full force, and displayed their usual tactics. One Mason intimated that I did not know anything about it, and his wife responded that she knew that what I said was true. One Mason said that the Lord Jesus was a Mason. I told him that he had a chance to be, for their Grand Master took him up on to a high mountain and offered to initiate him, but he never took the oath, and then I told of the blasphemy of such a suggestion. Nearly all the Masons here are infidels or Spiritualists. Rev. Dr. Griggs, of this place, expressed his warm sympathy and subscribed for our paper, the first Congregational minister I have found in Connecticut who would do so.

From Bristol I went to Plainville, where the Congregational pastor, Rev. M. Hall, says he is a thorough Anti-mason, but who could give me no aid in my work. He said, however, that he should be glad to have me lecture and would be glad to hear me. He has a church of 300 to 400 members, and is under bonds to keep the peace.

At Plantsville I lectured in Good Templars' Hall to a full house, and with the best of attention. The subject was new but the people were candid and received the truth. On the next evening (Jan. 24) I lectured in Marion to a fair congregation. A good many Masons were present and they squirmed badly, but some heard and believed.

On the 25th I spoke in the Advent chapel in this place to a sympathetic and appreciative audience. I preached for them twice yesterday, and had excellent meetings. To-day I go to Meriden and expect to speak in West Hartford to-morrow night. Yours in the Lord,

H. H. Hinman.

From Past Master Ronayne—The Angola Meetings—The Forthcoming Book.

Editor Cynosure:—I have just returned from Angola, Indiana, where I have held three of the best, the largest and the most enthusiastic meetings I have had for a long time. The large town hall was densely packed each evening, but more especially in witnessing the total annihilation of Osiris, alias Baal, alias Hiram, on the third night; and considering the immense audiences and the closeness with which they packed together, putting it in the mild language of friend Hinman, we had most excellent order throughout.

The Masons also were present in large numbers, both from Angola lodge and the lodges in the neighboring towns, and as is customary with them at all my meetings, they behaved like men and like American gentlemen. This is, I believe, as it should be, and I am glad to be able to record the fact that disturbance and wild confusion at any of my Masonic exposures is now a thing of very rare occurrence, and the result always is that the Masonic philosophy can be better discussed and its innate wickedness and deep-rooted infidelity be more clearly and convincingly demonstrated than if we had scenes of rough, angry excitement. There is no necessity for Masons to get mad, and Anti-masonic lecturers have no business to make them mad if it can be avoided. The Masonic philosophy is a wicked conspiracy, a base swindle, a vicious counterfeit, and very many of these men are unwittingly led into it by the example of ministers who ought to be their guides in an opposite direction; and while they know and feel that it is a sham, a mockery and a fraud from beginning to end, yet they neither understand the meaning of its ceremonial jugglery, nor do they know how to safely extricate themselves from the galling fetters with which it binds them. We ought to discuss Masonry fearlessly and fully, and at the same time do it in such an attractive, instructive manner, avoiding all personal allusions and respecting the conscientious scruples of those opposed to us, as will convince both the Masons and the audiences who listen that our desire is not to provoke attack, but to convince the judgment.

One good brother Mason at Angola, James Butler, added very largely to the general feeling by not only attending himself, but urging all his friends and acquaintances to do the same; and especially to be sure and see Hiram demolished, telling them at the same time that they may rely confidently on the correctness of the work performed. A young Entered Apprentice also affirmed that my candidate, the "Rev. Dr. Jas. Mulcahy," was initiated just as he was himself.

On the whole, I believe these Angola meetings will not be forgotten during the present generation and the people of Steuben county owe a debt of gratitude (and fully acknowledge the obligation) to the friends—Father Ewing, Mr. Henry, Rev. Mr. Wiggins and others, for furnishing them such means of instruction.

Mr. Editor, I must stop right here. If I say much more about these Angola meetings I'll find myself sounding somebody's horn, and you know I seldom or never do that, and don't want it done by others if I can help it. I want to say to the friends, however, who are so liberally responding to my call for subscribers to the "Master's Carpet," that my visit to Indiana has put me back a week on my book. We are now on the eleventh chapter and have about 90 pages more to finish before going to press. We are getting out 50 pages a week so that it will not be many days before we reach the bindery. The 500 subscribers originally called for are very nearly made up, but if this whole first edition goes to the readers of the Cynosure at first cost it will hurt nothing.

In this connection also I would like just to add that in some cases I have received cash letters, which of course is always marked to the subscriber's credit, but I did not require the cash to be sent until the books are received. I shall make immediate arrangements for the completion of the work in paper, in press work and in binding; and should I come short of funds to pay all my bills, I shall ask my friends to advance what I need. So far every page is paid for, and that even in advance, and nothing shall be allowed to retard the appearance of the book in the near future. It would be impossible to thank each one individually, but I am glad of this opportunity to return hearty thanks to all for their kindness in so promptly responding to a call so unusual.

And now, one last word. I would suggest to all desiring Anti-masonic lectures and exposures to arrange in future, if possible, so that a small fee, say of ten cents, be charged each gentleman and boys over twelve years—ladies to be free—on the third evening. You will raise all or very nearly all your expenses in that way, and the burden will not fall so heavily on a few, as heretofore. I believe the time has come when this course may be safely pursued; and I am led to this conclusion from looking back at last year's meetings and those held this week at Angola. I would also suggest that Bro. Callender, and other friends in Pennsylvania complete their campaign arrangements as soon as possible, and let me know, following my suggestion here as far as possible. In my next letter, Mr. Editor, I will talk about going to Ireland to work the degrees, for somehow I cannot get the feeling out of my mind that I must go there at no very distant day. May God direct and guide us all to his own glory. Yours,

EDMOND RONAYNE,

FROM SECRETARY STODDARD.

JONESBORO, Ind., Jan. 30, '79.

DEAR K:—I lectured in Friends' church here last evening. Have spoken at Fairmount four times this week, and have appointments each evening for the remainder of the week and two for next Sabbath.

The back-bone of secrecy is broken in these parts, but there are a few points where it still squirms, and Jonesboro is one of them. It has found a shelter in the Quaker church here, and the church is in a very unpromising state. A few of the old members are faithful in attending the means of grace but the body is smitten with "dry rot" and the individual Masonic members and their sympathizers stand in the church very much like last year's mullien stalks in a meadow, sapless and dead. At my last evening's meeting we were told by a member of the Masonic lodge and the Quaker church that Quakers visited and patronized saloons here, which if true would indicate that Masonry had nearly or quite strangled the Bride of Christ in this village.

Bro. Howell is a thorn in the side of the "beast" who with his faithful but now afflicted wife are standing firm and with colors at mast head. The pious ones now see and regret their mistake in admitting lodgists and will I hope right the wrong.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE MICHIGAN MEETING.

[The following from the Secretary of the Michigan State Association reached this office several weeks ago, but being partially devoted to business was lost to the editors until the present. Bro. Mathews will use separate sheets next time. It contains matters of importance though late. ED.]

Publish to the world that the friends of reform in Michigan responded to the call through your paper and assembled at Dean's Opera House, Adrian, but for good and sufficient reasons adjourned subject to the call of the Secretary and Executive Committee.

On Thursday we were made glad by the appearance of Bro. J. P. Stoddard. O what a blending! Now as we look back how his countenance and the effect illustrates the Scripture, "as iron sharpeneth iron so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." I should fail in a pen picture of the scene. Ponder the text and you have it. Bro. Stoddard's heart was full of courage and we feel as we write the force of Prov. 27: 19. "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." Our hearts were all right though our countenances were sad. His courage quickened and brought out ours, and in a few minutes might have been heard ringing out a clear voice of prayer to God for help, and yet fraught with thanksgiving for a knowledge of his being our helper. Glory to his name!

We now got out bills and some called on the people at their homes, so at 2 P. M. to a marked and attentive audience Bro. Stoddard lectured with force and ability far beyond everything I've heard from him before. The Abiffites were in and laughed some, but such an effort as it cost them to get up a laugh was very poorly paid. They were enlightened by the blazing torch of truth in the hand of our friend in need. In the evening a large audience greeted the same speaker, and though some of us thought the lecture of the day should have been reserved for night, we had to acknowledge at the close that "The excellence of the power is of God." How secretism was proven a destroyer of domestic peace by dividing what God hath joined is known to all who have listened to the same. God grant us help from more such men in every emergency, is my prayer. Bro. Ronayne was not with us to work the degrees and by some it was regretted. We hope at no distant day to have him or a seceding Knight Templar of Jackson, Michigan, who has taken all the parts in many regular lodges of A. F. and A. M. in Ohio, because of the officers' incapability. Friends of reform, write me.

MASONRY AND THE PRESS.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I endorse your remarks on Zell's Popular Encyclopedia. I was induced by false and fraudulent representations to subscribe for the above work, furnished to subscribers in Canada at fifty cents per forty pages, or $32 for sixty-four numbers at fifty cents a number, which is at least three times its value.

Then I find that in articles requiring moral honesty it scruples not to suppress the truth for the sake of popularity. On page 1273, second edition, under the caption "Husbandry, Patrons of," or "Grangers," the real nature of the dangerous institution is carefully concealed. All is made to seem very safe and reasonable.

The heathenish, anti-Christian, and enslaving tendency of the order can only be gathered from the letter of O. H. Kelly, Secretary of the National Grange, as published in the Cynosure Scrap-book, Tract No. 17:

ITASCA, Minn., Dec. 12, 1868.

Dear Sir:— * * * From the interest you evince in the work and from the tone of your letter I am prompted to place in your possession the form of obligation required in our order. As this matter was freely discussed, and many of our originators being Masons of the 32d and 33 degree, and prominent Oddfellows, it was decided that any oath not given in a court of law was extra-judicial and not binding any further than the moral honesty of the person giving the same, hence we adopted this form enclosed which will be carried out to the letter.

I remain yours fraternally,
[Signed] O. H. KELLY.

The efforts of the Christian Cynosure, and the other publications of the National Christian Association, are necessary to put the community on their guard against such frauds as these. They all work into each other's hands in the way of deceiving the ignorant and unwary.

Chambers' Encyclopedia, a work of four times the value of Zell's, may be had at half the price, and in ten volumes. But as comparisons are odious we will leave each one to judge for himself. Had I not been deceived by a Masonic agent I know that I could have had a much more eligible Encyclopedia for much less money and free from such moral blemishes as darken the pages of Zell.

CANADIENSIS.

ALL TOGETHER.

PEMBERTON, Mo., Jan. 17, 1879.

I am a poor man, but all I have or am, I trust is wholly the Lord's; and in carrying out my consecration I find the Master has claims upon me and mine of an especial character. I refer to the subject of Christian benevolence. Here I have studied, read and prayed. I want to do duty. As a result of my investigations upon this subject, I give the one-seventh of all my limited income in this direction. Shortly, now, I expect to have a little to bestow of the Lord's especial money. Have concluded at the present, peculiar epoch of the Cynosure's race and work, to expend a little of said fund in the farther spread and circulation of said powerful engine for truth and righteousness in the land. Hence my responsibility for the two new subscriptions just made.

Another thought. I was bred a farmer; have seen various farming implements used. Among others, the threshing machine. It is about to be used; the power is applied, and for some time there is no evidence, whatever, of anything being accomplished. And not unfrequently, just at this juncture, some of the power or team will give up. But this don't effect anything material. The rest faithfully hold on the harder, and the next thing perceptible is, the wheels are revolving the power is increasing and the entire machinery is in motion; the result is a complete separation of the grain from all impurities whatsoever. The fact is just as long as the power is applied and the machinery kept in proper order, the effect for good is incalculable and onward is the word, stopping for nothing until the work is done. Now for the application. The great Anti-secret Reform has had a nominal existence now, about ten years. In the meantime the power has been collecting and concentrating, the machinery proved, so that already, to the praise of God be it said, the most casual observer can see the wheels begin to move, the hum and din arise (demonstrations made by Masons when the lodge is turned inside out), and the inevitable result will be a complete separation of the wheat (God's true Israel) from the chaff (Baal worshipers). So mote be.

Now, my dear friends, it is as clear as a sunbeam to my mind, all that is necessary is for a "strong pull, a long pull, and a pull altogether," and victory will perch upon the outspread banners of this great and glorious reform. Ever remembering, however, that "it is not by might nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord," that our victory must come. For, as in the figure, so here, the extent of the power, the amount of work effected are in exact proportion to obedience and faithfulness on the part of the creatures employed. Just so in the work of reformation, if the entire outfit prove faithful the grand result will be reached just so much sooner. But come it must and will; sooner or later. Amen. Good Lord hasten the day.

Yours for the triumph of truth,
J. W. THOMPSON.

A WORD OF CHEER FROM BRO. ISAAC HYATT.

EAST HAMLIN, N. Y., Jan 27, 1879.

DEAR BRO. K.—I thank you for the kindly missives you have sent me from time to time. I have never seen your face; I would like right well to look upon it and assure you of my hearty good wishes.

From my quiet outlook I watch with great interest, by the help of your excellent paper, the noble warriors who are arrayed against secretism. It is a noble army, fighting in a good cause, and sure to win the victory.

With joy I behold their wise and onward march and feel stricken at heart at every unwise and ineffective attack. Gladly I send my word of cheer to every soldier. Brothers beloved, try to have your every act, word and thought inspired by goodwill and shaped by the hand of wisdom. I am confident the nearer we can keep within this compass the sooner our reform shall be triumphant.

It is a little more than a year since I sent you for publication in the Cynosure my renunciation of Masonry. A year ago to-day I appeared before my church and congregation at Starksboro, Vermont, to relate my Masonic experience. It was the cross of my life. I have had time to think and test its effect upon my personal accountability to God. I do not regret the act. I think it has made me freer and enables me to look up with more confidence to my Heavenly Father. I am very sorry I ever entered the lodge and made it necessary for me to make the confession and give the warning I have. I give thanks to God in the name of Jesus that he gave me power to break the snare and receive pardon for my sin.

It came in answer to prayer. Well do I recollect twelve months ago how I read the 121st Psalm with an inward conviction that its precious assurances were for me. I am thankful they have been verified thus far. Yours very truly,

ISAAC HYATT.

THE LABORER WORTHY OF HIS HIRE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is evident to me that the men who have began the Anti-masonic reform are generally poor men. We are working in behalf of the American people; and it is no more than fair that they should help us bear the expenses.

Messrs. Stoddard and Ronayne are growing old. Their services are invaluable. We cannot pay them. I propose that, like other lecturers, they should charge an admission fee of twenty-five cents, or some remuneration for their labors. I believe that the American people would now gladly receive them, at least in most of the Northern States.

One of the most valuable works that we have seen of late days is Taine's French Revolution. The writer dissects and lays open the machinery of the Revolution and shows the detestable workings of secret club government—that kind of government under which we of the United States are now suffering. But Mr. Taine's dissection is neither more able nor more useful than that which Mr. Ronayne gives of our present vicious government, the Masonic lodge. I suggest that Mr. Stoddard should go round and prepare the way and Mr. Ronayne follow with his Worcester lectures. got up just as they were there.

ONE OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Jonathan Moss, of Cameron, W. Va., writes:

"A Masonic Presbyterian preacher boasted to me a short time ago that they had the United Presbyterian, published at Pittsburgh, and all the other so called Anti-masonic church papers so cowed that they did not dare to insert in any of their anti-lodge articles the grips, signs and passwords of the Masonic order; that they only attacked the lodge at a safe distance in the shape of general principles, and the lodge could smile at such opposition. Only the Cynosure's way of doing things gives the lodge devotees 'trouble.' It is the only hot coal which dropped on the tortoise's back makes him show signs of discomfort."

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

Marshal. Past Degree Templar, by direction of our Vice Templar, I present these friends for your explanation of duty.

Past Degree Templar. You have, my brothers and sisters, been told that our mission is to save. We have a few practical thoughts to inculcate. Be prepared to use them in carrying out the principles of a true, active, living charity.

A lodge of Good Templars which fails to protect the young and rescue the intemperate, leaving none outside the pale of its good influences, fails to do the work for which it was organized. Your lodge may and should do this work. You are to leave none unsaved.

A lodge in which each individual member is not interested and doing something within and without the lodge-room for the good of the order, has partially or wholly failed in duty. If you and every other member of this order do not exert a ten-fold more influence for good than before you became members, then you have not realized your individual power in our organization. If, at our meetings, our members are not being made better, stronger for the battle of life, more interested in others' welfare, growing less and less selfish, more wise in counsels and efficient in action, then are we deficient in that which constitutes a good working lodge and membership. Sacred should be our meetings to every hungry heart, and strong will then be every one of our members to live and to aid others in holy living.

We could not give you the key of success in securing and retaining the membership of him who has been so bitterly cursed by the drunkard's drink, if the lodge-room is to be anything less than a HOME to him and his family. Having made safe the fold, now go out to rescue victims from the fell destroyer.

And do you ask how you may do this work? How shall you proceed so as to insure success?

Our lesson is practical—it is not theory. Noble men have tried and never failed. Kind sisters have rescued very many and you may do likewise, trusting in the all-powerful arm of God to give you the promised blessing.

If, unhappily, you know the power of the drunkard's appetite by bitter personal experience, God pity you, and give you of his Almighty strength to continue the noblest, grandest warfare that ever enlisted a brave soldier—that of bringing his own appetites and passions to the subjection of his higher moral nature.

If, happily, you are free from this undying curse of appetite, you will require much of Christ in the heart before you can fully sympathize with the confirmed inebriate; for he who has allowed it to become his master, needs—if any man on earth needs—your trust and strong arm, God's helping hand and yours.

To such an one, go kindly; go in the full spirit of the gentle Nazarine. Let him feel your warm heart as you give him a brother's hand; let forgiveness beam from the eye, and give tenderness to the words you utter; let your soul envelop him, as you make him one with you. When you do this, his yearning heart will respond—the door will open—you, as Christ's messenger, may enter in, and in due season you will welcome him for the life-long obligation, in the keeping of which there is such great reward.

And when he comes, like the returning prodigal, to his father's house, let no elder brother say, "Why is this rejoicing over one who was lost," but now is found. Greet him as one for whom the Saviour died upon the cross; greet him as one over whose return angels in heaven rejoice. Give him a faithful brother's trust, a loving sister's welcome; and surround him with a wall of protecting influences, that no enemy may surprise and take him captive.

And remember that the victory is not yet complete. Study well the nature of this appetite; learn fearful truths from the experience of reformed men. Weeks, months, even years, may elapse, and in moments of illness, excitement, discouragement, and in seasons wholly unexpected, that appetite may be aroused in all its former fury. If that awful hour should come to thy reclaimed brother, by all the love of your Saviour, I beseech you to fly to his relief and give him of your strength. Never let it be said that one single soul, having tasted the sweets of charity and a redeemed manhood, has gone from this circle of safety because our sacred promise to him was not most faithfully kept.

The Good Templar is to do good everywhere, and to all men. Men may wrong you, they may traduce you; but you must not be their enemy. Remember that "to err is human, to forgive divine;" and that the Master would have you do good unto all, especially to such as are of the household of faith.

VIII. ODE.

AIR.—"Charity."

"Hoping ever, failing never,"
Though deceived, believing still;
Long abiding, all confiding
To thy Heavenly Father's will;
Never weary of well doing,
Never fearful of the end,
Treating all mankind as brothers,
Thou dost all alike befriend.

CHORUS.—Meek and lowly, pure and holy,
Chief among the blessed three,
Turning sadness into gladness,
Heaven-born art thou, Charity.

One more duty of vital importance toward the rescued victim is yours. He has a work to do to save himself, and is entitled to your experience and aid in this work of self-conquest. He must not only confess and forsake, but he must go to work to save others. To help himself he must help others. To grow strong himself, he must give strength to others.

Put, therefore, the harness of work on the man, that the first gratitude of his heart may be turned toward the reform of others. There is power in that man so powerless but yesterday. He can reach persons that you and I can not, and bring them as candidates to the lodge-room. By the relation of his experience, in language no matter how broken, he can melt hearts that no other can reach. Therefore, for the good of the common cause, as well as the personal salvation of him you would surely reclaim, let him WORK as God has given him ability.

Marshal, you will now conduct our friends to the desk of the Financial Secretary, where they will affix their names to the roll book; then to the Degree Templar for the closing instructions.

OUR MAIL.

D. B. Turney, Richview, Washington Co., Ill., writes:

"Circumstances for the present preclude my return to Grafton, West Virginia, but I war against Masonic meanness and in favor of Christian consistency, all the same."

Thos. B. Galloway, Pittsburgh, Ind., writes:

"We had an excellent lecture last night by the State agent, S. L. Cook. Expect another to-night (Dec. 9th)."

Jas. M. Henderson, Oakdale, Washington Co., Ill., writes:

"I have been opposed to secret lodges all my life, and regard them still as unmanly, immoral and un-Christian, out and out; or rather in and out. For I verily believe they originated in hell and will end there. Every man who joins them sells himself to work wickedness the very first step he takes, and swears to it. * * I think the language of Isaiah 28:5 is a fair representation of lodge members: 'We have made a covenant with death and with hell are we at agreement.'"

E. H. Wood, Rushford, N. Y., writes:

"Even church members say they wish Masonry was out of the church, but you must not say a word about it for fear of the disturbance it will make. I wish we could have some lectures here to open up the subject to them. Some times I almost despair of seeing the downfall of secret societies as I have once seen it in Morgan's time; but my hope is in God and I will still labor and pray on."

A. Overholt writes:

"Wadsworth, O., is asleep on the lodge question."

F. H. Waugh, East Monroe, Highland Co., O., writes:

"I live in the hot bed of secretism,—all orders. However a number are beginning to read the Cynosure. I hand my papers to the neighbors."

John C. King, Chase City, Mecklenburg Co., Va., writes:

"The Lord is evidently in the work. Bitter as Satan's assaults have been against that old veteran, Bro. Blanchard, and others, the work grows and strengthens."

Jas. Northway, Lisbon Center, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., writes:

"I am in for the fight and pray daily that God will speed the right and that the powers of darkness may be overthrown."

Elisa Tuttle, Burn, Wis., writes:

"In a little village ten miles from here secretism has planted itself within the past year, and thrust out vital godliness."

Wm. Hargrave of Wis., who is visiting at Independence, Kan., writes:

"I took the liberty in a prayer meeting the other night, when the subject of temperance was introduced, to say that I was much pleased with the Murphy movement in this city. I stated that with us in Wisconsin we were too much divided among different orders. One called the Temple of Honor, which excludes the ladies, and will not allow the men to go in until they solemnly swear that they will not reveal the secrets. I said they could not get me into any such place, for just as soon as I found anything that would be of good to others I would tell it. The craft were well represented, and on coming out I offered my hand to one of them. It appeared as though he would rather not be troubled. We need the prayers of all God's people that we may be able to stand up for the right. My days may not be long to fight, so I wish to improve every opportunity I may have."

Enos Mitchell, Pittson, Me., writes:

"The Freemasons are numerous around here, and they are hoodwinking as many more as they can. One Methodist minister has been hoodwinked and led in by the cable-tow this winter. Why are there not more sinners converted? is asked by some professors of religion. After a sinner is hoodwinked and led into the lodge with a cable-tow by a hoodwinked minister, I think that minister will try in vain to convert him to Christianity. I think he has led him one step too far in the wrong direction. Killing the body is nothing in comparison to killing the soul. I fear these hoodwinked ministers kill more souls than they save. It seems Freemasonry is a concern that few dare to meddle with."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 6, 1879.

THE GREAT WORK FOR FEBRUARY.—The claims of the Cynosure have been held back to allow the friends of our reform to concentrate their efforts on the Publishing House. Now the paper must have attention. TEN THOUSAND names for its list is the great work of the year. Let every friend of reform rally and never cease their efforts until that work is done. Send in your pledge for subscribers. Pray for them. Work for them. Get renewals. Get new names. Every man to his place and the work will be done.

IS THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION CHRISTIAN OR HEATHEN?—Read with care Dr. Milligan's article on the above question. Our readers will recognize it as involved in the first article of the platform of the American party. Next week I propose to review and reply to Dr. Milligan. I do not put the reply in the present number: first, because I have not had time to write it; and, second, because, in a matter of such importance, I like to give correspondents fair play; and again because the Cynosure cannot prolong the discussion beyond just limits; and more than all because there is no writer on this subject whom I love and respect as I do Dr. Milligan. In saying this I do not disparage others.

Yet, as I wrote the first article of the American platform which declares ours to be "A Christian and not a heathen nation;" and as the Constitution is Christian if the nation is, I think our platform must be vindicated or abandoned. I propose to vindicate it if the truth will afford the means.

WM. B. MILLER, Braceville, Ohio, writes us that we are wrong in opposing secret societies, but says he is open to conviction, and would like to read our books, etc., etc. Mr. Miller ought, by all means, to send $1.50 for the Cynosure before the first of March, when the old price, $2.00, will be resumed. He will, by reading the paper one year, get the ideas and reasonings of more than one thousand minds from all parts of the United States; and thus learn more than he could by corresponding with the publisher of the paper. We shall hope to hear from Mr. Miller after he has fully informed himself on the subject.

"ASTONISHING MIRACLE."—Under this head the Catholic Review gives above six close-printed columns to the statement of a Jesuit, named Leo Murin, who assures the world that the corpse of St. Francis Xavier is "found uncorrupted and unchanged" in the city of Goa, India, where it was buried in 1552, above three centuries ago. We are assured that the saint's tomb has been opened three times; and that in 1614, when by order of Paul V. his arm was cut off, "blood issued copiously from the body," etc., etc.

These ghastly and abominable lies show to what lengths human nature is capable of being carried by the father of lies.

I spent almost a day in the College Seminaire of Quebec over forty years ago; and coming suddenly athwart a skull and cross bones kept in a glass case on the wall of the chapel, I asked my gentlemanly conductor: "What are those bones for?" He naively replied: "Oh! they are kept there to impress the vulgar crowd." The grand-children of Protestants will worship relics in the United States if the lodge is not put down.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES.

We request special attention of our readers to Prof. Tobey's article in this paper; and, indeed, to whatever shall be written on the above topic.

The secret orders in this world are plainly "The Image of the Beast" which John saw while an exile in Patmos for the witness of Jesus, (Rev. 13th chap.) exercising all the power of the two symbolic beasts preceding. All the anti-Christs of the last days, which means, simply, all the false religions of the last days are taking on the linaments and livery of the lodge. They are all travesties or counterfeits of the religion of Jesus Christ who came from the infinite and eternal God into this world to save sinful men. The scheme or programme of this religion is to unite Christians to Christ by the Holy Ghost; and as Christ is one with the Father, so Christians, in Christ, become one with the infinite and eternal God, and so infinitely and eternally safe.

Now, as counterfeits of the same bill or coin must necessarily resemble each other, all schemes of false religion resemble each other, and are animated by the same spirit, who is the usurping "god" or "prince" of this world. There are but the two religions. The head of one is Christ; of the other, Satan.

Now every receiver of the Bible as divine, receives the above as the truth, and if a Christian, has risked his eternal salvation on that truth, it follows that the offer of Satan when he met Christ and proposed a sort of partnership with him to give him "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them" if he might but receive the worship of Christ, which Christ rejected—yet this proposition of Satan is actually accepted and complied with by every church whose members practice both sorts of worship, viz., Christian and Gentile; and if this be so the worship of Christ must be divorced from that of Satan or the church still owns Satan as its god. This is plainly obvious. Where there are Christians and Masons in the same church, it is much more dangerous for the minister to speak against Masonry than for him to doubt or deny some fundamental truth, as the future punishment of the wicked. Satan will rule or ruin every church which attempts to cast his worships out of it. Now the mission of the Associated Churches of Christ is, to accomplish the divorce of Satan's worships from Christ's church. I see no objection to Wesleyans, United and Reformed Presbyterians, United Brethren and Free Methodists all associating together on this simple platform with the express understanding that each manage its own business as they do now. We still invite discussion on this grave topic.

IS THERE A MILLENNIUM FOR THE INDIANS.

We are indebted to the Advance for the following condensation of the Indian Commissioners Report. Gen. Howard thinks its facts can be relied on; that Gen. Whittlesey, who is the author of the report, is a true and careful officer. During the eight months in which I travelled among the Rocky Mountain Indians, I did not see a cow or a sheep among them all. Col. Chivington of Denver butchered eighty Indians, mostly old men, women and children, who were pensioners and peace Indians: and I saw nothing but utter extermination for that wild and wonderful people. My heart was continually heavy for their fate. This was some fourteen or fifteen years ago. And if the facts below are true and unexaggerated "a remnant shall be saved." There is abundant occasion for thanksgiving and encouragement for prayer.

ABSTRACT OF REPORT.

The Board of Indian Commissioners, in their tenth annual report make an astonishingly encouraging showing for the Indians. They compare the condition of the Indians in 1868 and 1878. From this statement it appears that one-half of the Indians have discarded the blanket and donned civilized garb; that about one-half have moved out of their lodges and wigwams into houses, the number of which has increased nearly three-fold in ten years; that the number of pupils in Indian schools has more than doubled, and that nearly one-sixth of our Indian population can read; that about one eighth are members of Christian churches; that the number of acres of land cultivated by the Indians is about five times as great as ten years ago; that the production of wheat has increased nearly five-fold, of corn seven-fold, of oats and barley nearly four-fold and of hay nearly nine-fold; and that the Indians own about three times as many horses and mules, six times as many cattle, seven times as many swine and about seventy-five times as many sheep as they did ten years ago. They now own more than two head of sheep for every Indian man, woman and child in the United States. The Board remarks: "This exhibit of results is certainly encouraging, and it presents a strong argument against any radical change of policy."

PRAYER ANSWERED,

"O woman, great is thy faith" Christ by the Holy Spirit has spoken in the heart of many a wife and mother, since in person he addressed the Syro-phœnician woman. Had all husbands such holy women at their sides the lodge would not be known a fortnight except in memory. May God bless the sister who writes below and give her yet more and greater blessings. Let her and all others whom God moves pray for the Cynosure, that it may be yet more and more a power for the truth in the earth:

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—From one who feels that a weak woman may by faith and prayer be equal to the power behind the throne.

I have long been a reader of the Cynosure, but have not been able to subscribe for it until now. My husband has been, not a Mason, but a firm believer in the grandeur and benevolence of the institution. But to-day I thank God with overflowing heart, that he has heard and answered my prayers. That he now sees Masonry in its true light, as antagonistic to Christ and his Gospel, though he still stands greatly in fear of the monster, for secretism is strong here.

He consented this morning that I might subscribe for the Cynosure one year, so in the future, instead of borrowing I shall be able to lend the Cynosure.

Yours in Christ, D.

—The Christian Ensign, Bedford, Ind., brings forward the name of General J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vt., as the Presidential candidate for the American party in 1880. Bro. Hobson has probably pitched the keynote for us this time.

—Past Master Ronayne is engaged to address the Chicago Christian Association at their next monthly meeting, next Tuesday evening, February 11th, in Carpenter Hall. We are pleased to see that the friends in Ohio are arranging for work in Medina and Defiance counties. Let the watch-pile blaze at every lodge center in that vicinity.

—At every such meeting let our Ohio friends remember their approaching State Convention at Utica, Licking county, and pray for its success, appoint delegates, and make every preparation possible under the guidance of Divine Wisdom. Read the notice of the president, Dr. McClurkin and have it published in all the local papers so far as possible.

—In the midst of their revival work the College church at Wheaton does not forget its members now bearing the banner of Christ at the front. Brethren Hinman and Stoddard came up for remembrance last week and Dea. A. Austin was requested by the church to write in its behalf a letter to the former bearing a message of encouragement and remembrance.

—Seldom has a greater wretch expiated his crimes on the gallows than when, last week in Indianapolis, the drop fell under the feet of William Merrick. Last fall he murdered a young wife under circumstances of the greatest cruelty; and for this he was hung. But it is confidently stated that in 1861 when tried for the murder of a man from jealousy, he was acquitted by a jury packed by his attorneys with fellow-members of the "Knights of the Golden Circle." It is a question for doubters to answer, why the same may not now be done by the Freemasons, whose obligations require as much, certainly, as giving assistance to a member in trouble?

—Public opinion may not be where it should on the temperance reform, but no one who ever rode with a drunken conductor will hesitate to endorse the following terms on which the Chicago and Northwestern railroad company engages its men:

"I hereby agree and promise, that while I am in the employ of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad company, I will entirely abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors of every kind, including ale, beer and wine, and that I will not frequent dram shops, billiard saloons, or other places where such liquors are sold; and that I will refrain, from the use of profane, abusive and improper language, and will endeavor to treat everybody with all due respect and courtesy. Failing to keep these pledges, I shall expect to be discharged."

The superior management of this road is on every hand acknowledged, but to maintain this agreement must add lasting honor to the managers of the company and its employes. For the points reached by this road see the 16th page.

—Elder Freeman wishes to put a question to whomsoever it may concern. A good many of our readers can ask the same with nearly as good reasons. He asks: "Can it be expected that I, who have suffered persecution from Masonry for nearly fifty years, and known many others who have endured as much or more, and my father shot at for renouncing Masonry, and several others besides, should regard Masonry as not only harmless but benevolent and the handmaid of Christianity?"

—If our readers are wearied with the tedious homilies of the Good Templar ritual now appearing in our columns, let them blame the original compilers for it, and be warned at the same time to avoid the place where time is killed so unskillfully. But more than all, notice that these principles of morality are prepared for and recited to men without reference to the first principles of religion. Unregenerate persons are called upon to do such work as can be done only with the help of Christ, without reference to such Scriptures as "without me ye can do nothing." It treats the first principles of Christianity, as enforced by their great Author, as a matter of indifference, for whatever religious tenets the lodge holds must be acceptable to every one, saint or sinner. In brief, the temperance lodge undertakes to save men from a great sin by ignoring both the cause of sin and its only cure.

—The House last week passed a bill tending to oppose Chinese immigration. It is believed the bill can not be regarded as constitutional in the face of the Burlingame treaty, which must be modified before anything can be accomplished in restricting the influx of the Chinese. The bill has the appearance of a mere political trick, a document out of which to make political capital for the next general election. The California members of Congress were very active in the passage of the bill in the House.

MURDER!!

BIRMINGHAM, Iowa.

Enclosed find P. O. order of $4 50 for three new subscribers for one year each. I wish I could send you a hundred thousand. Masonry lives and fattens only on the popular ignorance of its principles. A muzzled pulpit and a muzzled press instead of being a blessing are an unmitigated curse. When will the citizens of this great nation come to see and appreciate the unwelcome fact that we are a lodge-ridden people and "govern themselves accordingly."

A prominent Mason here yesterday, in our house, said Ronayne ought to have been shot before he came here. He found fault with my family for "harboring" him as though he were a great criminal, and also said of a U. P. minister of this place (who is every way a high-toned, Christian gentleman, but an Anti-mason), "that he would rather see him die than any man he knew of." An institution that can thus imbue the hearts of its deluded devotees with the foul spirit of murder is unworthy of a place among civilized men, much less in a Christian church or in Christian pulpit.

Very truly yours,

J. N. NORRIS.

CORRECT.

The following important document though drawn up some time since is just as good as ever. It lately reached this office:

OAKLAND CITY, July 24, 1878.

We the undersigned citizens of Indiana certify to the public that we and each of us have been members of the Masonic fraternity, having been Master Masons. We have seen Mr. Edmond Ronayne exemplify the work of the three symbolic degrees and declare that he has given a correct exposition of Freemasonry as we received it in the lodges to which we severally belonged.

TO INDIANIANS.

To the Friends of the Anti-secret Cause in Indiana:

The executive committee hereby solicit invitations from different points to hold our next annual convention. Dear brethren, as we are engaged in the pulling down of the strongholds of the kingdom of Satan and the upbuilding of the kingdom of our dear Redeemer, go to work, consult together, and pray over the matter, and write to us at your earliest convenience. Give us all the particulars that would tend to make our meeting a grand success; give you access by rail, suitable hall or church house; whether or not you will furnish free entertainment; what you can do for us financially to defray the expenses of the convention and assist in State agent's salary, etc. We want to hold a meeting soon of the executive committee, and the above points will come up in determining the place for the next annual meeting. We have been invited to Spring Hill, Bartholomew Co., will Bro. Richie give us farther light on the above point? The State agent has suggested Delphi, will the friends there state what they will do to make the meeting a success? No doubt we will adopt Bro. Stoddard's time of holding the meeting if it does not conflict with some of our annual conferences or Friends yearly meetings. We want to commence in time and positively have Bros. Stoddard and Ronayne with us, Divine providence permitting. We want no more bad work in arranging with our speakers. We also want one or five hundred responses to my article a few weeks since in regard to the State agent's salary.

Fraternally yours in the good cause. GEO. W. CHAMP,

A Tammany leader said recently that the society is losing power because "the people are opposed to the rule of any secret society." This is not as true as it ought to be. The cost of membership is this secret society is great. The initiation fee is $25.00, and very many extra fees follow. Yet the rage for membership is great with young men, because they suppose it is the road to position and wealth. Mistaken souls! It is the road to the penitentiary and disgrace, as has been clearly proved. When will young men learn that they should shun such allurements as are offered by this political ring?

The history of Tammany is a good illustration of the tendency of secret societies. It was orignally chartered for benevolent purposes, as "for sick and indigent members and their widows and orphans." But what has been the great purpose of the society for years past but to foster fraud, crime, and misrule in the largest city in the nation? With such a warning before them, should not the American people look with suspicion upon all like societies, no matter what their charters may propose in the line of benevolence?—Telescope.

Vick's Monthly for February is the usual beautifully illustrated magazine of the flower and vegetable kingdom. Space is given to floral decorations, rockeries and garden houses, radishes, etc., all of value to those who seek either pleasure or profit in gardening. James Vick, Rochester, N. Y.

OBITUARY.

The press dispatches of last Tuesday told of the death of SAMUEL FRENCH of Chapin, Ill., who has for several years borne a prominent part in the reform in this State. He was a wealthy farmer, and through his influence the State Convention of two years ago was held at Jacksonville, near which city he resided. With the usual reticence of the press under the control of the lodge, nothing is said of Bro. French's character in this respect though his interest in temperance and other good works is noticed.

JOSEPH H. COLEMAN died at his home in Nemaha Co., Kansas, Dec. 20th, 1878, aged 63 years. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his loss, but they do not mourn as those who have no hope. He was converted when quite young and remained faithful all through life. He was an old settler of Kansas, having settled there in 1859. Mr. Coleman was a subscriber to the Christian Cynosure and an advocate of its principles for a number of years, always saying with the Apostle, "other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus our Lord."

E. AVERY.

SAMUEL CARTTER, born in Westfield, Mass., Sept. 9, 1789, died in Rice Co., Kan., Dec. 17, 1878, aged 89 years, 3 months and 8 days.

Father Cartter left Massachusetts in early life, and spent some years in New York; then came to Ohio, where he spent the greater part of his life and reared his family. He spent his latter years with his children, after the death of his companion.

Father C. was converted when twenty-five years of age, and was a faithful Christian for sixty-five years. He first joined the M. E. church. Previous to this he had joined the Masonic order, but was so disgusted with it that he never returned. When the Morgan tragedy occurred he joined in the Anti-masonic movement with all his energy, and carried his principles to his grave; he was never afraid to speak his sentiments, and requested his name placed on the list of seceders. In the uprising of the Wesleyan Methodist church he joined it and became identified with all the movements against slavery and secrecy. He was a fast friend of his church, and read its organ till the last. He professed sanctification and was happy all the time. He was ready for the chariots of Israel for years. On Sabbath before his decease he sent for me to administer the Sacrament to him, wishing to remember his suffering Lord even when he was dying. He had previously requested me to preach at his funeral, and now he gave me the text, Rev. 14: 13. He was quoting Scripture most of the time. A few moments before his departure, he said, "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace," and then without a groan or struggle he passed quietly away. Thus another Christian warrior and old reformer has left us. The Lord bless his children and his church. G. W. KELLER.

Church Rules for Ladies.

Dress hard all morning, such is fate,
Then enter church some minutes late.

All eyes will then be turned on you,
And will observe your bonnet new.

Let humble modesty wreathe your face,
And take your seat with faultless grace.

Let all your thoughts be turned on high,
And re-arrange your cardinal tie.

Put from your minds all thoughts of sin,
And re-adjust your diamond pin.

Catch well the precepts as they fall,
And smooth the wrinkles in your shawl.

Think of the sinner's awful fate,
And notice if your bonnet's straight.

Reflect on Christian graces dear,
And fix your curls beside your ear.

Think of the burdens Christians bear,
And notice those strange ladies there.

The last words hear with contrite heart,
And fix your pull-back when you start.

[From the Christian Statesman.]

The town of Montbelliard, meanwhile, was in a state of extreme agitation, the priests trembled for the duration of their power, and the courtiers who surrounded the young duke were afraid that the partiality he evinced for the reformed doctrines would draw upon him the wrath of the Catholic emperor. Ecolampadius wrote anxiously from Basle to his friend. "Be cautious," he entreated—"be cautious, my good Farel, and avoid giving unnecessary offence; for the times are evil."

Farel tried to follow this advice; he put a strong constraint upon the natural impetuosity of his temperament, and was cautious for a time, until circumstances broke down his artificial guard, and hurried his ardent nature along with them. One day on the eve of the feast of St. Anthony, he left the translation with which he was busy, and was walking slowly along the banks of a stream which flowed through the town, reading as he walked, when he met a large procession headed by priests. These men were carrying an image of the saint, whose feast day they were celebrating with all the pomp of the most idolatrous pageantry, with waving of flags and banners and loud prayers and chanting of hymns. Farel, forced to stand aside to let the procession past, felt a violent struggle going on in his soul. Should he pass on unheeding and be guilty of the blood of the innocent, deluded multitude, or should he stand forward boldly and bear witness for God?

He chose the latter course. Advancing hastily, he snatched the image from the arms of the priests and threw it into the stream, which was deep and rapid. Then turning to the people, he said, "Poor idolators, will you never leave off your worship of these false idols, which are powerless to save you?"

This rash action was at first succeeded by silent dismay, which soon changed into a tumult of outcry and fury. "The saint is drowning," shrieked the priests, and the crowd responded with yells and groans and cries, "to lift the holy hermit out of the water."

It seemed almost a miracle that Farel should escape, and yet he did so, or was supposed to do so; for he disappeared for a time, alike from the quest of his enemies and the anxious inquiries of his followers. Let us do what Ecolampadius and his other friends could not do; let us follow him in his flight. On the banks of the swift-flowing Rhone, under the icy shadows of the glaciers of Diablerets, stands the quiet town of Aigle—a quaint little town, belonging, with its four parishes and scattered chalets to Berne. It is situated in the most southern part of the Romande, or French speaking portion of Switzerland. In this remote country-town, a short time after the memorable eve of St. Anthony, a foreign schoolmaster arrived one wet, stormy night. Drenched with rain and covered with the mud and slime of the marshes through which he had waded, he seemed to the host of the small inn, at which he stopped for the night, the most miserable wretch he had ever seen. Next morning Magister Ursinus, for such was his name, hired for himself a lodging and opened his school. He was a small, pale man, of mean presence, with sparkling dark eyes and shaggy hair and beard of a deep red. It was Farel.

At first he was all prudence; he seemed to have abjured his nature, and to have received a baptism of meekness on that bloody eve of St. Anthony. For a time he conjoined in his behavior the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, humbly teaching the children sent to his school, and cautiously extending, by degrees, his instructions to their parents. Then, when school was over, he retired to his mean lodgings, and lost all consciousness of himself and his troubles in the absorbing pages of his Greek Bible.

After some months of quiet, useful labor, there came one day a packet from Berne for Magister Ursinus. He had collected a flock, he made many friends, the door seemed open; his natural impetuosity, repressed for so many months, revived in his breast; with all the fire of other days, flashing from his eyes, he tore off the mask he had worn so long, and proclaimed aloud, "I am William Farel, minister of the Word of God."

The schoolmaster, meek Magister Ursinus, was gone, to reappear no more. The packet which had been brought to Farel contained a license from the lords of Berne, authorizing him to teach and explain the Word of God. Armed with this authority, he ascended the pulpit, and preached with all his old fervor and eloquence. The magistrates and priests were filled with despair. Farel's was no unknown name. How were they to rid themselves and their town of this son of thunder?

"If this man continue preaching," cried the ecclesiastics in dismay, "it is all over with us and our benefices."

In their extremity they looked about for aid, and succeeded in inducing the baliff of the town and his inferior officers to espouse their cause. In defiance of the license of the lords of Berne, this officer and his subordinates, in order to do their priestly friends a pleasure, prohibited the minister from either preaching or teaching. Nothing daunted by this abuse of power, the standard bearer of the cross stood true to his colors, and continued at his post, until a second missive from the lords of Berne came to kindle the insubordinate little town into a blaze. This proclamation ordained that all the officers in the State should further the learned Farel in his attempts to propogate the Word of God. It was received with all the tokens of revolt; outcries and tumult filled the ordinarily peaceful town. Crowds from the four parishes, and from the isolated valleys of the Ormond, flocked into the marketplace, flourishing their swords and shouting, "Down with the lords of Berne! Down with Farel! Long live the priests!"

In Disguise.

"Who was that stranger in the pew before us this morning? She appeared so peculiar."

"She was a lady of high rank, but in disguise because she has many enemies."

"She did not seem like a person of high culture, or used to fashionable society."

"No, yet she is the richest woman that belongs to St. Paul's church."

"You surprise me; I wondered why she was in brother Wilson's pew, but supposed they only tolerated her rather than refuse her a seat."

"Brother Wilson feels honored by her company, and is one of the few who knows how immensely rich she is."

"But why does she try to keep it a secret, or dress so far below her means?"

"Wasn't she dressed becomingly for the worship of God?"

"Yes, but so plain."

"Did you see her pearl?"

"No; was it on breast, or in a ring?"

"She wears it on her heart, and is never without it."

"If it is valuable, is she not in danger of her life?"

"Yes, she has many enemies who try to get it, and she has been offered paste jewelry and pure gold enough to buy a city, but she will not part with it."

"Does her wealth consist in this one jewel?"

"Yes, and it is more conspicuous because of her plainness. She glories in it."

"But what is her rank; is she a princess, duchess, or a president's daughter?"

"She is a court lady and from her conversation is heir to a crown; but she is not of this nation and country and I have not learned the name of her domain; but as a surety for what she claims, she wears this one pearl to distinguish her. Wherever she goes there are a few who know this signet or seal and delight to do her honor. Brother Wilson is one who will vouch for all she says."

"What is between her and the crown?"

"The death of the old man; but she has crucified him and he must soon die."

"She is cruel then?"

"No; she only delights in holy, upright living and to this end is laboring to bring her body under. She has nailed herself to the cross, resolved to remain there till the King shall say, 'It is enough—come up higher.'"

"Thank you, Aunt Lucy, I see her wealth now—that she is rich in faith. I wish I had the resolution to wear the one great pearl."

"Won't you sell all and buy it? No other ornament would become you so well."

"I know there is something sublime in being a true Christian, but oh; the dying on the cross, the crucifying of the flesh."

"After the cross, the crown. After death, the judgment."—Selected.

Church steeples did not get much sympathy in the heroic days of Methodism. Bishop Asbury pays his compliments to a prospective steeple in the following style: "They have built a neat house in Lynn; but I am afraid of a steeple; and if they put this foolish addition, it must not be by Methodist order, or with Methodist money—they may pay for their own pride and folly." The plain old bishop would be amazed if he could see the many costly and pretentious "foolish additions" that tower above the roofs of the churches of modern Methodism.

As all political evils derive their original from moral, these can never be removed until those are amended. He therefore who strictly adheres to virtue and sobriety in his conduct, and enforces them by his example, does more real service to a state than he who displaces a minister or dethrones a tyrant; this gives but a temporary relief, but that exterminates the cause of the disease. No immoral man then can possibly be a true patriot; and all those who profess outrageous zeal for liberty and prosperity of their country, and at the same time infringe her laws, affront her religion, and debauch her people, are but despicable quacks, by fraud or ignorance increasing the disorders they pretend to remedy.—Soame Jenyns quoted by Dr. Johnson.

If God dries up the water in the lake, it is to lead you to the unfailing fountain. If he sends the cross, it is to sweeten the crown. For no cross, no crown; no rain, no rainbow.—Nottidge.

If infidelity succeeds in teaching a man that he will die like a beast, it will soon succeed in leading him to live like one.

Childrens' Corner.

The Flannel Night-Gown.

Lucy's mother was cutting out a flannel night-gown for her. Lucy stood at the table watching her mother's movements.

"Mother," she said at last, "will you not cut out one for some poor child, and let me make it?"

Her mother said, "Yes;" for she was sure there was some poor child waiting for it.

"Who?" asked Lucy.

Her mother did not know the child's name, but she said God did.

"And will God tell us?" asked Lucy.

"Yes," said her mother, "and when it is done we shall know."

The warm night-gown was cut out and Lucy took her work-basket and sat down to sew on it beside her mother. Those were pleasant hours, when mother and child sat and sewed and talked together. Lucy thought much about the poor child she was working for. Was she very cold in the cold, dark nights? Where did she live? Had she a mother? Did God tell her about this night-gown? Lucy had many thoughts stirring in her bosom. By and by it was finished, folded up and put away into Lucy's drawer.

One afternoon, not long after this, a neighbor came in and told a pitiful story of a poor family who lived down by the water. The father could get no work; the mother and one of the children were very sick.

"It's an awful winter for the poor," said the neighbor; "do go and visit this family."

Lucy's mother promised she would and in the afternoon she put on her cloak and hood to go and find them. Lucy went also. The house was very old and occupied by two or three families. On one side, which seemed to have been once used as a shop, they found the family they were in search of. How forlorn was the scene! In one corner was a bed covered with scanty clothing.

There were also a couple of old chairs and a table with a few cups and dishes where some soup had been. It was very cold, with hardly a stick of wood in the old rickety stove. Two children were on the floor—one gnawing a bone and the other munching a potato. The sick mother was in bed, with her almost dying child beside her.

Lucy's mother went to the side of the bed and spoke to the poor woman. How grateful to her were those words of kindness!

"Here is my poor Effie," said the sick mother, laying her pale hand on her sick child's head; "won't your little girl come and speak to Effie?"

Lucy came to the bedside and put a sweetcake in her hand. It was one Aunt Mary gave her and which had remained untasted in her pocket. How glad Lucy was! Effie took the cake and nodded her head, as much as to say, "Thank you, miss."

Lucy's mother asked her what she most wanted.

"Oh," said the poor woman, with tears in her eyes, "if I only had something warm to wrap round this poor child!"

"Lucy, you have a flannel night-gown for Effie, have you not?" asked Lucy's mother.

"Oh, yes, I have," cried Lucy, her eyes sparkling. "May I run home and fetch it?"

Her mother gave her leave. She soon came back with it in her arms. Oh, how glad was the sick mother—how glad the sick child! How comfortable she looked in the nice, new warm, flannel garment?

"God sent you here," said the woman, "for I told him all our wants."

As mother and daughter went home, "Effie was the very girl I made it for; wasn't she, mother?" said Lucy. "God knew."

"Yes," answered her mother, "God knows all the wants of the poor, and he can put the thoughts into our hearts of that which he knows will be best for them. We must ask God to teach us to know their wants; and if we really wish to help and comfort them, God will put it into our hearts to supply the wants he knows they have."

"But, mother, how shall I always know what God wants me to do? Will he always tell us?" asked Lucy.

"Do you not often know what I want without my having to tell you?" asked her mother.

"Oh, yes, mother, because I live with you, and of course I know."

"Not of course," answered the mother. Many persons might live with me who would not find out the things I most want without asking. Is there no other reason?"

"Why, mother, I know what you want of me a great many times, just because I love you so," said the little girl.

"Ah, that is it," said Lucy's mother. "You love me, and therefore you find out my wishes as far as you can. If you love God, you will quickly find out how to do his holy will; and if you love the poor, you will surely discover their wants, and learn how to comfort them. Every thing depends upon having a heart in the work."

Lucy thought much of what had happened, and it filled her little soul with awe that God had chosen her to make and carry a garment to one of his poor.—London Tract.

A Young Hero.

Nearly thirty years ago a boy who had given his heart to Christ joined the church and partook of the Lord's Supper with the older people.

The next day he went to school and at recess, some of those boys who carry the blood of old Cain in them formed a ring round him and cried out:

"O, here is a boy Christian!"

What did this boy do? Get mad, kick, strike, or say angry words? Not at all. He quietly looked the mocking boys in the face and said:

"Yes, boys, I am trying to be a Christian boy. Isn't that right?"

His tempters knew he was right and felt ashamed. They broke up the persecuting ring and went to play with the brave young Christian. I call him brave because there are many men who could easier storm a battery than stand to be mocked by the enemies of Jesus as meekly as that little boy did.

Where is that young hero of thirty years ago to-day? He is president of a college and preacher of the Gospel.

A Motherless Boy.

When I was a little child, said a good man, my mother used to bid me kneel beside her, and place her hand upon my head, while she prayed. Before I was old enough to know her worth she died, and I was left much to my own guidance. Like others, I was inclined to evil passions, but often felt myself checked, and as it were, drawn back by the hand of my mother upon my head. When I was a young man I traveled in foreign lands, and was exposed to many temptations; but when I would have yielded, the same hand seemed to be upon my head, and I was saved. I appeared to feel its pressure as in the days of my infancy, and sometimes there came a voice in my heart, a voice that must be obeyed, "O do not this wickedness, my son, nor sin against God!"

It is useless to talk about beginning to do better to-morrow; either begin to-day or say nothing about it.

Sabbath School.

LESSON VII —February 16, 1879— THE WAY OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 1:1-6.

Blessed is the man that walketh not in counsel of the ungodly,
Nor standeth in the way of sinners,
Nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.
But his delight is in the law of the Lord;
And in his law doth he meditate day and night.
And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water,
That bringeth forth his fruit in his season;
His leaf also shall not wither;
And whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

The ungodly are not so;
But are like the chaff which the wind
driveth away.
Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment,
Nor sinners be in the congregation of the righteous.
For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous:
But the way of the ungodly shall perish.

BIBLE READINGS.

Ps. 91:1-16——Ps. 119 97-120——Deut. 28:1-14——Rom. 3:10-23——Job 24:1-24——Mat. 25:24-46——Prov. 10:1-32.

STEPS TO THE LESSON.

[From Scholar's Handbook.]

This first Psalm is usually regarded as a preface, or introduction, to the book of the Psalms. It has no title and no hint as to author or date. It has been commonly assigned to David. Book of Psalms is the "Psalter" or book of praise for the world. The Hebrew name of the book is Tehillim or Sepher Tehillim, "Book of Praises;" the Greek name is Psaltirion or "Psalter," and Psalmoi, or Psalms. The Hebrews anciently divided them into five books: the first book had 41 Psalms; the second, 31; the third, 17; the fourth, 17; and the fifth, 44. An old tradition of the Hebrews holds that 73 Psalms were written by David, 2 by Solomon, 12 by Asaph, 12 by the sons of Korah, 1 by Ethan, 1 by Moses, and that 49 were anonymous. Fifty of the Psalms are without a title or heading, and some comparatively later writers suppose that these Psalms were composed or compiled by Ezra or Nehemiah. The composition of the book extends through 1000 years of Hebrew national life. The subjects of the Psalms have been divided into six groups: 1. Prayers; 2. Thanksgiving; 3. Praise and Adoration; 4. Instructive Psalms; 5. Prophetical; 6. Historical. The greatest number of Psalms are in groups 1 and 3. A large number of the Psalms are called Messianic, because they refer to the coming and reign of Christ.

NOTES.

"Rivers of water." In Palestine, during several months of summer, rain does not fall. Many of the streams dry up. There are a few perennial streams which always flow. Along these the trees flourish, even in the worst of drought. And the waters from the rivers were diverted into small channels for the irrigation of orchards and gardens, which were thus kept fresh, as they are about Damascus to this day. "Chaff." Eastern threshing floors are put upon an exposed point where the wind has wide sweep. The threshed wheat is tossed into the air, and the grain falls to the floor, while the chaff is driven away by the wind.

[From S. S. Union Advanced Paper.]

POINTS FOR SPECIAL STUDY.

1. The several authors and divisions of the Book of the Psalms. 2. The poetry of the Psalms. 3. The theology of the Psalms. 4. Their special fitness for use in sacred song. 5. The longest and shortest Psalms. 6. Prophetical Psalms. 7. Historical Psalms. 8. Penitential Psalms. 9 Psalms specially adapted for comforting the sorrowful. 10. The rivers and vegetation of the Holy Land. 11. Chaff as a symbol of worthlessness. 12. The Bible Readings.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. The godly man is the happy man.

2. Negative goodness is not enough. "I do not walk, stand, sit," etc. (v. 1), one may say. "But is your delight," etc. (v. 2). Are you a tree planted, rightly planted, fruitful? (v. 3).

3. There is symmetry in a good character. A saint is in a good place (Ps. 92:13), of a good stock (John 15:1, 2), with a good name—"a professing Christian"—and with more than profession, "fruit in season."

4. The righteous and the wicked are confounded here, because some deceive and man cannot "know" (v. 6) as God does, but the day will declare the difference.

5. There is a judgment day in the Old as truly as in the New Testament.

6. To be truly happy, we must begin with God, receive his word, trust him in Christ, so receive a new nature and walk with him. Good works come from a nature made good, as fruit from the tree.

7. The love of God implies the hatred of sin.

8. "Trees of righteousness" need the rivers of water; they bear fruit, not of themselves, but because they are nouriished by the word, sacraments, and prayers, through the grace of the Holy Ghost.

Religious Intelligence.

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Congregational church, Hamilton, Miss., August 25th, 1878.

Pleasant Ridge Congregational church, Sanford Co., Ala., September, 1878.

New Hope Methodist church, Lowndes Co., Miss., October, 1878.

Congregational church, College Springs, Iowa, Dec. 7. 1878.

College Church of Christ, Wheaton, Ill., Jan. 4. 1879.

In noticing the vote of the College Springs church to place itself with the Associated Churches of Christ, the American Freeman takes occasion to say:

"Why do not all churches opposed to secretism send in their names as members of this alliance for work against the lodge and for missions which do not perpetuate paganism with one hand while working against it with the other? The new alliance seems perfectly Scriptural, and when a little further advanced can systematize church work against the lodge so as to make it a strong power, both by its direct effort and its indirect influence on other churches and missionary societies.

"That the lodge is a direct and deadly antagonist to the church none will deny who have given the matter candid thought or have passed through battles like those mentioned in our 'Reform Notes' of this and the preceding issues. It is almost startling to notice how the main features of these church difficulties (we have in mind three in as many States,) are always the same. They can but have the same author — the common foe of Christ and his church. Against it we must present a UNITED front. Churches and individuals must co-operate against the one enemy of all. The present plan seems the best that can be devised, and we again commend it to the careful consideration of every church member, with the hope and belief that the day is not far distant when the church will stand against the lodge as she now does against the grog-shop, and when the Masonic missionary will be with the saloonist under the ban of public opinion, if not of civil law."

FREE MISSIONS

—The ladies of the College Church, Wheaton, sent a well packed barrel to Bro. Tapley of Columbus, Miss, last week. The letter from Mrs. T. acknowledging the box from the Chicago Christian Association, will be of great interest. We give extracts:

"MY VERY DEAR SISTER C.:—With a happy heart I seat myself to acknowledge your kindness. The box is received. Accept and present our warmest thanks to all who contributed, or in any way assisted in sending it. Every article was highly prized, not only for the real value, but as coming from those who sympathize with us in the work here and love the same cause. A place will be found for all. My husband was very much pleased with the clothing sent to him and the books and papers. He had been long wanting some supplements. My dress is the exact article. Thank you for your thoughtful consideration in particulars and suggestions. The home knit gloves were highly appreciated. I had only $1 45 with which to arrange New Year's gifts for the children (we never pay any attention to Christmas) and neither flour nor sugar to make them cakes, but the box supplied the deficiency, and they were very happy; and when the usual excitement of the morning had somewhat subsided, while we knelt around the family altar and Mr. T. remembered those who had aided us, his voice faltered with deep emotion. I can assure you these things will add greatly to our comfort. The overcoat and supplements were in immediate requisition. In the list of contributors we recognized names already held in regard on account of their gifts and labors in the cause of reform as seen in the Cynosure. Sister Isabella has had great success with her school. Fairs and plays are having a very injurious influence among the colored people, and she is endeavoring to make some profitable substitute. She is very happy in her work."

WESLEYAN.

—Editor Stratton of the Wesleyan, Syracuse, was permitted by his physician to visit his office last Wednesday after about a fortnight's sickness.

—Bro. C. F. Hawley is assisting Rev. O. White in revival meetings in Western New York.

—Rev. A. D. Carter of Deersville, Ohio, is giving aid to Rev. L. W. Krahl at Ontario, in the same State, during a revival.

—Revivals are reported at Armenia, Hess Road, Stockholm, and Eagle Harbor, N. Y.; Alexandria, Ohio; Harmon, Ill.; and Ironton, Wis.

BAPTIST.

—Elder Joel H. Austin, pastor of the Spring Creek Baptist church near Burlington, has resigned. The resignation has been accepted by the church to take effect on the last Lord's day in March next.

Elder Austin's pastorate has been a successful one and the work and increase of the church while under his watch-care will compare favorably with its work under any former pastor. His resignation was presented in the most kindly Christian spirit and so accepted by the church. A committee has been appointed to take measures looking toward securing a successor to Bro. Austin.

The recorded testimony of the church is very positive in regard to secretism, as follows.

"WHEREAS, Christians are children of the light and of the day, and

"WHEREAS, The command of Christ is 'Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven.' Therefore

"Resolved, That we hold it to be inconsistent with the Christian profession to have any connection with secret associations.

"Resolved, That we hold it to be the duty of every Christian to lift up the voice of testimony against all forms of secret oath-bound societies and orders, as ensnaring in their nature, pernicious in their tendency and perilous to the liberties of both church and state."

Any Baptist minister in good standing, who can heartily subscribe to the above resolutions and who desires any further information in regard to the Spring Creek Baptist church with a view to becoming its pastor can be accommodated by addressing P. O. Box 528, Burlington, Iowa.

—Rev. A. R. Medbury, whose essay before the Wisconsin Baptist Union in October last, has aroused some attention, has lately resigned his pastorate over a Milwaukee church.

—Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D.D., has been suspended by the New York Baptist conference in a moment of personal spite. The particulars are carefully suppressed, but this is not the first nor the second time that Dr. Fulton has been made to suffer by the action of his brethren. He may deserve it; but his positive character and strong opposition to ministerial trimmers, as well as his position against the lodge incline us to the opinion that his case may be less desperate than represented.

—A correspondent informs us that several of the members of the ex-parte council which reported so slanderously upon the character of Elder Joel H. Austin, of Burlington, Iowa, have since that time left the churches to which they were ministering. Dr. Whiting, the moderator of the council, has resigned at Quincy; Rev. R. King has left Danville and Rev. John Davies, Riverton, Iowa. The former personally disclaims any connection with the lodge, nor do we know that either has had any closer relation to the order than to assist Freemasons in blackening the character of an innocent man, so far as the evidence presented is concerned.

—Rev. Samuel Baker, Jr., who has ministered to the church at Wheaton, Ill., for some two years has resigned to accept a call to Austin, nearer Chicago. He preached his farewell sermon last Sabbath.

ADVENT.

—At the late meeting of the Bible Banner publishing association at Providence, R. I., the proposition was discussed to remove that paper from Philadelphia to Chicago, and the change will be accomplished if the supporters of the paper raise a small fund. Rev. A. A. Phelps, the evangelist, is editor, and rendered good service on committees at the late National Convention at Worcester.

FREE METHODIST.

—The church in Cincinnati has long worshiped in an inconvenient hall, but recently Mrs. E. Hathaway has purchased a substantial brick church building the use of which she has given to the church, and may give the deed. The building cost $3,300 and is 32 by 60 feet, located on Plumb street, between Second and Front.

—A call is made for a Free Methodist church at Long Branch, the fashionable New Jersey summer resort. A number of Christians who have received a baptism of the Holy Spirit reside there, who have to endure persecution because of their testimony.

—Revivals are reported at Waverly, Neb., Waterloo and Osage, Iowa, and Atkinson, Ill.

—Rev. C. G. Coffee of Plymouth, Iowa, writes to the Free Methodist of the work in Dakota. At Scotland, Dak., during revival meetings the following incident occurred: "The work is going well; the light is shining on the sins of the people; and the sin of Freemasonry does not escape. At the sacramental service at Scotland, I invited Freemasons to come to the altar, if by so doing they wished it understood that they renounce the lodge. One, who had gone high in the sublime things of Masonry, came to the table, and after service said to me, "Now I am through," meaning, I suppose, that he had broke his "cable tow." He has since joined the F. M. church. Thus the work goes in Dakota. To God be all the glory."

GENERAL.

—According to the London World the observance of Christmas is falling into neglect in England, as theologians have discovered that there is nothing distinctively Christian about it.

—The Illustrated Christian Weekly says: "An Italian medical society has requested the papers to cease reporting suicides, convinced that the publicity tends to increase the number of self-murderers. We have little doubt that it is also true in this country."

—Travel on the Lord's day, says the Baptist Weekly, has always been opposed by the Presbyterians of Scotland, with great unanimity and earnestness, but at length a break has been made on this point. A report has been submitted to the Glasgow Established Presbytery declaring that in the altered condition of modern society it is expedient, for works of necessity and mercy or for persons coming from the suburbs into town for Divine worship, that tram cars within assignable limits should be run. It is pointed out that there should not be one law for the rich and another for the poor, so that the former should use private carriages and cabs while the latter are debarred from cheaper conveyances. The Presbytery, by a majority of nine votes, adopted the report. This is the first time, in any Scotch Ecclesiastical Court, that a motion favorable to the use of conveyances on Sunday has been passed. It is claimed to indicate a growing latitudinarianism in the state church of Scotland.

—Prof. D. W. Simon of Birmingham, England, refers in a letter from the Continent to some of the more hopeful features of the present religious condition of Germany. "One of these," he says is a growing and deepening conviction, on the part of even free-thinkers and unbelievers, that some sort of religion is absolutely necessary, if the nation is to retain its moral standard and character, and its interest in the higher forms of human life. The journals and newspapers that are most ready to rail at the various churches and orthodoxies, express a sense of dismay at the increasing materialism of the day, and declare a revival of religion to be the only thing that can idealize and ennoble the life. But when it comes to defining what religion is, all are at sea....Of the supernatural they will hear nothing; a prayer hearing and answering God is a stumbling block; a crucified Redeemer is a folly as great as ever it was to the Greeks, and when one asks, as I have done, 'What then is to act on the minds of the people? There must surely be something outside themselves that can be brought to bear on them. What is it?' The reply is: 'Religion, religion.'" The most encouraging feature, however, is the progress of Sabbath-schools and kindred institutions, and what is connected with them. According to the most recent statistics, there are at present in Germany, 1,977 Sabbath-schools, with 8,325 Sabbath school teachers and 162,251 Sabbath scholars. To those who witnessed the beginning of this movement fifteen years ago, and who were acquainted with the difficulties to be overcome, its progress seems very noteworthy.

News of the Week.

—The investigation of Major Reno's conduct at the battle in which Custer was massacred is yet dragging slowly along. The testimony is quite favorable to that officer. The Congressional committee on the case of Judge Blodgett of the United States district court, began here last week. The prosecution is bringing forward strong testimony, but it is yet too early to judge of the case. Judge Blodgett is assisted by four able lawyers, among them Judge Trumbull, ex-Senator.

—The produce trade of Chicago for 1878 amounted to $219,700 000; the wholesale trade to $280 000.000; the manufactures to $230,000,000. The entire export trade of France amounts to about $700,000,000 annually, and that of England (home products) to $1,000,000,000. Americans growled because we had to pay England $5,500.000 on the award of the Fishery Commission. Chicago sold fruit enough last year to pay the whole bill. Our fish trade amounted to $1,400.000, and our oyster trade to $4,500,000. The two together would have paid the fisheries award bill, with nearly half a million dollars to spare. The trade in breadstuffs amounted to $71,620,-000, that in live stock to $98,300,-000, and that in butter and cheese to $18,000,000. Included in these three items is money enough to buy all the outstanding 4 per cent bonds. —Inter-ocean.

—The oyster schooner Adamantine has been found near Baltimore sunk in the bay. Her captain, Horace Parker, of Philadelphia, was lashed to the topmast, and the bodies of nine men, composing the crew, were lashed to the deck, which was several feet under water. The inhabitants of Smith island saw the wreck on the morning of January 2, but owing to the rough weather were unable to get out to it, although the captain was seen signalling from the topmast, where was lashed.

—The train which left South Bethlehem on the North Pennsylvania railroad Friday evening was wrecked at Iron Hill station. The entire train, which was well filled with passengers, returning from Dr. Linderman's funeral, was thrown from the track, but no one was killed.

—The Louisville almshouse, situated five miles south of the city, was entirely destroyed by fire, the origin of which is unknown, last Friday. Three hundred and forty persons were in the place at the time, nearly all of whom escaped. The scene is described as horrible in the extreme, but the most marvellous feature is the small loss of life attending it. Four persons perished and two severely injured. Nearly all the inmates were aged invalids, imbeciles and cripples. There were more colored persons than any other class, yet, strange to say, none were seriously injured. Their ages ranged from 108 years to 50.

—Last Thursday morning a terrible boiler explosion occurred at Secor, Woodford county, Ill. The saw and grist mill of L. Gassner, which has long done a good business, was almost totally destroyed instantaneously, timbers and boards being thrown a quarter of a mile by the explosion of the boiler. Four persons were instantly killed, their bodies being horribly mutilated, and one thrown three hundred feet through the air.

—An Iuka, Miss., special says: At seven o'clock Tuesday evening this place was visited by a terrible storm. It came from the southwest and took a northeasterly course, striking the southeastern part of the town on a hill mostly occupied by colored people, instantly killing one colored woman and her child, and four other colored children, two of whom were not found until yesterday and then a quarter of a mile from home. The head of one was severed from his body. Eight other colored persons were wounded, one of whom died last Wednesday morning.

—The New York Tribune says, that "Senator Platt, of Connecticut, about thirty years ago, was principal of an academy in Pennsylvania. His predecessor in that position was Mr. Henry M. Hoyt. Curiously enough on Tuesday Mr. Hoyt was inaugurated as Governor of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Platt was elected Senator of the United States."

—The new capitol building at Albany is a vast pile. The other night, when a fire occurred in some part of it, the firemen lost their way in its labyrinthine turns and could neither find the fire nor their way out. Millions of dollars have been expended in bringing the building to its present state of completion, making it suitable for the occupation of the legislature; and, it is said, it will require over $4,000,000 to finish it.

—As showing the state of poverty at present existing in Berlin, M. Zimmerman, a member of the German Parliament, has pointed out, that in the course of one year two hundred thousand persons have been prosecuted for non-payment of income tax; and that in the great majority of cases, seizure of the effects of the defaulters yielded nothing. More than one hundred and twenty thousand persons were prosecuted for having failed to pay their rent.

—Gen. T. L. Rosser, assistant engineer of the Northern Pacific, has arrived at Bismarck, Dak., to resume the construction of that road. The contractors, Walker, Beliens & Co., are expected this week, and work on the extension will be inaugurated at once. The railroad company will erect a temporary bridge over the Missouri for the immediate transportation of ties and iron. Nearly 500 tons of iron were purchased in Springfield, Ill., by Rosser, deliverable in Minneapolis on the cars, at $39 per ton. Shipments of this iron will begin this week. Ten pile bridges over the circuitous Heart river will be put in this winter, which will be the principal work of the contractors before spring. The company have purchased 9,000 tons of steel rails for the Minnesota division, from Sauk Rapids to Fargo. They will be put down early in the season, making one of the finest roads in America. The division west of Bismarck will be named Missouri.

—If a Russian steamer has made its way up the river Oxus, beyond the Afghan frontier, the stories as to the return of that river to the old channel to the Caspian may be considered as having a basis of truth. The Oxus flows through Afghan Turkestan, or that part of Afghanistan north of the Hindoo Koosh mountains, which English writers concede must ultimately become Russian. If the Oxus has been turned into the old Caspian channel and Russian vessels are already on the upper river, there is water communication between the commercial towns of the Oxus Valley and the towns on the Volga and Ural, in European Russia.—Inter-Ocean.

LONDON, Jan. 23—A dispatch from Copenhagen says: "It is feared that a general commercial collapse is imminent in Sweden. Further failures are daily expected, and thousands of persons have been thrown out of employment."

Rev. Lyman Abbott is writing Notes on the Gospel of John, which will form the fourth volume of his popular Commentary on the New Testament, for Christian workers and families. Abbott's Notes on Matthew, Mark and Luke, and the Acts, form the preceding three volumes of this series, the whole of which is in process of publication by the house of A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

Illinois Year Book and Almanac for 1879 is a useful compendium of political and other information, comprising election returns, court calendars, names of judges, synopsis of laws, national and State officials, and many interesting statistics relative to the city governments, etc., not forgetting the lodges. The National Christian Association is mentioned in the local history for 1878, thanks to Mr. Gassette, the editor, who is a leading Mason of this city. Published by Donnelly, Gassette and Loyd, Chicago; price 25cts.

The February number of the "North American Review" opens with an article by Senator Hoar on "The Conduct of Business in Congress," which calls attention to defects in the present system of transacting business in the national legislature and suggests improved methods. This is followed by a paper on "The Mysteries of American Railroad Accounting," by "An Accountant," showing how the most popular railway enterprises are conducted and urging an immediate revision of the laws bearing upon railway management. "A Statesman of the Colonial Era," by Gen. Richard Taylor, describes the career of George Mason, of Virginia, and attributes to that gentleman many saying and writings that have hitherto been credited to other men. Hon. D. H. Chamberlain writes on "Reconstruction and the Negro," and presents the results of his experiences and observations while occupying the gubernatorial chair in South Carolina. "The Empire of the Discontented," by a "Russian Nihilist," is a revelation of the abuses of the Russian rule, and of the influences at work to overthrow the government. The author is a prominent leader of the insurrectionists. "The Scientific Work of the Howgate Expedition," by O. T. Sherman, of the scientific corps, gives a very full statement, and the only one that has been presented to the public, of the scientific results of the recent government preparatory expedition to the polar seas. "Sensationalism in the Pulpit," by Rev. Dr. Taylor of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, is a pungent criticism of the theatrical tendencies of certain preachers. The number closes with an article by Prof. T. F. Crane on "Mediaeval French Literature," reviewing a class of books known to but few readers in this country.

Published at 551 Broadway, New York, and for sale by booksellers and newsdealers generally, at 50 cents per copy.

Home and Farm.

Feeding Roots to Stock.

Intelligent farmers, without an exception, admit the great value of roots of various kinds for feeding stock in winter. That all farmers do not provide a full supply of this this kind of food is also very probable, owing to negligence or ignorance respecting the best methods of cultivation. In Europe the feeding of roots is far more general than in the United States; which is in part due to necessity, owing to the limited supplies of hay and grain, but mainly to a long acquaintance and general appreciation of the value of such crops. The quantity of food that can be produced on an acre of land in beets, carrots, turnips and similar roots is vastly greater than is possible with any of the ordinary forage plants. Even were it possible to produce dry fodder in as large quantities and at less than it costs to raise roots, it would not in the least detract from the value of the latter or render them any less important additions to the general food supply, for that which is the cheapest or the most nutritious may not always be the most healthful.

The constant and long continued feeding of dry fodder to stock often produces constipation and a general debility of the digestive organs, followed by various diseases common to domestic animals. And the prevalence of such diseases during the winter months among cattle fed wholly upon dry food is one of the strongest arguments that could be offered in favor of a mixed diet of roots and dry fodder. Sudden changes from soft, succulent food to dry, or the reverse, are also injurious to the digestive organs; and cattle taken in from the pasture should receive rations of roots for a few weeks, or until they become accustomed by gradual dimunition of the green food to live upon the dry alone. The same course should be pursued in spring, by supplying some kind of green or soft food for several weeks, before turning out to pasture. The better system is to have roots enough to give rations of them daily throughout the entire winter, feeding more freely to cows giving milk than to those that are dry. Sheep may be wintered almost entirely roots and straw, and come out in the spring healthy and fat. But a little care is sometimes necessary in feeding turnips; for, if given too freely to ewes with lamb, the large amount of water in this root will sometimes produce scours and even cause abortion.

The quantity of roots to be fed daily to stock must vary in accordance with their nutritive properties. For instance, the amount of nutritive matter in 1,000 pounds of the common white turnip is only about forty-two pounds, or a little over four per cent. In the Swedish turnip it is about sixty-four, while in the mangel-wurzel beet it is one hundred and thirty-six, according to an analysis by Sir Humphrey Davy. The sugar beet contains considerably more nutritive matter than the mangel, but the yield per acre is somewhat less; consequently, what is gained in quality is lost in quantity. Carrots and parsnips are still more abundant in nutritive properties; but more expensive, as they require richer soil and greater care in cultivation. But, being worth more for feeding than the larger kinds, they may be considered equally profitable to the farmer. Turnips are the easiest to raise and the least in value of all the ordinary roots generally cultivated upon the farm; but as they are far better than no roots, we cannot urge too strongly their cultivation to farmers who think they have little time to devote to the production of such crops.

Every paper in the United States ought occasionally to keep the fact before its readers, that burnt corn is a sure and speedy cure for hog cholera. The best way is to make a pile of corn on the cob, effectually scorch it, and then give the hogs free access to it. This remedy was discovered by E. E. Locke, Esq., at the time his distillery was burnt in this county, together with a large quantity of store corn, which was so much injured as to be unfit for use, and was hauled out, and greedily eaten by the hogs, several of which were dying daily. After the second day not a single hog was lost, and the disease entirely disappeared. The remedy has been tried in a number of cases since, and never failed.—Lewistown Gazette.

A correspondent in the Country Gentleman sends this formula of a cement for invisible patches which he says may be relied on: Gutta percha, half ounce; bi-sulphuret of carbon, two ounces. In a wide mouth bottle put the two together, and shake occasionally until the gutta percha is dissolved and it is ready for use. When the patch is to be applied scrape the boot or shoe until the blacking is off and the leather is a little rough. On this dust with fine rosin, minutest quantity; serve the patch the same way. Then spread a little of the cement on both the shoe and the patch, first having shaved the edges of the patch. Apply like court plaster, and smooth with a warm spoon or iron and the shoe will soon be ready to wear. A few hours will harden the cement. When properly done the patch will be invisible and will last as long as the shoe. This cement is waterproof. The gutta percha shaved to thin slices, is kept in India rubber stores for the above purposes. Ten cents' worth will do the work of a family for a long time. The bi-sulphuret of carbon is sold by druggists, and will cost five or ten cents an ounce. The smell, which is offensive soon passes off.

Gain..... 154

Whole number renewals received during week ending Jan. 29th, 101. New subscriptions for same time, 107. Discontinuances keep down the subscription list somewhat; however all must be encouraged at the decided gain in our subscription list last week.

On for the Ten Thousand!

J H Hanna, Pittsburgh, Pa., sends twelve subscriptions for one year each. He writes: "There should be at least fifty from this vicinity and I think you would secure even more, if the work of canvassing was in the hands of one who could and would exert himself judiciously." Mr. Hanna's active business life prevents his doing all that he could wish in this work. Let us pray that God will qualify some one to supplement Mr. Hanna's efforts and extend the list of subscribers in Pittsburgh and Allegheny.

J H Wilcox, Howell, Mich., sends for seven copies of the Cynosure for one year each and writes: "I hope I may be able to send you more." He closes, "Hoping you may succeed in raising the ten thousand and that the CAUSE may prosper."

J S Gard, Warren, Huntington county, Ind., sends seven subscriptions for one year each and writes: "I am going around again. I intend to do all I can for the circulation of the Cynosure.

D. H. Rogers, Parma, Mich., sends four subscriptions for one year each, and one for six months. He writes: "I want to call on some more friends in hope of getting some more names. * * You can count me a subscriber as long as I live."

Mrs. M. M. Ames, Menomonee, Wis., sends four subscriptions for one year and writes: "It cost some hard work to get some of these names but good will surely result."

J. H. Van Schaick, Sharon, Wis., sends four subscriptions for one year each.

Enos Collins and L. Taft, New London, Waupaca county, Wis., send two subscriptions for one year each, two for six months each and one for three months each. Mr. Collins writes: "We calculate to enter more fully into the work for the Cynosure. This is a hard field to labor in for secrecy has a strong hold but there are many who do not belong to any secret order. * * By the help of God and the Cynosure, and some of your tracts, and the prayers of all good Christians everywhere we expect to conquer yet."

A. Williams, Libertyville, Jefferson county, Iowa, sends two subscriptions for one year each and one for six months.

H. W. Marsh, Elmwood, Ill., sends three more subscriptions for one year each, and writes: "I am doing all I can to get subscribers."

John Harper, Smithfield, Peoria county, Ill.; Calvin Marshall, Stanford, Marshall county, Iowa; J. M. Kirkpatrick, Utica, Ohio; Audrew Stevens, Footville, Wis., and Rev. Joseph H. Markey, Strafford, Ohio, all send three subscriptions for one year each.

Jas. Craig, Lima, Ind., sends for two copies for sixteen months each.

Joel H. Austin, Burlington, Iowa, sends two for one year each and one for four months.

Eighteen persons send two subscriptions for a year each, and eleven send two or three for shorter periods.

Do you Expect to Secure the 10,000?

This is the question a friend occasionally asks us. And now we ask it of every reader of the Cynosure—DO YOU EXPECT TO SECURE THE 10,000 SUBSCRIBERS?

What sane person would start for his field or barn, if a farmer; his office or store, if a commercial man; who would start for the post-office or church or the house of a friend, and expect to stop half way? God in his Providence might stop such an one; but sensible people starting for any point expect to reach it. The Cynosure passed its tenth anniversary the 3d of last October. Will the friends who, more than ten years ago, longed to have a paper "ably edited and widely circulated," making opposition to secret societies a speciality, rest contented to have the subscription list continue to vibrate between three and five thousand? Will those whose righteous souls are daily vexed with the idolatry, blasphemy and immorality of the secret orders, with their anti-social, selfish, un-American principles; will those who are now refreshed weekly with the purifying, life-promoting utterances of the Cynosure, allow this year of the circulation of the Cynosure to close without a subscription list of at least ten thousand? From a thousand voices we imagine we hear trembling along the cords of an invisible telephone, no! NO! NO!

One or two friends, a few weeks ago, when attention was called to the question at the head of this article, responded, rubbing up their drowsy ideas on the subject, "Oh, no, but I think it is a good thing to aim at 10,000." Your list will probably be larger than it would be if you asked for a smaller number." Banish such thoughts. Abandon the style of canvassing which is the index of such thoughts. Let us not say 10,000 and think, act and breathe five thousand. If we mean ten thousands subscribers before the Cynosure is eleven years old, let us say it, act it, breathe it. The enlarged circulation of the Cynosure is not a need whose importance is urged simply because the publishers want money to pay the Cynosure's bills, although this is an important fact which average common sense can appreciate.

The general and alarming inroads which secret societies are making in the executive, judicial and legislative departments of government call loudly, imperatively upon patriots to circulate the Cynosure.

The persecution of patriots and Christians who with heart, hand and voice attempt to benefit their country and bless their fellow-men by protecting them from the subtle and deadly operations of the secret lodge, these persecutors of patriots and Christians put upon you the necessity of circulating the Cynosure.

The secret lodges, by their bold corruption and increasing impiety, force upon us the importance of it. Persecutors of those who use the right of free speech urge it. Enlightened patriotism and Christianity demand it. But beneath and above these agencies, which should force activity upon all who see the foul institution of Masonry, by means of its advocates, blighting truth, purity and justice, preaching damnable heresies to immortal men (advocates who neither enter heaven themselves nor allow those who would do so to enter), beneath and above all these agencies we seem to hear the voice of God saying, "Cry aloud, spare not; * * show my people their transgression." (Is. 58: 1.)

In what more effective way can this command be obeyed than by enlarging the circulation of the Cynosure? Friends who pray, still continue to ask God to increase the number of those who read the Cynosure. Friends who work, labor for TEN THOUSAND.

Stephen Waite, New Bedford, Mass., sends one new subscription and writes: "I believe this is the fourth or fifth subscription I have secured within ten days. I tell some persons that I will take the price of the paper out of their stores, so as to get them interested in the paper."

M. Liscomb, Flint, Mich., writes: "I have been so engaged in building a new house this fall that I have not had time to work for the reform as I intended to do. But I am now about through so that I intend to work for the Cynosure in the month of February."

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

☞ We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertainment will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLUSKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 18, 1879.

All delegates to the Ohio Convention are requested to forward their names by card to James M. Kirkpatrick of Utica, a few days before the meeting, and entertainment will be provided.

Papers friendly to the reform in Ohio are requested to copy the above notices.

ELDER D. P. RATHBUN is announced to lecture and work the degrees of Freemasonry at Birmingham, Iowa next week Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 18th to 20th.

DR. S. L. COOK, of Indiana, during March and April wishes to visit the counties south and west of Indianapolis. He requests friends in that part of the State to write him immediately and arrange for lectures.

Topics of the Time.

Ex-Senator Tipton, of Nebraska, is lecturing on: "Bob Ingersoll's Government without a God." His lecture is said by a correspondent to be very able, a perfect Ingersoll-killer, and convincing in its proofs that this government is and always has been Christian and not heathen. Some of our treaties with foreign powers begin with, "In the name of the Trinity" and "in the name of the undivided Trinity," which unmistakably points to the Christian's God. In our last treaty with China we require the Chinese government not only to protect our missionaries in China, but also any of its own subjects who may become Christian. While our government claims no allegiance of a Chinaman in China, yet if he becomes a Christian there, the United States extends over him her protecting hand, because she is a Christian nation, and hence has a peculiar interest in Christians, even of other lands.

While the committee from Congress which concluded their review of Judge Blodgett's case in this city last week, found little on which to bring charges against him, another committee in New York was questioning Samuel J. Tilden, his nephew Pelton and his esquire Marble on the celebrated cypher dispatches which were given to the world through the New York Tribune. The examination of Pelton, who was also Mr. Tilden's confidential secretary and secretary of the Democratic National Committee brought out evidence proving these dispatches, which the party managers have denied from every quarter of the heavens. Pelton offers himself as the scape goat for this whole infamous business of buying the office of President for Tilden; but the ruse is not successful in the face of all the proof of his friendly relations with Tilden during all the transaction of this business, which was part of the time conducted from Tilden's own residence. The nation has looked on while politicians have mounted to office by means that only fell short of open bribery and was thrilled when a Freemason attempted to draw a bribe from a Senator in Kansas. But with what dread and horror should we view this attempt to bribe the electoral commission and buy the office of President with money! We are not too far gone to demand severe punishment for such crimes, but are powerless to enforce it.

Knight Templar Conkling has been unhorsed at last. For six years he has ruled New York politics and imagined there was nothing beyond worth fighting for but the Presidency. His defeat in the nominating convention at Cincinnati in 1876 embittered him against Blaine, his strongest rival; and Hayes, the successful candidate. Toward the latter his hostility has passed into the chronic and incurable stages, and every supposed interference in New York affairs arouses every element of his nature. The present administration had not long been in office before the gross abuses of the New York Custom House were urged upon its attention. Here more than two-thirds of the customs revenues of the government are collected, and with its hundreds of employes and far-reaching commercial influence this office became a great political machine. Its officers were removed, but Conkling resented the interference, rallied the Senate and Pres. Hayes' nominations were not confirmed. Last summer they were removed again, and every effort has been made to defeat the government again; but last week the Senate voted reasonably to agree to the change in spite of Conkling and the efforts of the Democrats who have sustained him to divide the Republicans. Without their aid this matter would long ago have been settled, as a Congressional investigation long ago brought out such facts as demanded an immediate change. This victory for the government really belongs to Secretary Sherman, and pushes him equally with the resumption of January 1st toward a Presidential nomination.

The consequences of the desperate financial condition of England and a considerable part of the European continent are easier predicted, than are its causes discovered. In England the superintendent of a large government contract found that all the locks being put on the great hospital at Walsall were of American manufacture, though within a short distance were factories that might have furnished the building. He learned, however, that the contractor had been driven to our market because of the inferiority and high price of the English work and the unwillingness to accept and use improvements in their manufacture. In a letter to the London Times this superintendent says that the distress now prevailing in manufacturing districts is due largely "to the injurious action of trades-unions, the drunkenness and improvidence of the men, their antipathy to the use of machinery, the existence of low wages and short hours, and the obtuseness of masters who are content to reproduce the same class of goods from generation to generation instead of adapting themselves to suit the requirements of the age. Foreign competition would not be possible if the trades-unions would employ their funds in educating their members instead of fighting their masters." Accepting his judgment, the matter is simple. Foreign competition is confessedly the immediate cause of England's distress; but this would be impossible but for the depressing influence of the secret trade-unions. We may take another step on the opinion of Grand Master Pettit of the Kentucky Freemasons that "Masonry is the parent of all philanthropic secret societies," so-called. If any doubt of this could exist with us there could be none in respect to England where Freemasonry originated. This is, moreover, but one line of argument by which national misfortune may be traced to the mis-conceived product of a London ale-house.

The Ancient and Honorable.

BY ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

I.

The brethren all had gathered once within the lodge at night,
And he, the mighty Solomon, sat in his oaken chair,
And Saul of Cis and Benjamin stood grandly on the right,
For never witch of Endor was permitted to be there.

And there was mighty Pharaoh and Potiphar was there,
No cerecloth muffled mummies, only skeleton and skin,
But bland and portly gentlemen with faces round and fair
And fat in any quantity suspended from the chin.

And there stood great Goliah as captain of the door,
His spear a sturdy hickory and his shirt of heavy mail;
While Jonah stood half petulant upon the temple floor,
But looking none the older for his frolic with the whale.

And there Ahasuerus too in regal wrath was seen,
But Mordecai cautioned him and told him to beware,
And not to kick a rumpus up about his absent queen,
For not even mighty Solomon could take his ladies there.

In that most ancient company was seen the Wandering Jew,
And Hiram in his purple and Hiram at his task,
And Sinbad and Sennacherib and holy Allah too—
And a cloven-footed gentleman who loves to wear a mask.

II.

Now while they all were busy with ineffable degrees,
And Hiram in a corner lay attempting not to sneeze,
"MA-HA-BONE," cries a stranger voice, with such unearthly din
That murdered Hiram started up and shouted, "Let him in."

You should have seen the tumult of the brethren and their dread,
When again that voice was shouted near the ceiling overhead;
"There's a traitor in the temple!" cried the master, and his hair
Stood rigid on his caput like the legs upon his chair.

"Let the lights be all extinguished; let Goliah keep the door,
There was never such a treason in Masonic lodge before;
We must find the hardy traitor and the darkness must conceal
The vengeance he has merited, the vengeance he must feel."

Then they groped around in darkness, and they seized each other's throats,
And some there got a battered nose and some got damaged coats;
Till the master in distraction cried, "I give the matter up!
From labor to refreshment; bring the brandy and the cup."

Then lighting up the hall again in fear and wonder still;
They saw a hardy parrot sitting on the window sill;
They made a jump to catch it, but it vanished in the night,
While "Ma-ha-bone, ye foolish men," was the language of its flight.

The Grand Necessity for New England.

The first great necessity for our reform in New England is churches that "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." Except two or three Reformed Presbyterian churches in Vermont, and perhaps one in Boston, there are no such churches; and the result is, that while the great mass of earnest Christians of New England are truly Anti-masonic, their convictions and testimony are restrained and neutralized by association with and dependence on Freemasons in the churches. Neither churches nor individuals can have spiritual prosperity while they disobey God and the command "to withdraw from every brother that walketh disorderly," leaves no excuse for the toleration of so-called Christian Masons: for no one can admit that the obligations and ceremonies of Masonry are in accordance with an orderly Christian walk.

But aside from this there are several other reasons for adopting the principle of non-fellowship with this form of evil.

1st. The common course of silent consent to Freemasonry in the church, as an evil that must be endured because too strong to be overthrown, tends greatly to impair the spirituality of those who are thus silent. It is a law of spiritual life that it must be aggressive in its opposition to sin, that silence becomes first indifference, then complacency, and then endorsement.

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mein
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with its face,
We first endure, next pity, next embrace."

This is especially true of the "vice" of the dance, the saloon and the lodge.

This malign power is especially apparent in its influence over the ministry. The Congregational ministry all know (substantially) what Freemasonry is. The great majority of them will say it is wrong, and yet scarcely one of them bears any testimony against it. If asked why they are thus silent, they give many reasons, but they all resolve themselves into this: "Freemasonry is too strong to be successfully assailed." The practical effect of this passive consent to sin in the church is a weakening of faith, growing laxity of doctrine, tolerance of other forms of sin and continued dimunition of moral energy.

2d. The faithful few who, amidst prevailing evil, give true testimony, do so at the cost of brotherly kindness on the part of those with whom they are associated; and at the expense of much self-denial. This faithful adherence to duty under reproach is sometimes, and ought always to be a means of grace; but not unfrequently it is a source of temptation either to let down the strictness of a true Christian protest or to maintain it in querulous, fault-finding and uncharitable spirit. When Isaiah was told to "lift up his voice like a trumpet, and show the Lord's people their transgressions, and the house of Israel their sins," he had a hard task assigned him; a task altogether too hard for many church members to do faithfully and in love; and it is not strange that there are so few who, amidst abounding opposition, speak the whole truth. All men have not the natural courage to stand alone. They must have the sympathy and moral support of others or they fail. For this reason church organizations are needful to most Christians, and especially in this reform they need the aid and support of each other. There are thousands in New England who, if they belonged to a church that was Anti-masonic, would be glad to be known as Anti-masons, but whose testimony is now neutralized, or suppressed. There are multitudes who would find in such a church a sphere of usefulness that is now denied them by disheartening entanglements.

3d. Concentration of effort is one of the most effective methods of success. New England Anti-masonry largely fails of accomplishing its work for the want of it. The salt diffused through the sea is very great in amount, but a single barrel of salt is worth more to preserve food than all the water of all the oceans. So one live Anti-masonic church will accomplish more than the same persons would ever accomplish if diffused through all the churches.

4th. The history of the anti-slavery reform shows that the churches and the ministry need just such a protest, in order to see the truth. When the ministry see their spiritually-minded members leaving them and forming other churches, they will see many excellent reasons why the occasion of their change of church relations should be removed. Let the Anti-masons of New England insist that either Masonry must go out of the churches or they will, and the ministry would at once begin to investigate and interest themselves in this matter.

5th. The greater progress of the Anti-masonic reform in the West is owing largely to the fact that there have been churches and a ministry whose duty it was to bear testimony against this iniquity. Fidelity to "denominations" ought to be an influence for good instead of evil, but unless such denominations are free from complicity with sin, fidelity to the "church" binds its ministers and members to call evil good and good evil; put light for darkness and darkness for light. Hence the need of a pure church in order to teaching a pure doctrine.

Yours for the truth,
H. H. HINMAN.

Personal Recollections of Odd-fellowship.

WORCESTER, Mass., Jan. 28, 1879.

Friend Blanchard:

DEAR SIR:—While your co-laborers were holding their annual meeting in this city recently, I attended the same for the purpose of learning what had been (if they are not now) the oaths and obligations of the Masonic institutions of America.

In my younger days I was once persuaded to join the Odd-fellows, and did so. I was invited to do so by at least three clergymen. I demurred, as I well remembered the excitement caused by the supposed murder of Morgan, and though but a boy, I had learned to distrust Masonry. I informed those clergymen that if I found anything which conflicted with my rights as a citizen, or a believer in religion, I should peremptorily refuse to remain with the order. They assured me that I was at liberty to recede whenever I desired to do so, and in April, 1845, I joined the order of Odd-fellows.

Without delineating the ceremonies of an initiation which must mortify any sensitive mind, I pass to the obligations, as they were then termed, to show the deception which was perpetrated upon me at that time, and which I saw perpetrated upon all others I saw initiated during the three months I was an active member. In the perambulations around the hall I was halted and was told that I was in imminent danger, as there was fire on the right, water on the left, and behind me a deep and yawning gulf, and before me sharp pointed instruments of death. The lodge with one accord cried out, "Mercy show!" Whereupon the chaplain of the lodge invoked the mercy of the Supreme Being to rescue me from the perilous position I was in (as I supposed), and as his amen was announced, all with one accord said, Amen! and I joined in the chorus, Amen! and amen! If this was the fix I had got into "Amen" that I have got out as easy as I have. Further on in these ceremonies I was instructed that I must not wrong a brother nor see him wronged, whether it be through his own imprudence, the evil designs of others, or some accidental cause. Such was the confusion my mind had got into by such unexpected ceremonies that I did not comprehend the nature of these obligations; had I done so I would have broken up the ceremonies instantly.

The third initiation I attended I determined never to see any more such sacrilegious ceremonies gone through with again. I demanded my card of clearance and gave my reasons, which were: That the institution had not proved to me what it had been represented, that in my judgment it ran counter to the best interests of a republican form of government, and also with the Word of God, wherein we are commanded to do good and communicate, and to resist evil as well. I felt I could not have that liberty which God and a free government had guaranteed to me—the right to speak, and tell the truth; which as a free moral agent, I felt I could not do with these obligations resting upon me, which I had repeated in an unguarded hour (an hour never to be forgotten by any one who has reflected upon the sacredness the order holds their members to, which they have forced upon a person, in the intense strain upon his nerves) for, be it remembered, up to this time no expose of the order had ever been given, and it came upon my mind like the vivid flash of lightning at the midnight hour. I made up my mind I could not belong to the order and bear witness to the truth, because its obligations forbade my doing so.

It says: "You shall not divulge the secrets of this order to any person or persons under the high canopy heaven." Here I desire to notice that I had a "Noble Grand" of this order on the witness stand to testify in a case where I was the defendant, and the Judge asked the question which was pertinent to the case, and the witness stated to the court that he had taken an obligation to the order of Odd-fellows that would not admit of his answering the question. Said the judge, "You have taken an oath before this court and Almighty God that you will tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and the question I have asked you is germain to the case now pending; and you answer the question asked you by the defendant's council, and by the court, which is one you must answer, or stand convicted for contempt of court." Here was a dilemma for a genuine believer in extra-judicial oaths, because they considered their obligation more binding than any which can be given or taken, and the question with this man was, which was the greatest. He refused to answer, as he considered himself amenable to the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows, and not to Almighty God, or the commonwealth of Massachusetts. The district attorney, himself an Odd-fellow, refused to prosecute the case further. He was informed by the court he must prosecute the case or nolle prosequi it. He informed the court he should not do either, and did not; hence the defendants were discharged from the court and their bond for further appearance cancelled. For the first time in my life I had a practical demonstration of the workings of secret societies in court. Hence my belief that they run counter to the best interests of a republican form of government.

What I have related to you thus far are facts which came under my personal observation. The question asked the witness was, whether he was blindfolded when he was initiated into the order of Odd-fellows? Had the judge asked further questions of far greater import, what must have been the contempt he would have subjected himself to, if he could get no answer to so simple a question as, "Was you blindfolded?" The truth of the matter was, he dare not say yes, which he knew, and I knew, was true; and he dare not say no, because of perjuring himself. To see that man, a deacon in the Baptist church, practicing deception, which is equivalent to a lie, was the most degrading spectacle a man of honesty, uprightness and integrity of character cares to behold.

These secret institutions have been a curse to our country in the manner men are holden by their obligations. A man demeans himself when he so far forgets the duty he owes to his God, his country and himself, when he goes beyond the word of Holy Writ for example to guide his actions among men. In this is found in the fewest words an axiom suitable for any person in any grade of life, as a standard for all coming time, to cease from doing evil and learn to do good, and do it, for upon this hangs all that is demanded in the life that now is and that which is to come. Strike for the right and take the consequences, is my motto.

The more societies a person belongs to, the less of liberty he enjoys. Let every person stand in the individual capacity of the citizen as far as he can, compromising only so much of his opinion as is for the best good of the position he is in, or the community in which he dwells, and that only for the welfare of all in interest. We have here in Massachusetts seemingly an endless variety of secret societies, and still increasing. I have been a silent looker-on since 1845, for the outgrowth of these societies and my calm conclusions are that there has no ultimate good come from them all that would not have come to them all, by following the precepts and example of the meek and lowly Jesus. The tendency of all these institutions is to weaken the average individual in the faith he should have in the government under which he lives, as being of the people and for the people. It also weakens his faith in the supreme power of an omnipotent God, who doeth all things well, and more especially to those who put their trust in him and not in the man-made orders of the various secret societies, which are not for the good of any one save those high up in their ritual, who are up there for no other purpose but self-aggrandizement. Again I say: Strike for the right and put your trust in the God of all grace for a reward.

WHO ARE THE BLESSED— THE TRULY HAPPY?

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

Come, gentle reader, and take a walk with me. Let us go into the gardens of flowers, into the orchards of rich and mellow fruit, into the green valley and beside the river with its crystal waters ever and forever flowing. Who has not read the Sermon on the Mount? And who, having read it, has not reflected that as the life of our Lord, in its lowliness, its ineffable purity and its absolute self-sacrifice for the good of others, was different from the life of any worldly monarch or worldly man, so his maxims are entirely different from the maxims of the world. Thus, in describing in the seven beatitudes that character from which alone true happiness can spring—for happiness arises from character as the fruit from the tree—he begins with, Blessed are—not the rich, the prosperous, the powerful, the self-important and self-satisfied, but, Blessed are the poor in spirit. Blessed are they who, unsatisfied with themselves, with the world and all that the world has to offer, have within them a deep consciousness of a want that the world can not fill. Here let it be observed that character is a thing of growth. As the tree, by a regular process of development, rises from the germ to fruition, so a perfect or holy character rises by degrees from the first kindlings of the new life, the first implantation of holy principles, to the stature of a perfect man, the full fruition.

Our Saviour, as I conceive, in these seven beatitudes traces the development of the various elements composing that character in their common historic order; though doubtless whoever possesses one of these elements has all the rest in their incipiency.

The beginning then of that character out of which happiness arises by the very laws of our being, is to be poor in spirit. The poor soul, like the prodigal mentioned by Luke, has come to itself. It begins to see things as they are. It wants a knowledge of God that it does not possess. What kind of a being is he? How does he feel toward me? and what will he do with me when I shake off this tabernacle and drop immediately into his hands? These are great questions, and so long as they are unanswered the soul is poor. It wants also some token of God's favor which it does not possess, and deeply feels that it does not deserve. It wants a peace that it does not possess, a purity that it has not, and a hope of rest hereafter of which it is not at all assured. And with this deep felt want of knowledge and peace and purity and hope, it is already looking around and stretching out its arms after God—crying out with the patriarch of old, "O that I knew where I might find him." Or perhaps with a kindling gratitude for benefits received from One as yet unseen, it is ready to say with him in the temple court, "Who is the Lord that I might believe on him?"

Reader, do you understand this? Have you ever known this sense of inward poverty—this want of a knowledge and a peace and hope that the world cannot give? Have you ever looked around for that God who alone can pardon, and for that Saviour Jesus who alone can help? Have you ever felt that his presence and his favor would be to your soul as life from the dead? Then let me entreat you to take heart. Do not despair, but take heart. 1st. Because these feelings are right feelings. They are such as become us, in the circumstances and condition in which we find ourselves. They are the beginning of a better character, the dawn of a better life.

2d. Take heart because the mere fact that we begin to see ourselves as we are and our condition as it is, is proof that some measure of the divine light has shone on us. The least longing for God and his favor, is proof that the divine Spirit has touched our hearts. And this light and longing which Christ by his own spirit has enkindled, "he will not quench;" "the bruised reed he will not break." Let us take heart. Let us trust and love and serve him who has shown any compassion to our poor, guilty souls. The work which he has begun he will not leave unfinished. The life of the lowly shall be crowned with glory and honor.

EXEMPT THE LODGES!

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, BUT ESPECIALLY TO THE TAX PAYERS OF INDIANA.

In the Indianapolis Sun of January 18, 1879, is a synopsis of the doings of the 51st regular session of the General Assembly of Indiana, on the 9th instant, in which is the following: "Mr. Reed, H. B. 10: To exempt claims and interest of the wives, children and dependents of members of Masonic, Odd-fellows, and other charitable societies." From what they are to be exempt is not stated or what "other charitable societies" are to enjoy a like privilege is not specified, but the bill is classed with the more important, for in the next paragraph but one it is said: "House bills 12, 13, 14 and 15 were also introduced with a number of resolutions of minor importance," etc.

The inference is that those here specified and others of like character or connection are to be exempt from some burden which is "important" and which will give the recipients of this favor an advantage not enjoyed by the ordinary citizen. In the absence of specifications we are justified in drawing our own conclusions, and in doing so we should be governed by known facts pertinent to the case.

1st. The questions of finance, rate of interest, and per cent. of tax are leading questions in the present session. Nine of the twelve bills mentioned at this meeting are upon finance directly.

2d. The well known fact that the property of lodges is generally exempt on the plea that they are "charitable societies," and that the government is deprived of an immense sum which has to be supplied by increasing the tax on other property points in the direction of still further exemption from bearing a just and equal proportion of the expenses of the government. Having secured exemption from taxation for lodge property, the next and most natural step would be to secure the same privilege for the individual members in their personal estates, which they enjoy in a corporate capacity; and there can be little doubt but that Mr. Reed's bill is a move in that direction.

In Ann Arbor, Michigan, is a Masonic building which I was told cost $50,000, and is exempt from taxation by a "perpetual injunction" granted by the court; which is a fraud and outrage on the tax payers of that city, county, and State. The men who are guilty of such villainy would not scruple to use the Legislature or any other means which would secure to them still further exemption at the expense of honest men or even poor widows and orphans, whose relatives were not connected with "Masonic, Odd-fellows, or other charitable societies." Whatever exemption is intended by this bill it is evidently intended to give it extended application. "Other charitable societies" is rather indefinite, but we may safely conclude that all those "societies" which are kindred in organization, profession and practice with Masonry and Odd-fellowship are the organizations intended. They are so connected in the report of this bill as to make such a conclusion inevitable.

It is, moreover, perfectly natural for these parent "charities" to provide for and look after the interests of their children. The state cares for her charitable trusts; the church of Christ has her agencies of benevolence which she sustains,—and the secret brotherhood must not neglect the interests of its hopeful progeny.

The simple enumeration of societies performing "charities" such as are in the line of Masonic benevolence would require more space than would be proper in this article, but I will mention a few that are in every essential feature identical with the two mentioned by name in Mr. Reed's bill. The Knights of Pythias may properly head the list, and afterward Knights of Honor, Knights of Labor, Junior Sons of 76, Red Men, Druids, Hibernians, Printers Unions, Knights of the Golden Circle, Ku-Klux and the White League follow in their appropriate order. All these and many "other" societies are organized on the same plan, bound by similar obligations and sworn to the performance of the same "charitable" deeds for their members as are the Masons and Odd-fellows and hence they must be included in Mr. Reed's bill of "exemption." If this bill is correctly reported and should become a law, it would under the operation of this act only be necessary for an individual to show that he or she was "wife, child, or dependent of members" of these "charitable societies" to be "exempt" from whatever "claims or interest" are contemplated by this act. The practical working of this law would be to simply legalize an existing privileged class, which is already by indirect methods evading justice and burdening the uninitiated "cowans" with oppressive taxation that is becoming well nigh intolerable.

I hope Mr. Reed will press his bill. It is just what is needed. It will do more to open the eyes and enlighten the tax-payers and lodge-ridden victims of secret societies in Indiana than any thing else. Push on, you are on the right track, Mr. Reed. The people are suffering for just such information as your bill and its discussion will give them. You have got by "management" your millions invested in lodge property "exempt" already, now let the "wives," (not widows) "children," (not orphans) and DEPENDENTS of Masons, Odd-fellows and other like "charitable societies" be "exempt" by law, and then "exempt" all members of "charitable societies" from "claims" and taxation, and give them all the offices and you may then announce the "rogues' millennium," and the days of ruthless and legalized robbery,—but remember that for all this thou shalt, with all thine associates, be brought into judgment. There is approaching a day of reckoning and no exemption act of patrons, though passed by a body of Masonic statesmen will stand before the righteous retribution of an outraged people. Your bill will hasten the day.

J. P. STODDARD.

"As Others See It."

[Under this title the Times of this city published the following tribute to the editor of this paper from the pen of Father Preston, of Lockport, Ill. Our readers would hardly excuse us should we fail to present it to them also.—ASS'T ED.]

PRESIDENT JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

The Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts.—Acts 13:50.

The ways and means resorted to for the ruin of President Blanchard's character and usefulness, and that, too, in numerous instances, by men who profess better things, if half written out would fill a volume. In my own experience of the last fifty-two years I cannot recall a case where in my judgment the overshadowing influence of the Masonic fraternity on fair, credible, Christian men and ministers has been more clearly seen and unequivocally demonstrated than in the late proceedings against the president and the Wheaton College church, and every Masonic lodge in this section of the great West, has, doubtless, long since held its ratification meeting and jubilee over the results of those proceedings. But the old veteran will outride the storm and will live to see the counsel of those sage Ahithopels brought to foolishness.

Less than forty years ago President Finney was as unpopular with nine-tenths of all the Presbyterians and Congregationalists, clergy and laity, in the Northern and Western States as President Blanchard is now with one-half of them. But now the doctrines, principles, preaching and practice then denounced and ridiculed by that generation of Christians and Christian ministers have come to be the foundation of Congregational theology, and President Finney is now honored and revered as the author and founder of their present Christian faith and practice.

Even now there are a few survivors of that old generation of orthodox Christians and Christian ministers, personally known to the writer, who are among the loudest in praise of the new theology of the "New Departure" of the great innovator and reformer, President Finney.

No friend of President Blanchard will pretend that he does not share the disadvantage as well as the benefit of an ardent temperament. But who ever knew a cautious, timorous, time-serving thinker to accomplish a pennyworth for the cure of any public evil? It requires men of action as well as of thought to move the world.

The church and the country owe President Blanchard a debt of gratitude to-day for his life-long efforts and effective energy in opposing and exposing the fraud, falsehood and infidelity of Freemasonry that they never will pay. Through his indomitable efforts, the light and truth on the subject of secret societies has been spread out before the public in nearly all the States north of Mason and Dixon's line within the last thirty-five years.

Truly there are now, and have been for the last ten or twenty years, a host of able and faithful men engaged in this arduous work; but I think all, or nearly all, of them have learned their first principles and received their first inspiration on this subject directly or indirectly from the original note of his bugle. Thirty to thirty-five years ago when he was besieging the tract society, the missionary boards, the presidents and faculties of various colleges, whose voice but President Blanchard's was heard on this subject from Boston to the Mississippi river? And it is to his unwavering faith and untiring efforts that we owe the organization of State Associations in thirteen of the United States and of innumerable county, city, town and district organizations for the spread of the light and truth in furtherance of this great work.

Were it not for our experience in the rise and progress of the temperance and anti-slavery causes, we might feel a degree of discouragement. But when we remember that our cautious, calculating, conservative Christian friends have all joined our ranks as soon as they saw the popular crowd were falling in, we need not falter; but we may well thank the Lord for past success and take courage. In less than forty years to come the few survivors of the present generation of Christian ministers who sympathize with and endorse the acts and decisions of the majority of the late ex-parte council and Elgin association, will be found proclaiming President Blanchard's name among the greatest. They will enroll him among the most efficient reformers of the age and generation in which he lived; and sing pæans of triumph for his unwavering faith, his untiring zeal, his total disregard of persecution, and his ultimate glorious success. And when Decoration Day comes round they will be seen garnishing the sepulchre of old Jonathan Blanchard with flowers.

The Craft in Confusion.

RENO, Ind., Feb. 1, 1879.

DEAR BRO. K.—Dr. Cook, State lecturer, reached this place Dec. 27th. There being no appointments out for lectures, he rested from the labors of the previous two weeks, while appointments were made at Reno for Jan. 1st, and at Coatsville the two evenings following. The congregation at Reno was not large but was very attentive and deeply interested and a good impression was made. At Coatsville the temple-builders are in great dismay and confusion. Their grand master, the widow's son, having been slain and no designs on the trestle-board they know not what to do, and are almost at the point of crying out in their anguish, "O Lord, my God, is there no help for the widow's son!"

The doctor is master of his business being armed with standard Masonic books, and proves all points by their own authority convincing non-Masons of the truth of the revelations and shutting the mouths of all honest, intelligent Masons. At Reno the craft carefully stayed away except one Odd-fellow, the railroad boss, and he soon took a leave of absence and did not return. At Coatsville the craft was pretty well represented, among whom was the Senior Deacon. This titled brother, finding more truth than novelty in the thing, concluded that an early retreat was better than final defeat. He with another brother quietly withdrew to return no more during the series of lectures. Those of the craft who remained to the close gave respectful attention and were manifestly interested, doubtless having received a deeper insight into the theology of Masonry than they had hitherto got.

On the second evening at Coatsville was the crowning lecture of the series; the subject was discussed both from a political and a religious standpoint. The despotic character of the order was proved by all the Masonic authorities of any note and some of their most prominent periodicals. The religious phase of the subject was a masterpiece of indisputable proof from Masonic authority of the highest standing that Freemasonry was a religion that promised to save its votaries eternally in heaven by the use of the common gavel, trowel and other Masonic implements rites and ceremonies. That the religion of Freemasonry is ancient paganism revived; that its oaths are extra-judicial and blasphemous and forbidden by the Word of God; those who have taken them are recognized as being guilty and required to confess their sin. As Dr. Cook will send up a report of his labor here which will be much more interesting, I will close, begging pardon for this intrusion on the time and patience of your readers. Perhaps you may hear from me again if God will.

Yours fraternally,

WM. H. FIGG

Illinois—Second Report from Elder Browne.

Morrison, Ill., Jan. 31, 1879.

Dear Friends of Truth:—The following is my report as Illinois State Agent for the month of January:

No. of lectures delivered....	15
No. of sermons.....	11
Cash from collections.....	$5 48
Donations.....	54.00
Traveling expenses.....	14.30
Postage.....	11
Services as Agent.....	54.00

The donations have been made by Peter Howe of Wenona, $50; and by Orin Sholes of Morrison, $4. Have delivered in Whiteside county twenty-three lectures and nineteen sermons. The total cash receipts from the county have been seven dollars and forty-eight cents. A large number of tracts have been distributed and some books sold. The people have shown me much kindness and on some occasions much interest has been manifested in our reform work. Two meetings have been held this week, on the evenings of the 28th and 30th at the Crouch school-house, town of Ustick. On both occasions the house was packed and much interest shown. On Tuesday evening, the 28th, quite an animated discussion was held after the lecture between certain craftsmen, Masons and Odd-fellows and myself. An Odd-fellow read from the published statistics of the order the statement that about $1,500,000 had been paid out during the past year in the United States in "charity." Being asked to read all the report, he handed me the paper, saying, that I might read it, whereupon I called attention to the fact that according to the same report the receipts were about $4,000,000, thus showing that more than $2.50 was received for $1 paid out. This was a settler on the "charity" argument. Before the meeting closed I challenged the secret brethren to debate with me in the same house on the following Thursday evening.

The evening came and the house was packed again. After worship the craftsmen were invited by the chairman to defend their cause, but no one was found willing to stand up for the "widow's son," so I proceeded to deliver a lecture on the religious character and teachings of Freemasonry. After the lecture the usual opportunity was given for questions and explanations. Mr. John Hayes declared himself to be a strong Mason, whereupon I read to him from the Master Mason's oath and challenged him to deny that he had taken the oaths read, and putting five dollars in the chairman's hands told him he might have it for his affidavit that I had not correctly revealed Masonry. Mr. H. was exceedingly nervous, but declined to make any denial. I also held up a picture showing how he was "duly and truly prepared," as a beautiful illustration of the "peaceful hours he once enjoyed." "Sold very cheap," is the verdict of Mr. Hayes' neighbors concerning him. Verily they laughed at him unmercifully. Let us do all we can in God's name to bring those whom Satan has blinded to the Lord Jesus, the "Light of the world." Dear brethren, pray for me that I may not only be instrumental in pulling down error, but also successful through God in building up truth.

J. F. Browne.

Let there be Light.

Caro, Mich.

I am neither dead nor silenced, and have a few encouraging things to say to my fellow reformers.

I am near the place where I first renounced Freemasonry. I have have had to contend with difficulties almost insurmountable, but the Lord has been with me. The struggle has been fearful, but I am a conqueror through grace. A short time ago I delivered two addresses on Masonry. The first night I spoke two hours and three-quarters. The second evening I spoke three hours. It caused the usual talk of insanity, perjury and the like. The usual Masonic warnings and threats are often heard.

But the effect of the lectures on the community is very gratifying. C. G. Slayton was District Deputy Grand Master of the Caro Odd-fellow lodge. His commission is signed by D. B. Tracy, Most Worthy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Michigan. Mr. Tracy is an M. E. minister of the Detroit Conference. Bro. Slayton has fully renounced. Bro. J. A. Adams, another prominent Odd-fellow, has fully renounced. While in a shop yesterday the proprietor said that he had taken one degree in Masonry. I questioned him some and he freely told me all about it in presence of several men.

There is a man in Caro by the name of A. Cowles. He formerly belonged to St. Louis Lodge, No. 188, Mich. He has been Most Worthy Grand Lecturer for Michigan. He is what they call a bright Mason. He has fully renounced Masonry. I spent last evening with him. He says that Masonry is rascality from top to bottom. So you see the work is moving some up here. Mr. Cowles was paid $1500 a year and his expenses for keeping this Michigan Masonic rascality in running order.

Many other things of deep interest I must mention at another time.

Ready to be Marshaled into Line.

Canal Dover, O., Feb. 3, 1879.

Bro. K.:—I rejoice to see the cause of anti-secrecy prospering so finely. God is surely blessing our efforts and we ought to take courage. I have been unable to anything for sometime on account of sickness. My dear wife is suffering from consumption. She is under medical treatment at the Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Mich. I took her there five weeks ago. Her case is regarded as a very serious one. I ask the prayers of all the good people connected with this noble cause.

Secrecy reigns almost supremely in this place. But I am glad to know that quite a number here are beginning to take a stand against it. The harvest seems to be ripening and we need a captain, such as Bro. Stoddard, to lead in gathering the sheaves. A Freemason here has offered to help support Stoddard if he comes and lectures and truthfully exposes the order. This Mason says if I ever find out just what Masonry is, I will discover that the Anti-masons have only been "fighting a musquito." Well, let Stoddard or Ronayne drop in here and they will soon convince the entire community that it is more than a "musquito." The Methodists have a protracted meeting, but on Saturday evening the class-leader, although very zealous in the cause of Christ, let church go by the board and went to the lodge. On Sabbath this same man testified that he was "growing in grace." Whether his Baalistic worship on the evening preceding contributed to this or not, he did not say. O that God may awaken our people—ministers and laity—on this question and purge the church of its iniquity! Yours for the truth.

Glorious Record against Masonry at Zanesville, Ind.

Editor Cynosure:—My last article in your excellent paper has aroused the brotherhood of lambskins at this place to something more than fever heat. One of their number, whose avoirdupois is somewhat greater than that of Zacheus of old, has recently turned himself upside down in an article to the Fort Wayne Journal, in which, in a choleric manner, he belches forth a stream of mis-quotations, such as one might expect from the "widow's son" about to perish. He uses against us real Masonic arguments, such as "it's a lie," etc. And the spirit, too, which he manifests in that article reminds me very much of the spirits whose name was legion. They said, "hast thou come here to torment us before the time?" I am here to torment sin and sinners of all sorts until they turn from their evil doings.

CHEERING!

But the lie argument is going back on Masons, especially here at Zanesville, for when Rev. J. Levington was here two years ago lecturing, I am informed that the fraternity used the argument quite frequently in denouncing him as an impostor and a liar. But a few days ago one of their own number embraced Christ by faith, and without any one asking him for it, got up in our love-feast and publicly acknowledged that he, with others of the order, had misrepresented Mr. Levington, saying at the same time that the same good spirit that told him to repent told him to repent of the sin of Masonry. Now will the members of Zanesville lodge brand this man as a liar? If so, did Freemasonry make him such, or did his recent turning away from it? Is he a worse man than he was or better? This man of whom I speak is now a member of the M. E. church and will be a valuable help to us in the future in our operations against the lodge. I am glad that honest, faithful efforts will result in such good.

A few weeks ago while holding a meeting a very fine young man, about twenty-six years of age, came forward and sought the blessing of salvation, and when I invited him with others to unite with the church he refused on the ground that he was an Odd-fellow. I soon learned that he had only sent in his name, but was not initiated; so I went home with him and faithfully preached to him the doctrines of anti-secrecy, and to my joy about midnight he promised me never to unite with the order, but he united with the church; and I am led to believe that he will never regret it.

I would gladly labor each night of my life to save a soul from the meshes of the net of secrecy. I am set for this work; I have counted the cost, and I now reconsecrate myself to the good work. My life may be a thorny path, beset with opposition and bitter hate by those whom I seek to bless. Slanders I know will be invented, but I want to be possessed with such a love and zeal for the cause as will enable me to smile at all these. My language will be distorted and misrepresented; my best deeds are villified by the persons for whom I labor. If I were single-handed in this work, I should go on trusting in God to do justice to my reputation; but I have friends who stand with me in this work shoulder to shoulder. I am looking beyond the river for our glory and an eternal victory.

SOME MASONIC LIES NAILED.

Under this caption I wish to notice some of the untruthful statements made by Masons of this community.

The first lie I will mention comes from a Rev. member of the order: That the Anti-masons of this community have destroyed his influence. The truth is, that Masonry, founded and fed on lies and deception and fraud, has done the business for him.

The next I shall notice is the contradictory statements of another Rev. demitted Mason. He stated to others that he left the order because it was wrong; to me he stated that there is nothing wrong in it. Now one of these statements are untrue.

The third lie I charge to the Mason or Masons, who promised Rev. J. Levington a copy of a letter written to Michigan concerning his character. Again, I charge them with a lie when they reported him insane. And they lie when they say they want him returned to this

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 13, 1879.

EFFECT OF THE ANTI-POLYGAMY DECISION.—"The Supreme Court of the United States is made, by the Constitution, the tribunal of final resort in all cases arising under the Constitution, to determine what is the law of the land."—Kent (abridged) p. 43. The effect of the anti-polygamy decision then is pledged to protect Christian "public morals" while that decision stands. And when Dr. Milligan says "that (anti-polygamy) decision is unconstitutional," it is equivalent to saying that the Constitution itself is unconstitutional. The Supreme Court is the supreme interpreter of the Constitution, and what that Court says is Constitution is Constitution until reversed by a future decision of the same Court. And as the decision in question declares the morals of the Constitution to be those which require monogamy and not polygamy, that is to say, Christian and not heathen morals, while that decision stands the Constitution is Christian and not heathen.

MR. PRESTON'S ARTICLE. — I have allowed my associate, Mr. Kellogg, to insert Mr. Preston's article from the Times concerning myself, because, excepting the commendations of myself of which I am not to judge, I believe the doctrine of the article true, that the persecutions I am suffering are "not for my sins," but caused by the rancor of the lodges, whose spirit, from their very organization and worships, are secret malignity acted out through other agents and agencies than itself. I do not think the persons who have been used as instruments in the war on me were in all cases conscious that they were instruments of the lodge-rancor; but that the malignant treatment I am suffering is fairly and justly accounted for by Mr. Preston, as the "overshadowing" of the lodge influence. Sometime before I die, or cease to write, I have been urged to write something like an autobiography of myself for my children and friends. I have seen no time as yet when I thought such writing would be appropriate; perhaps never shall. But touching the casting me out of the Congregational associations, by persons who are indebted to me, and from whom I have deserved nothing but brotherly kindness; the persistent attempts, led by lodgemen of other denominations and men of no denomination, to crush Wheaton College or drive me out of it; the rending of the Wheaton church, and the unparallelled falsehood, error and malignity of the ex-parte council,—these things ought to be explained, and perhaps, will be when time shall have cooled passion and I can be heard without a suspicion by the Christian public that I am writing to carry some selfish personal end. Some of those engaged in hounding me have been and are good men and women who verily thought they were 'doing God service' according to the words of Christ. Some, the mass of them, have been ignorant of facts, and misled by lodge falsehoods. Others were misled by their sympathies for Mr. Webster, whom they supposed I had injured. The ministers could not face the lodge issue in their own churches, and wished to be rid of the man who was pressing it. And, as in all such cases, bad men, haters of God and goodness under their mistress, the lodge, joined in and directed and swelled the movement.

THE AMERICAN FREEMAN.—This paper was started several years ago by the indomitable Geo. W. Needles, who has edited and supported it under the disadvantage of living six miles away from his office, and sustaining his paper at arms length. He has lately associated with him Mr. John D. Nutting, of Wheaton, Ill., who will, if any body can, make the paper a success. Mr. Nutting comes to his work just as the novelty and excitement of the movement in Missouri are wearing off, and to keep up a reform paper under such circumstances requires no ordinary share of patience, and good temper, faith and energy almost superhuman. Thus far Mr. Nutting has shown himself equal to the situation. He has shown versatility, tact and business energy and good humor, which must eventually win success; and make the Freeman a Star in the West of large magnitude.

MAY CHRISTIANS VOTE? REPLY TO DR. MILLIGAN.

"You say that Garrison and others took the ground that the (U. S) Constitution was 'a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.' So it was."—Dr. Milligan.

"And until the Constitution owns the authority of my Saviour, I, as a loyal subject of my King, cannot acknowledge the rightfulness of its authority, or hold office or vote."—Idem.

Let us clear this question. And

1. Errors and imperfections in a constitution or government, do not exonerate citizens from allegiance to it. If only perfect constitutions and perfect governments are to be obeyed, few children would be morally obliged to regard the family constitution, or obey parents under it. The United States Constitution is no exception.

2. Nations are not churches, nor are constitutions religious creeds. They are leagues uniting all sorts of people for legitimate objects.

3. The United States Constitution is not even an ordinary government, but a restricted league, formed by people under different State governments, for specified ends; as, "To form a more perfect union; establish justice; insure domestic tranquility; provide for the common defence; promote the general welfare," etc., etc. And it means by religion, what its framers meant by it; and they meant, Jefferson included, the religion of the Bible. And, if so, Jefferson, cited by Dr. Milligan (Vol. 4, p. 103), where he says the government of the United States is "interdicted by the Constitution from intermeddling with religious institutions," did not mean interdicted from intermeddling with polygamy, human sacrifices, widow-burning, or assassination by Mormon Danites of the enemies of Mormonism. The proof of this is that the Constitution means what its framers, and States accepting meant by it. And all those persons and States regarded, treated and punished all those things as crimes. This is too well known to need anything but to state the fact, and in the face of this fact to call such things religion is to take sin to cover crime, hypocrisy to screen villainy and murder.

Hence, the first amendment, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," no more forbids Congress to prohibit the free exercise of polygamy and assassination, and affords no shelter for those any more than it shelters any other crimes of the calendar.

So the Supreme Court has recently decided that polygamy is not religion, but crime; and cites the fact that all the States accepting the Constitution then, and until now, punished and still punish it as crime. And the Court is correct. For if the Constitution does not mean what its framers meant, and its receivers understood by it, then it has no ascertainable meaning whatever.

The United States Supreme Court goes farther. It rests its decision sustaining the anti-polygamy law of July, 1862 on the constitutional right of Congress to "legislate for the protection of public morals." What morals? Not Mormon or heathen morals, but the morals of the men and States which framed and adopted that instrument,—morals requiring marriage to be between one man and one woman; morals as taught by Christ. "They twain," not they twenty, "shall be of one flesh;" morals as they existed "from the beginning" when one woman was wedded to one man. "And wherefore one? That he might seek a godly seed." (Mal. 2:15.) For plural marriages evermore produce an ungodly seed as the history of heathendom shows, and for reasons manifold and manifest. The "morals" then which the Supreme Court declares Congress may protect, are Christian and not heathen; and if the Constitution protects Christian against heathen morals, it is, quoad hoc, a Christian instrument; and Christians may vote under it without sin.

It was an error for Mr. Garrison to say "The Constitution was a covenant with death and an agreement with hell." This Dr. Milligan shows when he says the anti-slavery amendments abolished that "covenant" and agreement." For certainly they did not abolish the Constitution in abolishing the "fugitive clause" and and "three-fifths" rule. The Constitution stands though slavery is gone out of it.

So I trust the same Constitution will stand, when the verbal recognition of the true God is put into it, by the proposed amendment for which we labor. This doctrine Dr. Milligan himself admits, when he says there is "another covenant with death" in the Constitution which he hopes "the nation may soon disannul." There was much more reason to say the slavery clauses were a "covenant with death," than to give that title to an omission—the deplorable omission of the name of God. I hope with Dr. Milligan that defect will be supplied, and I am ready to vote for it. But I think it is as wrong to call the Constitution an infidel or heathen document because it has defects, as to call a mansion a rats' den because those vermin have holes in it. And since Dr. M. holds that the slavery covenant has been abolished by the three amendments; and that the infidel-omission-covenant has been broken "by the President, Congress and the Supreme Court," wanting only the sanction of the people by a religious amendment, let us take courage, stand by the Constitution, and pray and vote that this last link missing may be supplied.

THE MORMONS.

The Washington Post contains an interview with two Mormon women who are visiting the press and members of Congress to make capital against the decision of the Supreme Court. One, a young, good-looking woman, said she was the thirtieth or fortieth daughter of Brigham Young.

The modesty of this pair of women may be judged of by the reply, when asked if she had but half of her husband: "That is a good deal more than most women have of their husbands, if the truth was known!" Such are the vile slanderers of their sex and species sent to Washington to debauch the members of Congress as the daughters of Moab debauched Israelites in the matter of Baal Peor. As long as this sort of vile women had access to our offices in Washington during the early months of the war, the enemy had the secrets of our army movements and the service suffered.

But the thing most noticeable is contained in the following extract:

"Well, we find strong friends everywhere. Senators and members whom we expected the least from have shown themselves ready to listen, quick to understand, and disposed to act. Mrs. Spencer has helped us amazingly. She has been with us almost constantly, and I have great hopes that a law will be passed before Congress adjourns that will give us the required relief."

Let the voters of the United States look to their members at Washington. And, especially, let the wives and daughters, aye and sons, of those members see to it that their homes are not made desolate by the stray vixens of the Endowment House. If that house of abominations stood in any civilized city, the police would abate it as a house of infamy.

Mr. Pentecost Speaks.

The Evangelist Pentecost is holding Bible readings in Union Park Congregational church at 3 P. M. from Tuesday to Friday. On the 5th inst. his subject was the wheat and tares, during which he gave very hearty testimony to the contrast between Christianity and false worships. The one was daylight, the other darkness. The one full of candor, the other full of cunning. The one open, the other secret. The rites of the one were free, exposed and publicly observed, those of the other were hedged, hidden and guarded by pretended mystery. He alluded to the esoteric rites of some societies and laid it down as a safe rule for his hearers, to avoid everything that could not bear daylight and publicity. There was nothing secret in Christianity. He named the Spiritualists as an illustration of the love of darkness in their ceremonies. He said he was constitutionally afraid of all secret objects. The Gospel had nothing of subterfuge in it.

The tares of Israel resembled the wheat when growing. Satan transformed himself into an angel of light. Error tries to appear like truth. There are but two masters, Christ and the devil. It is the devil's object to corrupt Christ's teaching. Wheat bowed its head when ripening—and so Christianity taught humility. Darnel was always light and straight. It resembled pride and arrogance. The wafer had been substituted for the bread and wine. "Buried with Christ in baptism and rising to newness of life," had been corrupted into the doctrine of baptismal regeneration; and salvation in Christ was declared unnecessary by Universalism, to be for all whether they believed in Christ or not.

He warned his hearers against believing every teacher, but to search their Bibles and judge for themselves. To take heed how they heard as well as what they heard. To follow Christ who would judge them all at last and the wheat would then be separated from the tares.

—Bro. Hinman has held some very important meetings since his last report, in West Hartford, Hebron and Glastonbury, Connecticut. He thinks that Anti masonry has a large majority in Hartford county if the city of Hartford is left out.

—Dr. Cook writes hopefully of the Indiana work. He has just fulfilled engagements for about thirty lectures in Carroll, Park and Hendricks counties, everywhere facing good audiences and receiving the kindest attention from friends.

—Past Master Ronayne spoke on Tuesday evening in Carpenter Hall at the monthly meeting of the Chicago Christian Association.

—We are preparing a rare treat for our young readers. With the first paper in March we expect to begin an excellent English story, entitled, "The Fisherman's Daughters," which will be continued through ten or twelve numbers. We want every one to read this narrative and wait a few weeks to encourage our young readers to get others to join them in subscribing for the Cynosure.

—Bro. John Dorcas wishes a word with the friends in Cedar county, Iowa, in respect to their county meeting. By the constitution of the county society its officers are an executive committee at whose call all meetiugs are to be held. Bro. Dorcas suggests to this committee that the court-house at Tipton is the best place and the 20th of March the time. He desires to correspond with the friends in his locality on the subject. Address him at Shiloh, Iowa.

—Secretary Stoddard returned last Friday from Indiana much encouraged after meeting the friends in Grant county. Several deaths have occurred among them during the past year. At Jonesboro he especially missed Bro. T. Baldwin. The collections on Publishing House obligations were on the whole promptly paid. Meetings which he addressed were well attended and much interest was shown. He found an attempt at swindling had been made upon a number of the friends, which it should be the busiuess of the N. C. A. directors to attend to, that the interests of all concerned may be protected.

—Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, Mich., who surprised and delighted the late Illinois State Convention with his remarks on the resolutions, was nominated with Gerritt Smith on a national ticket in the Presidential election of 1848 (we believe that was the year). The ticket was nominated by the uncompromising abolitionists, and but for a single circumstance would have been elected. The same difficulty interfered with the election of Walker and Kirkpatrick. Let Anti-masons resolve that it shall be overcome, and that no lack of votes shall keep the best principles and men in the background.

—The contributions for the Illinois State work in response to the appeal of the financial committee are very encouraging. A report of donations will be published by the treasurer on the 1st of March. The last letter of Saturday contained $15 from Father Ebenezer Kent, of Wethersfield, who wrote that now in his eighty-fifth year he had been an Anti-mason twenty-five years, "and never more decidedly so than now." "I feel," he adds, "that the perpetuity of our republican government depends on the success of this reform."

—Philo Eleza writes under date of Feb. 3, that he had given six lectures since his last report in our columns: once in Osgood's Hall, Lostant, three times in Mt. Palatine, Ill., and twice in a school-house near the latter place. He also visited Tonica on his way to Mendota.

—Rev. E. Mathews of Brooklyn, Mich., writes that he is ready to respond to calls for work in Wisconsin and Minnesota. We learn that Rev. W. W. Ames of Menomonie, is also debating the question of entering the lecture field for a time. Both these brethren will render valuable aid as lecturers and their offers should not long lie on the table.

—Bro. Drury of Western College notes an error in the appeal for aid to that institution of the 30th ult. Notes and bequests should be sent to him as treasurer. That institution is under the management of men well known in Iowa and the West for their firmness in upholding the principlse of the Gospel against false worship, and their enterprise deserves ample support.

—The Boston Herald of the 2nd inst. contained the very encouraging news that Freemasonry is going down in Kentucky at such a rate as to alarm its abettors. The Herald says:

"Grand Master Pettit, of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons for the State of Kentucky, has addressed a circular letter to the various Masonic lodges in that State, calling their attention to the fact that there is an alarming decrease in the membership of the order there, as represented in the lodges, and a corresponding falling off in the revenues. These results he attributes to the general depression of the times, which affects unfavorably all philanthropic interests; the withdrawal by demit of great numbers of members; the indiscriminate and irregular manner in which lodges have been suspending for non-payment of dues, and the prevalance and constaut introduction of new societies. He urges the membership to reform in all these particulars, reminding them that Masonry is the parent of all philanthropic secret societies, and in itself sufficient for every brother of the order. Non-affiliation the grand master looks upon as the practice of the miserly, the half-hearted and the indifferent, and he especially exhorts all brethren to hold their grip upon the lodge. The letter shows a disheartening state of Masonic affairs in Kentucky, which may be duplicated in many other States."

The special rate for the Cynosure till March 1st next is $1.50. The regular price is $2 00, which will be resumed after that date. Remember, $1.50 till March 1st for old or new subscribers.

Michigan State Meeting.

Friends in Michigan who are in earnest now have a fair chance to show to each other and to the craft that they mean business. God willing Bro. Ronayne, and myself will be on hand as per notice, and we expect and shall be greatly disappointed if the friends fail on their part. The hall will cost $60 as as arranged by your treasurer, Bro. Perkins. A goodly number will be entertained free by friends in Adrian, but not all who should be there. Let those who come come prepared to meet a just proportion of the necessary expenses and if there are any who cannot come they are the ones who should send money to aid in the work. Don't forget the treasurer's address, Nelson Perkins, Adrian, Mich. D. V. I shall be at work in your State before this reaches you. Onward to victory in the name of King Jesus.

J. P. Stoddard.

Hammond, the Evangelist, Dancing Attendance to the Lodge.

Allegheny, Pa., Jan. 31, 1879.

Ed. Cynosure:—An evangelist of the name of Hammond is in our midst endeavoring to cast out devils by Belzebub, and of course has ignominiously failed. The writer visited one of his initiatory services of a protracted meeting, held in the North Avenue M. E. church of this city, on which occasion he stated to his auditors the remarkable news of his converting power, as manifested in the numbers now rejoicing in eastern and western cities and in the old country, all which he could prove by referring us to the names of some who had witnessed his wonderful works.

As for the sake of our dear city which he came to convert, I was more interested in what he was about to do than in what he had done, I made no inquiry. How unlike Christ who said, "For I have not spoken of myself; but my Father which sent me, he gave me commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak."

Mr. Hammond's meetings dwindled to a sharp point ere he took his leave of the city. He spoke of being unable to do any mighty works in "Little Allegheny." How unlike Christ again, who said, "If any man hear my words, and believe not I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." He failed "because of unbelief." Where is the faithlessness? Perhaps the following notice will explain:

MR. HAMMOND AND THE MASONS.

"This evangelist will speak tonight in the First Presbyterian church on the South Side, corner Twentieth and Sarah streets, to the Masonic fraternity, and will give an account of his visit to the caverns underneath Solomon's Temple, and will speak of Jesus as the 'Head stone of the corner,' or the keystone of the arch."

What need have we of further witness. Joseph McKee.

Out and Into.

"He brought us out..... that He might bring us in." Deut. 6:23.

Out of the distance and darkness so deep,
Out of the settled and perilous sleep,
Out of the region and shadow of death,
Out of its foul and pestilent breath;
Out of the bondage and wearing of chains,
Out of companionship ever with stains,
  Into the light and glory of God,
  Into the holiest cleansed by the blood,
  Into his arms, the embrace and the kiss,
  Into the scene of ineffable bliss,
  Into the quiet and infinite calm,
  Into the place of the song and psalm.
Wonderful love, that has wrought all for me!
Wonderful work that has thus set me free!
Wonderful ground, upon which I have come!
Wonderful tenderness, welcoming home!

Out of disaster and ruin complete,
Out of the struggle and dreary defeat,
Out of my sorrow, and bondage, and shame,
Out of the evils to fearful too name,
Out of my guilt and the criminal's doom,
Out of the dreading, and terror, and gloom.
  Into the sense of forgiveness and rest,
  Into inheritance with all the blest,
  Into a righteous and permanent peace,
  Into the grandest and fullest release,
  Into the comfort without an alloy,
  Into a perfect and confident joy.
Wonderful holiness, bringing to light!
Wonderful grace, putting all out of sight!
Wonderful lowliness, drinking my cup!
Wonderful purpose, that ne'er gave me up!

Out of the horror of being alone,
Out and forever of being my own,
Out of the bitterness, madness, and strife,
Out of myself and all I called life;
Out of the hardness of heart and of will,
Out of the longings that nothing could fill;
  Into communion with Father and Son,
  Into the sharing of all that Christ won,
  Into the ecstacies full to the brim,
  Into the bearing of all things with him,
  Into Christ Jesus there ever to dwell,
  Into more blessings than words can e'er tell,
Wonderful Person, whose face I'll behold;
Wonderful story, there all to be told!
Wonderful all the dread way that he trod!
Wonderful end—that he brought me to God!

William De Farel.

[CONCLUDED.]

[From the Christian Statesman.]

The reformed meanwhile gathered around their threatened pastor; the two parties met face to face; blood was on the point of flowing, when the half-drawn sword was replaced in the scabbard. Swiss blood was indeed to flow like water in that hallowed cause; but the hour was not yet come; the dark shadows of the future still enshrouded with their mysterious gloom the disastrous field of Cappel. The crowd who filled the market place of Aigle, soothed by the wise words of an old magistrate, dispersed without bloodshed, and the pastor, leaving the town for a short time, bent his steps to Lausanne. He had often beheld its towers from afar, and yearned in spirit over this stately city of the Lake. Perhaps God had ordained that his should be the hand that should withdraw so bright a jewel from the Papal diadem. With his ardent, impetuous nature, to hope was to endeavor to fulfil. He left Aigle, and reached the confines of Lausanne, which he hoped to enter through the influence of a theologian at the bishop's court, one Natalis Galeottis, whom he had known in Paris. To this man, who was, like himself, learned and of noble birth, he addressed a letter, penned with all his natural fire and eloquence.

"Help me, my friend," he wrote, "for religion has degenerated into a mere mockery; help me to reform it."

No answer came. and he wrote a second time, yet more urgently, imploring his friend to redouble his entreaties to the bishop, that he might be brought to take steps to remedy the evil.

Still there was no answer. Geleottis loved his revenues and his ease better than the truth, and was, with all his learning, devoted to the cause of the Roman hierachy.

A third time Farel returned to the charge, and then, full of grief, retraced his steps up the beautiful valley of the Leman, re-entered Aigle and after a short stay left it for Morat and Neufchatel.

To them succeeded Berne. This warlike canton, the nurse of armies, the treasury from which the sovereigns of the world drew their famous bands of Swiss mercenaries, might have been supposed peculiarly inimical to the Reformation; but it was not so. Berthold Haller, a pious and modest man, had labored in it acceptably, and Farel found in it a fruitful field for his powerful eloquence and uncompromising zeal. Ecolampadius, Kolb, and others came with him, and their labors were crowned with such great success, that it became a common saying in the cantons, "God has become a citizen of Berne."

After this signal victory, Farel made another attempt to gain access to Lausanne, but was repulsed as before by the bishop and his party. Repulsed but not defeated, he returned to Berne, and soon presented himself again at the gates of Lausanne, with a letter of recommendation from the Bernese lords.

This time his presence could not be ignored; the Council of Sixty was convoked, and these dignitaries, finding themselves between two fires —the bishop and the lords of Berne —pondered long and anxiously upon their future course. What should they do—should they rid themselves of the hierarchy with its scandals, and welcome austerity and reform? Should they bid to long trains of wealth-bringing pilgrims, to crosiers and vestments, pomp and power, luxury and disorder a long farewell? They were not disinclined to do so; but then, it seemed to them that poverty and hardship must come in their place. They were in much in the same position as the craftsmen who made silver shrines for Diana, and they made virtually the same choice. They were not equal to the self-sacrifice which it seemed to them that a reformation in religion would demand; and so they elected to retain Rome and her gold, and Rome remains with them still. The door was closed for the second time in the reformer's face and he never knocked at it again. He was now bearing upon seventy years of age and his race was almost run; a gleam, not of earth, flashed in his sunken eye, and his sunburnt cheek was hollow and worn; but although the flesh was weak, the spirit was as indefatigable as ever. Ergneil, Tabannes and Falangin were yet to win; and they were won and he returned to Neufchatel.

This town was, like Aigle, in the throes of a violent struggle. The magistrates and the majority of the citizens were on the side of the Reformation, but the priests and the minority adhering to them, were resolute and strong. They had determined to preserve the cathedral from what they counted desecration, and the magistrates were equally resolved to use it as a reformed church. This struggle was at its height and it seemed uncertain which party would triumph, when Farel entered the town. His arrival turned the wavering scale, the citizens seized him with shouts of triumph, placed him on their shoulders and so conducting him with loud acclamations to the cathedral, routed the canons by sheer force of numbers, and placed him triumphantly in the pulpit. Here he preached one of his noblest and most impressive sermons, and the multitude who listened to him, swayed by an irresistible impulse, rose like one man and cried out, "We have chosen. God is our witness; we will follow the reformed religion; we will live and die in it, we and our children."

Not many weeks afterward, in a humble lodging looking out on the north to the dark valley of the Seyon, with its crags and firs, and on the south to the placid waters of Lake Leman, lay a dying man, a conqueror about to pass away in the very hour of victory. No wealth of riven banners, no pomp of flashing battle-spears surrounded his dying head, yet a smile of triumph lit up the wasted face, and kindled the glazing eye, that looked across the smiling lake, across the vine-clad vale, across the dazzling peaks of the snowy Alps, across the beautiful world passing so fast away, to God's beautiful, glorious heaven opening beyond.

Blessed, O Jesus! are the dead who die in thee; yea, blessed, although on earth they may have known much tribulation.

Farel died in 1565, on the 13th of September, leaving behind him one child named Jean—the fruit of a marriage contracted five years before, somewhat to the scorn of Calvin, who thought his tardy matrimonial venture unsuitable in all respects, and who, in notifying the marriage to a mutual friend, sarcastically spoke of Farel as "our poor brother."

Works of Necessity.

When Mr. Hartshorn began in business he determined that his works, as well as his family and himself should rest upon the Lord's day.

It was not long before the foreman came to say that there was something wrong about the machinery, and that it would be necessary to have it repaired upon the coming Sabbath. Mr. Hartshorn asked if work could not be done after hours, or if a night couldn't be taken for it.

"No, that would be impossible," replied the foreman.

"Then we must use a day. We will have no Sabbath work here," said Mr. Hartshorn.

The foreman looked astonished "Take a day for it!" he gasped. "Stop the works! and with such a press of orders as we have on hand?"

"Certainly, if there is no other way," said Mr. Hartshorn decidedly.

The foreman went off, and somehow another way was found. The works were not stopped, and the repairing was not done on the Sabbath.

In connection with his bleachery, Mr. Hartshorn had something like a mile of shed-room where the cloth was spread to dry; and when it was not ready to take down on Saturday. several men were needed to look after it during the Sabbath.

"This will not do," said Mr. Hartshorn. "Everybody and everything belonging to me shall have rest upon the Lord's day."

"It can't be helped said the men. "Thousands of yards of cloth will be mildewed and spoiled if they are not looked after. Any one can see that it is a work of necessity. There is not one week in four when the cloth is all fit to be taken down on Saturday night. And look at the Globe bleacheries over here. Isn't Deacon Green one of your Sabbath men? Deacon of the Baptist church; should think he ought to be as particular as anybody; and he'll tell you it is impossible to carry on the bleaching business and not have some looking after it done on a Sabbath now and then."

"We will try it, however," said Mr. Hartshorn. "We won't have any cloth put out later than Thursday if the weather seems doubtful."

It is twenty years since Mr. Hartshorn began to work on this plan. His bleachery has prospered, and he is a rich man, and to-day stands at the head of his business. And in all these years he has never found Sabbath work to be a work of necessity, nor, as I have from his own lips, that his business has suffered in the end from resting on the Lord's day.—Congregationalist.

Talk at Home.

Endeavor always to talk your best before your children. They will learn with pleasure from the lips of parents what they will deem it drudgery to study in books; and even if they have the misfortune to be deprived of many educational advantages, they will grow up intelligent if they enjoy in childhood the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people. We sometimes see parents, who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent and uninteresting at home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first use what they have for their own households. A silent home is a dull place for young people, a place from which they will escape if they can.

"Help the Lame Dog Over the Stile."

In one of the interior towns in the province of Nova Scotia there was once an old tavern, such as could be seen in some parts of this country years ago. But the era of stage-coaching has gone by with us, and the railway and steamboats convey passengers so rapidly from one point to another that way-side inns are no longer a necessity. This old tavern of which I speak was a favorite resort of all classes of men. You could see there every day, when the mail-coach drove up, old men with gray hair, and spectacles on their noses, pouring over the weekly newspaper of the county, or discussing with the younger men different topics of the day. Hostlers, in their green jackets and high red-top boots, rushed about busy with the horses, putting up the newly arrived ones, and bringing out a fresh relay for the coach; coachmen cracking their long whips in their haste to be attended to; bar-maids bringing out beer and eatables to the passengers in the coach; "Boots," that adjunct of every public house (the familiar name of the errand boy), brushing the coats and hats of the riders—all these made a jolly sight to the lookers on from the coach windows. In the winter's evening the large fireplace, wherein blazed the great logs, never wanted for a dozen or score of visitors around its cheerful hearth.

This old tavern was three stories high, with gable windows in the roof, partly overgrown with vines, and hidden from the public road by tall trees. But the peculiarlity of the house was its sign. I can see it now, as it creaks on its rusty hinges, swung to and fro in the breeze: a large square sign, suspended on a pole set at the junction of the highway and the road which led up to the house. On one side of the sign was painted the picture of a fence, with a stile, and beside it a dog, with one of his legs bound up in a sling, and beneath was the inscription, "Help the lame dog over the stile."

It was a curious old sign, fitly associated with the curious old house. But the sign had a meaning, and its lesson was not forgotten by the patrons of the inn. Then, too, as the old sign swung on its rusty hinges, in storm and sunshine, its lesson was read by every one who drove by on the road. The passengers in the coach that daily passed by read it, and spoke to one another of the old dog and the curious motto, "Help the lame dog over the stile." That picture often came up in their minds during the day as they rumbled along on their journey. The children of the village saw it as they trudged along to school. It seemed quite like an old familiar friend to them, and the old dog was many a time drawn on the slates in school, and referred to in their noon-day talks and play. Indeed, that old sign was the great moral instructor of the village people, and from the pedagogue to the preacher, every one, at times, had the motto on his lips.

The sign hangs there no longer, for the old tavern has passed away; but the picture of the poor dog is not easily removed from memory. For the children of this generation, the picture here given is all that remains to recall the story of the tavern and its sign.

What did it mean?

I will tell you a story. In the pleasant village there lived three little girls who were great friends. They always played together, they went to the same school, and they were about the same age, though Lillie looked to be at least three years older than either Kitty or Bessie. The other two looked up to Lillie as their leader, and whatever she advised was sure to be followed. I cannot tell you of all the nice lunches they had together at school, the impromptu picnics they organized, the games they played, or the lessons they studied. They were pretty much like any little girls of their age who go to school to-day in our village school-houses. Now, because these little girls were always together, I would not have you think they did not play with the others, and love to share their good things with the rest of the children. By no means! Lillie was the favorite with many older girls, and Bessie and Kitty always had other little friends around them.

One day, as these three children came into school together and went to their seats, they noticed a new scholar on one of the front benches. She was evidently a shy little girl, for she kept herself hidden behind the tall post at the end of the room and never once looked around when the other girls came in. When she was put into a class she kept her head down so that no one could look in her eyes, and her long curls hid the blushes on her cheeks. She stood next to Kitty, and Kitty told the other girls at recess that she saw two big tear-drops on her cheeks when the lesson was over. Poor little thing! It was her first day at school. She was the only child of a washerwoman who lived half a mile from the school-house. Yet her white sunbonnet and neat calico dress, and her tidy shoes and stockings, showed that she had been taught to take proper care of her person.

Of course, just as soon as recess came, all the girls began to talk about the new comer. "Isn't she shy?" "Did you hear her little squeaky voice when the teacher asked her questions?" "Wonder who she is!" "Oh! Belle knows; she says her mother is a washerwoman who lives under the hill." Such were the questions which occupied the children during recess. The day passed and the little newcomer went home with the feelings of a deer escaped from the hunters. No one had spoken to her; she had eaten her lunch of brown bread and apples by herself in a corner of the school-room, and had cried over her arithmetic sums until school was out.

The next day at recess Lillie went into the school-room for her ball, and there in the corner she saw the little "new girl," with her head on the desk crying.

"Won't you come and play ball with us?" asked Lillie, pitying the little bashful child.

"No; thank you," was the response, broken by a sob.

So Lillie bounded out of the room, throwing up her ball and catching it as she ran. But in a moment she came back again. No one was in the school-room but the new scholar. Lillie went up to her and said, "May I sit by you?" The little head was raised from the desk and two little blue eyes filled with tears looked up at Lillie. It was the first offer of acquaintance which had been made to her. Her eyes were red with weeping and her hair tumbled about her face, yet Lillie thought nothing of the swollen eyes, nor of the little freckled face as she looked down at the child.

"There; never mind, don't cry, let me sit down here and talk with you," continued Lillie; and in five minutes the two had learned each other's name and broken the ice of friendship.

"Never mind that," said Lillie, as the little Margie told her how hard it was to get the sums right. "I'll show you." And so, taking her pencil and slate, Lillie wrote down the figures and showed her how to add and subtract and multiply. Fifteen minutes had passed before they knew it, and the little girls talked and worked together as if they had known each other a year.

"Lillie! Lillie! where is Lillie?" was shouted and echoed by half a dozen girls from the play-ground. Lillie heard their voices as she was deep in a multiplication example, but did not heed them. She was happy in her new task of helping the newcomer. And the tears had been dried up, and the heart of little Margie had been cheered by the kindly offices of friendship.

"Oh! here she is," said Kitty, as she bounded into the school-house and saw Lillie at the desk of the new scholar. "Why didn't you answer when we called you, Lillie?"

"Never mind me, Kitty, go and play without me; I'm busy now;" and Kitty went off to tell the other girls what she had seen, Lillie and the new girl actually eating their lunch together, and Lillie doing sums with her.

After that the little bashful Margie found other friends among the girls, for where Lillie led the way others were sure to follow.

But neither Margie nor Lillie ever forgot the day when Lillie came to her and spent her recess doing her sums. Their friendship continued during their school days, and Margie was always grateful for her friend's sympathy and aid, and I am sure Lillie never forgot the day in which she "helped the lame dog over the stile."—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

LESSON VIII—February 23, 1879.—THE KING IN ZION.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 2:1-12.

1 Why do the heathen rage,
And the people imagine a vain thing?
2 The kings of the earth set themselves,
And the rulers take counsel together,
Against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying,
3 Let us break their bands asunder,
And cast away their cords from us.
4 He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh:
The Lord shall have them in derision.
5 Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath,
And vex them in his sore displeasure.
6 Yet have I set my king
Upon my holy hill of Zion.
7 I will declare the decree:
The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son;
This day have I begotten thee.
8 Ask of me,
And I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance,
And the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.
9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron;
Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.
10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings:
Be instructed, ye judges of the earth.
11 Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling.
12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry,
And ye perish from the way,
When his wrath is kindled but a little.
Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

NOTES.

"Anointed. "It was customary in Old Testament times to consecrate a king, priest, or prophet, by pouring oil upon his head. David was thrice anointed king: (1.) Privately by Samuel, 1 Sam. 16 1-13; (2.) over Judah, 2 Sam. 2:4; (3) over all Israel, 2 Sam. 5:3. "The Lord's anointed" was a designation of the king chosen by God, 1 Sam. 12:3, 5; 2 Sam. 1:14, 16; 19 21; Isa. 45:1. The "Anointed" of this Psalm equals the Messiah (Heb.) and the Christ (Greek). Comp. Luke 4:18.

'Zion," the name of the southeastern hill of Jerusalem; captured by David, 2 Sam. 5:7, and made his residence and stronghold. Afterwards the general name for the holy mountain, the place of the special Divine presence; now often poetically applied to the church.

What does this lesson teach as to—

1. The opposition of the world to Christ?
2. The certainty of Christ's triumph?
3 The folly and danger of opposing him?
4. The place of fear in religion?
5. The blessedness of trust in God?

ILLUSTRATION.

"Christ a King." Kings are high-born, so was Christ; kings are anointed, so was Christ; kings are proclaimed on taking the throne, Christ was proclaimed by angels; kings have powerful attendants, Christ had legions of heavenly hosts in waiting for him; kings have rebels, though they rule by love, so has Christ many who rebel against him; kings have dominions, Christ has the universe for his dominion; kings wear crowns, and hold a sceptre, Christ has many crowns, and bears the sceptre of righteousness.

Brown of Oberlin, Ohio, forwards gratuitously any funds that may be designed to aid the Elichpoor mission or Mrs. Mumford's work in Bulgaria.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Rev. N. R Johnston, Reformed Presbyterian missionary to the Chinese in San Francisco, received into communion and administered the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper to ten Chinese young men, just before the Chinese New Year, Sabbath the 19th of January. Their New Year commenced this year on the 22d. The time of their New Year changes like the Jewish pascha acording to the lunar computation of time. Brother Johnston and his fellow communicants had a joyful occasion. It was the first Covenanter communion west of the Rocky Mountains.

—The First Reformed Presbyterian church of Philadelphia was organized Sabbath, January 28th, 1798. Stephen Young and Thomas Thompson were the first ruling elders. The late Rev. Samuel B. Wylie, D.D., ordained January 25th, 1800, was the first pastor, and continued to preach over the congregation until his death, October 13th, 1852. Rev. T. W. J. Wylie, D D., was ordained Oct. 27th, 1843, and installed the same day as assistant and successor to his father. He is still in office. No less than twelve of the Presbyterian churches of Philadelphia have sprung from this, including those of Rev. Dr. Stevenson, Rev. Dr. S. O. Wiley, and Revs. Drs. Steele, Sterrett, and McAuley.

FREE METHODIST.

—It is noticeable that in a considerable proportion of the accessions to the F. M. churches the rite of baptism is performed by immersion, the wish of the candidates being followed in this as in many other denominations.

—Revivals are reported from Dansville, Rochester, Gibson, N. Y., and Evansville, Ind.

—A new church was dedicated at Cochran, Ind., on the 26th ult. The same roof covers the church and a neat parsonage.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The pastor of the church at Menomonie, Wis., some time ago took three degrees in Masonry. He has been led to see how greatly opposed is Freemasonry to Christ and expresses himself to that effect, while endorsing the expositions that have been made of the order.

—At a recent ordaining council held by the Congregational church at Wheaton, one of the members was an old and prominent Freemason of Aurora, who used his influence in the lodge to break down the New England church of that city because of its rule excluding Freemasons.

—A Congregational pastor in Oregon, whose work would, under the usual rule, be assisted by the American Home Missionary Society, was repudiated by that organization when he first began to oppose the lodge in Portland, Oregon, twenty years ago.

—Rev. G. W. Bainum of Bunker Hill, Ill., has resigned his pastorate to take effect April 1st. He has been seven years there, and leaves a church of 174 members.

BAPTIST.

—Rev. W. W. Ames, of Menomonie, Wis., writes to the Standard of this city, noticing his twelve years ministry in that place, and the recent settlement of Elder J. L. Barlow, and adds a strong testimony for the truth in the following:

"Now, since you have treated us to a very interesting article on secret societies, allow me to say that while it is no mere pastime nor a matter of supreme popularity to rear and train a church in opposition to all organized secretism, yet, by the grace of God, it can be done. The ex-pastor, and his wife, who has performed an immense amount of labor for the church and cause in many ways, have deemed it an honor to suffer even the bitterest persecution to maintain the principle that Christ made no mistake when he committed the reformation of the world to the church, panoplied with the mighty armor of the Gospel, and charged with the duty of separateness from the world. Bro. Barlow is of the same mind, as many of your readers well know, and has suffered the loss of nearly everything for loyalty to his convictions. But we sincerely rejoice in seeing the promises of God fulfilled to him in providing for him this field of labor, with so many desirable appointments, and so much to inspire the hope of success by the blessing of God upon faithful labor.

"We can trust a faithful God for the future and we do most earnestly exhort all ministers and churches to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and the false worshipers of the lodge, "but rather reprove them;" knowing that He who sent the ravens to feed Elijah, has said to the faithful, "Thy bread and water shall be sure." Generally, we have even had good butter, and plenty of it, with tea, coffee, and other good things. Bro. Henderson truly says that 'the attitude of the church toward the lodges is a subject of vast and increasing importance;' and those who are watching the signs of the times can easily see that the number of churches that desire and will have pastors who will not fraternize with such organizations is rapidly increasing."

—Elder Barlow has had the drawback of a severe cold since settling in Menomonie, but we have the assurance that his ministrations are well received and able. Bro. Ames has not yet undertaken a new field.

—It is announced by the Examiner and Chronicle that the Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts, late of the First Baptist church of this city, has been called to the Bergen Heights church, N. J., with the understanding that the acceptance was sure.

—Dr. Everts' pulpit here is for the present supplied by Dr. Anderson, president of Chicago University. An encouraging effort was made a week ago to remove the most pressing part of the debt. Dr. Custis of the Michigan Avenue church has also lately resigned, a principal reason being the great debt of the church.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

—A Chambersburg, Pa., paper of late date speaks thus of Rev. J. M. Bishop's congregation in that city: "The series of revival meetings at the King street United Brethren church, are still in progress. Last Sabbath morning Rev. J. M. Bishop, pastor, administered the ordinance of baptism and received twenty-one persons into church fellowship, others still applying for membership. This young congregation is growing in spirituality and number. Their Sabbath school last Sabbath afternoon numbered one hundred and seventy-three."

—The Telescope says of the continued sickness of Bro. J. W. Hott, its editor-in-chief: "He is not regarded by his physician as in danger, but he will require quiet and rest for a while till he regains what he has lost by sickness. There is no marked disease in the case, and the difficulty seems to be general prostration. Let the brethren offer prayer for his recovery."

—Rev. F. A. Ramsey, pastor of the United Brethren congregation of Greensburg, Pa., has just received ten dollars' worth of books from the house of Scribner & Co., New York, as a prize given by them on the award of the faculty of Western Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh, for Hebrew scholarship. He is in the middle year of the course in that seminary.

—Bro. A. J Turner writes that at the quarterly conference at Canning, Ontario, held on the first inst., it was unanimously voted that the meeting was in favor of a convention in Canada to unite and encourage the friends of reform, at whatever time and place might be thought best.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. N. E. Jenkins has received the unanimous vote of the church at Syracuse, N. Y., to remain their pastor another year.

Bro. C. A. Hawley, whose labors to promote holiness, as well as his services as reform lecturer, have recommended him widely to the Christian public in several States, removed last week from New York State to Wheaton. The Wesleyan church at Wheaton will rejoice to gain such help now that Elder J. M. Snyder is soon to leave them.

—Rev. H. W. Hampe, formerly of the Evangelical Association, but who several years ago left that body for the Wesleyans on account of Masonic persecution, purposes removing to Kansas this month to take charge of a preaching circuit. Brethren Kiggins, Richards, Keller and others will find in him a worthy co-worker.

—Revivals are reported at Forestville, Hess Road and Eagle Harbor, N. Y.; Clarence, Iowa, (under the care of Elder Rathbun and wife); Ripley, O., and Oaks, Wis.

—C. Benner of Larwill, Ind., writes to the Wesleyan that because of the dissatisfaction of a number of members of the Methodist Episcopal church with its formality and connection with the lodge, ten of them have withdrawn and started a prayer meeting weekly. They have sent for assistance and are resolved to maintain a pure worship to the true God, having no fellowship "with the unfruitful works of darkness."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—At their last communion twelve members were added to Rev. Wm. H. McFarland's church in Cambridge, Ohio.

—Since the meeting of the General Assembly in May last the Board conducting the Freedmen's Missions has been obliged to borrow $3,000 or discontinue some of its schools. An earnest appeal is made to aid this branch of the church's efforts.

—Rev. Dr. R. A. McAyeal, president of the Iowa State Christian Associatian, was installed by the Boston Presbytery over the U. P. church, Lawrence, Mass., Jan. 22.

—Ex-President D. A. Wallace, now preaching at Wooster, Ohio, has been elected trustee of Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio.

—There are 41 students attending the Theological Seminary at Allegheny City, Pa.

—President McMichael, of Monmouth College reports that over 60 per cent. of the students in that institution are professing Christians; or in 207 students there are 139 Christians. In the four college classes proper 97 of the 114 students are Christians. It is reported that of 60,000 students in this country and Canada but 25,000 are professing Christians.

—It is a startling fact that in a single year fifty American preachers should have been found guilty of crimes or misdemeanor by the secular courts. The list of these reverend offenders, printed by the Cincinnati Commercial, is an interesting contribution to the statistics of 1878, and deserves the serious attention of the class chiefly concerned. Naturally the larger denominations furnish more black sheep than the smaller ones; thirteen of the fifty were Methodists, and eleven Baptists.

—The youngest child of the Russian Czarowitch was baptized recently with much gorgeous ceremony and great discomfort to himself. The Czar bore him to the front, where his little highness was taken out and plunged into the water, head first, three times. The priest closed his eyes and nose with his fingers, but the "august new-born," as he is styled in large capitals in the programme for the day, screamed like any ordinary baby, and evidently did not like it. He was then given to the godmother, wrapped up in blankets, and he dozed quietly while another prayer was said. He was only left in peace for a few moments. The priest annointed his ears, eyes, mouth hands, and feet with holy oil, that none of these members should do any harm in life. When the little fellow had recovered from this interruption and just begun to quiet down, he was again disturbed, and all his hair cut off.

—The Rev. Prof. Hitchcock wants the rich churches of New York and Brooklyn to throw their doors open in the afternoons to the masses, as the Roman Catholic cathedrals and churches do; to avoid ushers and let every man sit where he pleases. Until this is done, or something like it, the problem of bringing the Gospel to the masses will remain unsolved and Communism will increase.

—During the last year the American Bible Society has circulated about 1,000,000 copies of the Bible, the British and Foreign Bible Society about 3,000,000, the National Bible Society of Scotland 36,000, and other societies more than 1,000,000. The total circulation since the formation of these Bible societies has been 82,000,000 by the British and Foreign, 35,000,000 by the American, 5,000,000 by the National Bible Society of Scotland, and by the German societies 8,500,000, while the circulation of other societies has raised the total to about 160,000,000 copies of the Scriptures circulated in various tongues by Bible societies during the last twenty-five years.

OBITUARY.

Rev. Amos Finch, of Michigan, a life-long reformer, and a friend of the crushed millions of our country, a younger associate of Rufus Lumry [father of Prof. O. F. Lumry of Wheaton College] and of William W. Crane, a missionary in Kansas in the early struggles of that State between freedom and slavery, has gone to his final rest. He died of pleurisy and lung fever, at his home in Michigan, January 16th. 1879, in the 59th year of his age.—Wesleyan.

News of the Week.

—The quantity of grain in Chicago elevators Feb. 4th, was 2,016,771 bushels, and that afloat in vessels in the harbor 669.102 bushels. This is a much larger quantity than was ever before in store at one time in Chicago, and every station along the railroads from the west has grain ready to ship for Chicago so soon as the railroads will take it. The quantity in store here at this time last year was only 3,216,386 bushels. At Milwaukee the quantity at present in store is 4,330,970 bushels, besides a considerable quantity afloat in harbor.

—Senator Windom made an able speech last week on his plan for colonizing negroes from the Southern States in the Western Territories, where they can have protection and exercise their constitutional rights without interference. He particularly favored the introduction of negroes into Utah, which, he thought, would neutralize, if it did not entirely suppress, the Mormons. Mr. Windom was listened to with careful attention, particularly by the Democratic Senators, and it is undertsood that Ben Hill will reply to him.

—An important circular has been prepared at the Agricultural Department, and will be issued in a few days, reviewing the condition of the crops and live stock for last year. The report states that the crop of winter wheat shows a slight increase in the New England States, Gulf States and north of the Ohio river. In Illinois the increase is especially large, there being an extensive change from spring to fall sowing. West of the Mississippi the average of winter wheat has been reduced from that of last season. The condition of the crop on the 1st of January was not promising. The area of winter rye has fallen off about 1 per cent. The crop of corn for 1878 was 1,000,000,371 bushels, an increase of 29,000,000 bushels from 1877, but the average per cent at which it was sold was five cents cheaper than in 1877, thus reducing the aggregate market value of the crop about $44,000,000. The crop of wheat in 1878 was greater than that of 1877 by 57,000,000 bushels, but the average price at which it was sold was 30 cents per bushel lower, so that the aggregate market value of the crop was less than that of 1877 by about $60,000,000. The high price of wheat in 1877 was owing to the war in Europe. In 1878 92,000,000 bushels, or one-fourth of the entire crop of wheat was exported.

—The cattle trade with England is at a stand-still. The decision of the British government as to scheduling the United States as an infected country is looked for with anxiety. Should the decision be favorable to the States, the Canadian government will have to undo what they have done in prohibiting, for the space of three months, the importation of American cattle into Canada or their passage through any part of the Dominion. If this is not done the effect will be to send all the trade to United States ports during that period. Dr. McEachrane, a veterinary surgeon of Montreal, who recently visited the United States on behalf of the Canadian government in connection with the cattle plague, in an interview, says that the pleuro-pneumonia is rampant in the Eastern and Middle States, more particularly in the vicinity of Brooklyn. He failed to find the disease in Philadelphia. He adds that in Brooklyn every obstruction was placed in his way, and says these people milk cattle as long as they can get milk from them, and when the cattle reach an advanced stage of disease, they kill them, dressing and sending the meat to the New York market. McEachrane says the disease does not exist either in Canada or the Western States to any extent. It is understood that through the prohibition of American cattle in Canada considerable difficulty is experienced at Detroit in shipping stock to New York.

—It is estimated that from 30,000 to 35,000 men are now on a strike at Liverpool, England. The demeanor of the crowd was most threatening, in consequence of the sailors joining the strikers. At Waterloo dock the mob broke up the staging and did much damage. After their expulsion by the police they endeavored to storm the gates. At Princess dock the mob boarded the bark Cora, from Wilmington, N. C., which was unloading her cargo of resin, and extinguished the fires in the donkey engines and cut the hoisting gear. This mob numbered about 3,000. Smaller mobs terrorized the laborers at Queen's, Nelson's and Bramleynor docks. A number of laborers sent to Liverpool, from Wolverhampton, were compelled to return by threats of murder.

—A Paris dispatch says the Cabinet has been constituted, and the following are the changes:

M. Waddington, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Senator Leroyer, Minister of Justice.

M. De Marcere, Interior, and also Public Worship ad iuterim.

M. Jules Ferry, Public Instruction and Fine Arts.

M. Lepere, Agriculture.

Admiral Jaurequiberry, Marine.

Jules Ferry was appointed Minister of Public Instruction, instead of Minister of Commerce, as was first intended, because he manifested protectionist tendencies.

—A correspondent of the Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore, telegraphs from Afghanistan that supplies are obtained with great difficulty. The arrangements of the commissariat in the rear of the army are in a deplorable state. The commissary officers appear to be unable to forward stores to the front. Cavalry and artillery men, and horses are suffering from want of clothing and food. The people of the country are sulky and inclined to be insolent. All natives suspected of bearing arms in Candahar have been searched, the concealment of arms being punished. Four elephants and 108 bullocks have died from cold and starvation.

—The panic in Russia on account of the plague is almost incredible. Every class and station in life have petitioned for the entire cessation of all intercourse, even postal communication, between the rest of Russia and the Volga. Letters sent from Astrachan and Zaritzin are not received by the persons to whom they are addressed. Some people even refuse to take paper money, fearing the germ of infection might be communicated through it. It is almost impossible to describe the terror which has taken possession of the people. The Russian sanitary commission has proposed to shut off the Volga line from all intercourse with western Russia, and permit communication only under quarantine. Russian railway cars are not admitted to German territory. The export of grain from Poland will suffer severely from this restriction. The Roumanian government is discussing the expediency of prohibiting transit of Russian provisions sent to victual the Balkan army.

—A Vienna correspondent says the German ambassador at St. Petersburg has advised his government that the plague is spreading rapidly. It has passed the limits where, according to official accounts, the last cases were reported. He urges Germany to take immediate and energetic measures to repel it.

—The Presse says Austria is about to issue an order forbidding travelers from Russia to cross the frontier unless provided with passes from the sanitary authorities.

—A dispatch from Vienna states that from fifteen to twenty fresh cases of disease resembling the plague occur daily near Xanthi, Thessaly, and there is great mortality from the same cause at Raslog. It is believed that the infection was introduced by Kurd redifs. A Berlin dispatch says a case of plague is reported at Uyssokoye, near Moscow. This is possibly a revival of an old report.

Bees in Winter—Bee Hives.

It may be possible that, as the present winter has started in quite severe and cold, you may not have a few readers who would like to avail themselves of a simple method of feeding weak stocks of bees that may have been put away with short rations. If so, I will here say, take of good clean sugar and make a sirup of about the same we sometimes make for breakfast to use on buckwheat cakes; bring to a boil, and when cool fill up glass tumblers and tie a cotton cloth over the same, and turn upside down over a two-inch hole in the top of the hive, and, to your surprise, the bees will take it all through the cloth and store it in their combs for future use. I would recommend setting the hives you feed in a good warm and dry cellar while feeding; also you may save many stocks of bees with a very small expense in this way that will pay you from three to five hundred per cent the coming season.

Let me say to all your readers that now is the proper time to make and prepare all hives needed for 1879, but I would first advise all who have not already done so, to get a good movable frame hive, a sample hive, well made, and then make all the hives needed just as the sample hives; I mean inside measure, for here is where so many make a mistake. In the selection of the hive you may wish to use much depends, for there are many humbugs being palmed off as good moveable frame bee-hives, and not one in five hundred as patented of late date are worth the lumber it takes to build them. You may be inquisitive enough to ask, why all this, to which let me answer, that not one in a thousand who gets up a new hive ever had any knowledge of practical bee-keeping. They know nothing of the natural laws that govern the little bee in its labors in the hive, hence so many failures. I would further advise all who contemplate going into bee-keeping to make a judicious and careful selection of a hive of the most approved style of the movable frames, one in which there is no honey-board or other loose pieces to misplace before you can handle your bees, but rather select a hive that you can handle 25,000 bees in in turee minutes.—Interocean.

Roots for Cattle.

The Jerusalem artichoke is perhaps the next best root crop to raise in place of turnip, and the tubers are far superior to the very best varieties of Swedish turnips, as they contain a much larger percentage of nutritive matter, and when fed to cows do not impart any bad flavor to the milk. These are strong points in favor of this old and greatly neglected plant, which of late years is rapidly gaining favor among dairymen and stock-raisers generally. The artichoke being perfectly hardy, the tubers need not be dug unless wanted, and the crop left undisturbed one, two or more years forms a magazine of rich and valuable food to be drawn upon whenever desired. Every farmer should have a plantation of artichokes, if for no other purpose than a reserve crop to fall back on when other roots fail, as is frequently the case in unfavorable seasons. The artichokes may be fed advantageously to all kinds of live stock; and there are few roots that have so wide a range of adaptation, oxen, cows, sheep, horses and hogs eating them greedily and with unmistakably beneficial results. With the exception of carrots, we do not know of any root which has a better effect upon the digestive organs of horses than the artichoke; and one feed a day of these in winter may be given in place of oats or other grain, greatly to the benefit of the animal's health, even if his pleasure and comfort are not considered worthy of attention.

Boussingault, in his "Rural Economy," published many years since, said: "Of all the plants that engage the husbandman, the Jerusalem artichoke is that which produces the most at least expense of manure and manual labor." Kade states that "a square patch of this artichoke in his garden was still in full productive vigor after thirty-three years, throwing out stems seven to ten feet in height, although for a long time the plants had neither received any care nor manure." In the south of France, where the Jerusalem artichoke has been longest and most extensively cultivated, about ten tons of tubers are the average yield per acre; but fifteen have been produced under very favorable conditions. We may add here that, although this plant has received the name of Jerusalem artichoke and South America is generally credited as its native country, it has never been found either about Jerusalem or in South America; but the wild species from which our cultivated varieties doubtless originated, is found quite abundantly in many places in North America and especially in the Northwestern States. —Weekly Sun.

Economy in Fuel.

Our present modes of using fuel are generally understood to be exceedingly wasteful. In making steam for manufacturing and other purposes, where a powerful draft is required, less than one-tenth of the heat generated by the burning of coal is utilized. In cooking, the draft required is less, and so there is less waste; but there is no doubt that under ordinary circumstances four or five times as much heat goes up in the chimney as is used. A great saving can be made with ordinary appliances, if the cook will keep careful watch of the damper. Many times, "the oven will not bake" is that the draft is too strong. After the fire is going well, the damper may be turned as to delay the escape of the heated gases, and thus much heat may be saved.

Count Rumford declared that a dinner for 1,000 persons could be cooked with ten cents' worth of fuel, a statement which people were slow in believing, but a Frenchman has recently invented a cooking apparatus by which five cents' worth of coke can be made to cook a meal for 1,500 persons.

The time and place for the Michigan State meeting is now definitely arranged. The time is February 25th, 26th and 27th and the place the Opera House, Adrian, Mich. Mr. Stoddard and Mr. Ronayne will attend without fail and a Masonic degree shall be worked each evening. We want all friends throughout the State to be sure and attend, and it is suggested that in each locality a subscription be opened to defray expenses of hall rent, advertising and other expenses of the convention, and the same forwarded as soon as possible to the treasurer, Nelson Perkins, Hudson, Mich., or which is better bring it to the Adrian meeting.

Friends desiring bills to be sent them will send at once to this office stating how many they want.

J. P. STODDARD.
E. RONAYNE.

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

☞ We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertainment will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLURKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 13, 1879.

All delegates to the Ohio Convention are requested to forward their names by card to James M. Kirkpatrick of Utica, a few days before the meeting, and entertainment will be provided.

Papers friendly to the reform in Ohio are requested to copy the above notices.

Topics of the Time.

Many supporters of the American party platform will learn with surprise that the great principles embodied in that document were thirty years ago largely incorporated in a national political platform and candidates nominated and supported at the polls. The story of that movement, briefly told by Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit appears on another page. It need not slacken our ardor to know that the work of the American party was thus anticipated, the work begun must be accomplished. Already eminent authorities are demanding that political battles be fought no longer over traditions, and when the nation turns to live issues we must be ready to present some that will be accepted as urgent.

On Saturday the Senate took up and passed the House bill for the restriction of Chinese emigration, after adding a few inconsiderable amendments and rejecting others of more importance. The main features of the bill have been discussed by the press and President Hayes understands the temper of the people. If he signs the bill he will know that it is against the protest of the country. The Kearneyites of California accept the measure as a partial accession to their monstrous demands, and the politicians of that State flatter themselves that by throwing this sop to Cerberus they will stop his baying. But Mr. Hayes will hardly care to permit a plain violation of a solemn treaty, for the sake of gratifying such a sentiment. The Burlingame treaty was negotiated almost by force; and by it the country secured important advantages in turn permiting unrestricted emigration. Of course the honorable way to proceed would be to negotiate for the modification of the treaty, and the judgment of the President must be relied on to maintain national integrity.

The most important business now before Congress before its adjournment will be to meet the appropriation of $25,000,000 for the next fiscal year. This sum includes funds for the payment of arrearages of pensions during the year. The estimates first made of the immense sums needed to meet the demand for pensions under the new law, have been cut down to $26,800,000 by the sub-committee. To meet these claims new bonds must be issued, or the revenue increased, or a new issue of currency made. The last method has some able advocates and will probably be adopted. Some members must abate their prejudices against increasing the volume of currency if it is done, and after all this may be the most serious obstacle. Large amounts of currency are being invested in the popular four per cent bonds, for which the dmand is so great that the Bureau of Printing and Engraving is running night and day and four relays of clerks working six hours a day are required in the Register's office to supply the call. What is thus withdrawn from circulation can hardly be supplied through the usual sources. The country will therefore look favorably on the suggestion that Congress increase the coinage of silver for a definite amount to cover the expenses of this year and next, and provide thereafter for such amounts as may be necessary to pay the arrearages of pensions. Neither the bonded nor the non-interest bearing debt of the government would be increased by this measure.

Rare commercial or other intercourse with northern Brazil has shut out from the world largely the frightful scenes now passing in that remote region. Our missionaries in India and China, beside relieving the miseries of these nations have reported them to the world; Brazil, nearly given up to Romanism, has been less fortunate. A year ago drought and failure of crops drove the wretched inhabitants from the interior to the cities and the coast, where the scanty means for their relief being exhausted they have perished miserably by hundreds of thousands. A letter from that country to the New York Herald says that this is believed to be the greatest calamity in two hundred years. Five hundred thousand people have been swept away by starvation and disease. The small pox and black plague carried off victims in appalling numbers, and thousands of bodies are rotting on the open trenches at Lagoa, Funda. Thousands of other corpses are torn and devoured by wild animals. The starving peasants eat up their own offspring. Some places, including the city of Cerea, are depopulated. There are terrible struggles for life. The children are abandoned, and the young souls sold for bread. Thousands of living skeletons were to be seen. Government aid is tardy. The letter presents a picture of woe such as can hardly be parelleled in history except by the siege of Jerusalem and the black death which desolated Europe in the fourteenth century.

A final treaty has been signed between Russia and Turkey which declares peace and cordial relations to be re-established between the two nations. Let us hope not again to be violently disturbed by war. Russia has yet a speck of war in that part of her horizon, but it is with Roumania, which has seized an important fortress, ejecting the Russian garrison. The new treaty re-affirms that part of the San Stefano agreement not modified by the Berlin Congress. The payment of war indemnity is left for future agreement. Servia, Montinegro, and Roumania are now independent, and Russia leaves them to negotiate for themselves with the Porte relative to their claims for war indemnity. Russian troops have already begun their final movement homeward and the evacuation of Adrianople and other important points is progressing rapidly.

Edison, the electrician and inventor, has been surpassed by a woman. Last summer the Metropolitan Elevated railway company of New York applied to him for a device to deaden the noise of passing trains, which had become almost unbearable and threatened to seriously interfere with the success of the road. He gave them no relief, but Mrs. Mary A. Walton, remembering her father's blacksmith shop with its anvil set in a box of sand, experimented in her cellar until she had perfected a simple arrangement which promises to meet the case.

The Liberty League and the Platform of 1848.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

In 1846 a national convention was convened at Port Byron, N. Y., the design of which was to induce the Liberty party to declare itself a permanent national party for the securing of all the political interests of the country. But the convention was not then ripe for such declaration. In 1847 a second convention with similar design, was called to meet at Macedon, N. Y., and, although progress towards the end sought had been made, the object was not attained. A discussion of overwhelming interest was carried on for two days between the pros and cons, which resulted in a wide spread conviction in favor of a universal reform party. But the time had not yet come for the final action.

In 1848 a third convention of "All persons in favor of a righteous civil government," was convened in the city of Rochester, which resulted in a new organization called "The Liberty League," or "The Righteous Civil Government Party." Its platform of principles included all the legitimate duties of civil government, as: the immediate abolition of slavery, substitution of arbitration for national wars, the abolition of tariffs, land monopoly, the liquor traffic, oath-bound secret societies, and all political distinctions on account of sex or color. In a word to carry out the principles of equal rights in all their applications and consequences, and to support such measures as shall be most conducive to political, social and personal freedom.

It was at this convention that Gerrit Smith received his first nomination for President of the United States; and as Charles C. Foote had been for years advocating these principles in speeches, in conventions, in by places and in high places, he received the nomination for Vice-president.

In the same year the old "Liberty Party" convened in national convention at the city of Buffalo, adopted in the main our platform, and nominated our candidates. During the same year the National Reformers, or Land Reformers, as they were familiarly called, placed at the head of their national ticket the name of Gerrit Smith. The first choice of that party for the Vice-presidency refused to run, and the name of C. C. Foote was again in nomination. The number of votes by these three parties I have forgotten. They were too far in advance of their age to be in the majority.

A noble band of men were the pioneers in those reforms: the Smiths, the Goodells, the Greens, the Chaplains, the Wrights, the Bradburns, the Plumbs, the Tappans, the Hudsons, the Curtisses, the Clarks, the Jacksons, the Glenns, the Shepherds, and a whole army equally true to the great law of eternal equity. We who were in our prime then are now in the sere and yellow leaf, while our seniors have accomplished their mission and rest from their labors, and their works do follow them. But the principles for which they consecrated their lives "have their home in the bosom of God" and can never die.

The Apocalypse Fulfilled.

BY D. B. TURNEY.

The church of God was warned. Freemasonry was foretold; its character clearly delineated; and the magnitude of the danger flowing from it made known. In the sublime language of Revelation, this artificial institution is called "the Image of the Beast," from the fact that it imitates the Latin kingdom. The Greek expression for that kingdom was hee Latinee basileia, and the modern Greek title of the Masonic order is Preimasonri. According to the numerical value of the Greek letters contained in these names, the Latin kingdom denotes 666, which is the number also signified by Freemasonry, the image or artificial imitation of that corrupt government.

The image was to be distinguished by the possession and enforcement of a death-penalty, which is the distinguishing fact in Freemasonry. Its entire framework is murderous. Frightful references to death-penalties are used as signs of recognition between Freemasons; and it delights in devoting its enemies to destruction, and it has helped to swell the numbers of the murdered dead with multitudes of victims. An image characteristically speaks falsely concerning its own age; for the image of an old man must look as old as the man it represents, and be really younger than he is. So Freemasonry makes false claims to a great antiquity. It tries to pass itself off as an "ancient institution." And it finds some fools who really give some credit to its awful lies about its age and origin; but the vast age claimed does not inhere in the craft, but in the Latin kingdom which it imitates, or the bloody old beast of which it is the speaking image. That beast as seen by John, arising in the fullness of its divided power with crowns or dazzling diadems on all its horns, his imperial head vigorous and its deadly wound made well,—which healing took place A. D. 800, when Charlemagne restored the empire and was crowned accordingly by Pope Leo III.,—and to whom the dragon surrendered his power, seat and great authority, had the real age which his abominable image pretends to possess. And the image of this beast which had the wound that was healed, as if fated in its very history to resemble the beast, has also received a deadly wound in the exposure of Freemasonry by members of the fraternity. The revelation of Morgan was followed by those of Bernard, Allyn and others, till Masonic signs, grips, oaths and death-penalties, with all the inside workings of the order, were all laid bare, and multitudes of renouncing Masons testified that the disclosures were true.

The protection of Morgan's murderers by the fraternity aroused popular indignation to such a pitch, that 2,000 Masonic lodges surrendered their charters and suspended, and "out of a little more than 50,000 Masons, 45,000 of them turned their backs upon the lodge to enter it no more." Yet the base-born institution, convicted of murders, criminality and falsehood, defeated at the polls, pursued by law, and scorned by the honest citizens of the nation, meeting argument with injury and silent scorn, trying to laugh down every exposition, and planning assassination for betrayal, managed to recover from its wound, to establish in the very heart of our Republic a monopoly of unpunishable murder and crime; and now, men continue to wonder after the image, the artificial beast whose "deadly wound was healed."

When the Goths were driven across the Danube before the host of the Huns, and the stroke of the northern sword deeply smote the imperial head of the terrible beast, he seemed to have yielded up his power and his life; but when he recovered, men were ready to do homage to the beast whose "deadly wound was healed." The same fact held true of Freemasonry after its survival of the great wound from which so many thought it could never recover. Here we certainly see the unmistakable image of the beast clearly revealed. There are murderous vows, oaths of murderous intent, connected with every degree in every rite of the Masonic system. In its chosen mode of existence and organic structure, it bears the brand of Cain in its forehead. Bloody, bloody, bloody image of a thrice bloody beast! As the beast had power "to make war with the saints, and to overcome them," so the image had power to "speak and cause that as many as would not worship it should be killed." Miller, Abbott, Morgan, Prichard, Priest, Noah Smith, Captain Ariel Murdock, Richie, Gavitt, Hunt, and hundreds of others have fallen victims to Masonic murder, and the lives of Ronayne, Rathbun, and other brave-hearted men who are exposing the affairs of the foul fraternity, are preserved only by great care and vigilance. Masonic murders are more numerous than many people think. * * *

The great beast had "a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies," and his image has much to say of the great things of the order, and its very songs sing of Masonry, "Thou art divine!" The lodge is full of self-laudations, and lowers its God himself into a "Grand Architect." I say, "its God," for the God of the Bible differs essentially from the Masonic deity. The titles which men assume in the lodge are certainly incompatible with Christianity, as incompatible as those received by the leading monarchs and emperors of the great Latin kingdom.

Two Sermons.

Dear Cynosure:—About a month ago I read the report of a speech by a Masonic chaplain on St. John's Day to the white-aproned brotherhood, and was struck with the same sentiments in a sermon of the Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Chicago, published in the papers of February 3d. I give you an extract from each. As Dr. T. is a Knight Templar we need not wonder much, but he is still professedly a good Methodist. I may say that while the sermon may be quite acceptable to any Masonic ear there is a great defect in it to the Christian ear, for the name "Christ" does not occur in his whole sermon. He does say, however, that "God comes to man as a Saviour, as a Vine, as the Truth, that man may be in him; and he appoints prayer and repentance and all holy living as ways over which the mind and heart may move to that great end."

The Masonic chaplain comes out better. In his sermon to Masons he does venture to mention the name of Christ. Thus, "Supreme sympathy with God requires Christ for its foundation and I can build up no true character without him" (Christ). This, however, is not sound Masonry, and is in contrast with his text which was "Other foundation can no man lay," and Masonically left out the rest of it in these words "than that is laid which is Jesus Christ."

Admitting that both extracts may pass when in good company, I would now show how both these divines, in their respective sermons the one to Masons on St. John's Day, the other to a public Christian audience on a Sunday in a Methodist church, agree to send men to heaven without Christ provided they try to build their character up according to their own ideas of goodness. The chaplain says:

"A good character is every thing to the brother.... Without a good character you can scarcely be a good Mason.... This character building shall all be tried.... God shall one day try character. St. Paul says, 'The day shall declare it.... If any man's work abide.... he shall receive a reward. Then shall the King say.... Come, ye blessed,'" etc.

And so he concludes, leaving Masons in comfortable hope when they do their best, for he had said, "It cannot be denied that the roll of its members contains the names of many whose religious opinions are confessedly inimical to Christianity. .... Masonry is for man as a citizen of the universe.... It is not within its province to teach systematic theology." In other words Christ and Mohammed are on an equal footing.

Dr. Thomas says: "Character is the final cause, the end, the explanation of our being....It is something that must go with us wherever we go—must last as long as we last....Life is the loom, time the weaver. O, immortal soul! fill every flying shuttle with golden threads. This is the treasure that moth and rust cannot destroy....Be rich in lofty resolves and noble deeds—in beautiful memories and bright hopes and loves of the heart....Value more....everything that leads the heart in the right way. Avoid evil thoughts. Think right and you will do right." And so concludes the report of his sermon.

THOS. HODGE.

POPULAR EDUCATION.

Napoleon, who spoke, not irreverently, of Christ as Le grand democrat, had undoubtedly convictions similar to those of Disraeli, Burke and De Tocqueville, mentioned in this plea for the elevation of the masses by Joseph Cook. The extract is the conclusion of a late lecture on Socialism:

Universal suffrage is not likely to be limited very much in our time. I would have the reading test applied; I think that would do good, but it would not free us from the power of demagogues to lead the discontent between labor and capital into such riot as to bring at times perils upon trade. We certainly have nothing to depend upon here but public sentiment and the national will. I read in the Atlantic Monthly an article of high merit on certain dangerous tendencies in American life, but in the next number I find a criticism upon it, to the effect that the only way to keep the United States in order is to reduce instruction for the masses to reading, writing and arithmetic. We never shall do that. "Preach the gospel to every creature;" that is the command—[applause]—obedience to which has brought into the world most of our present political difficulties, and obedience to which, if continued, will drive them out. [Applause.] A continent of humanity is rising from under the sea, and for a while it is a pestilential swamp; but the remedy is not to stop its rising and crush it back into chaos. The remedy is to keep lifting it, lifting it, until all its morasses are firm, sweet land. [Applause.]

Let us fasten your attention upon the great outlines of our means of safety. They are the prevention of the formation of an impecunious class, of an unemployed class, and of an ignorant and unprincipled class. I hold that in a republic neither of these classes can be allowed to exist with safety to the institutions of the land.

If we are to attack the evils which lead to the formation of these four classes, we may as well strike first at the tap-root—the unprincipled class, the morally uneducated class. There must cease to be an unprincipled class, or there will be an ignorant class, and then an unemployed class, and then an impecunious class, and then an explosive class, lying under the sparks of the oratory of demagogues. There is nothing attracting more attention throughout the world to-day than the methods of preventing the formation of these four classes in Christendom, and there is nothing but Christian endeavor that can prevent the formation of an unprincipled class. [Applause.] We shall not call on writers of cipher dispatches to enter into that business. [Laughter and applause.]

Lord Beaconsfied stands now in the eye of the world, and when he was younger by some thirty years he wrote a book called "Tancred," in which many of the ideas he is now carrying out were expressed. You remember that he sends a young English lord from the Thames to the Jordan in search of remedies for the social and political evils of Europe. "We have had a diffusion of liberty," Lord Beaconsfield says, "and, to some extent, of intelligence and property; but the people are not happy." Here is the man whom Carlyle calls the Hebrew sorcerer, leading English lords and British interests as by some charm of superior blood; and this aristocrat, this guide of the privileged classes, makes his English lord finally kneel down in the Holy Sepulcher, and at Bethany, and in Bethlehem, to obtain from the Unseen Powers a response to his prayer for guidance as to the healing of nations. He passes through the jaws of death at Petra, and, at last, in the midnight of Sinai, Tancred, as you remember, goes alone to the spot where the law was delivered, kneels down there under the brightness of the Eastern stars, offers prayer in agony, falls at last into a trance, and, looking up, he beholds the genius of Christianity with her hands spread over the continents, and the response his petition received from her was in these words, Lord Beaconsfield's own, the summit of his wisdom as a man of affairs:

"The equality of man can only be accomplished by the sovereignty of God. The longing for fraternity can never be satisfied but under the sway of a common Father. Announce the sublime and solacing doctrine of theocratic equality."—(Tancred, book iv, chap. viii.)

What does this message mean? It signifies that in a just organization of society men will encourage what God encourages, and repress what God represses. It means that in a perfect organization of society the bad man is not the equal of the good man, but that whoever is loyal to God, him God and all good men shall help. In short, the idea of democratic equality and of theocratic equality conflict now in the world, and America going back to the ideas of our fathers, would be going back only to the ideas of Beaconsfield; only to the ideas of De Tocqueville and Burke, who tells us that men never so much need to be theocratic as when they are most democratic; only to the ideas of Christianity from its first age to the present hour. Let us lift high above all clouds of class animosity and political intrigue the great ensign, bearing for its motto "theocratic equality." Whenever the church does that in America, she will see in the heavens above the banner a cross appearing, and above that the words: "By this sign we conquer." [Applause.]

We referred to the fact that a man had been called down, who rose in a prayer-meeting in New York city to say that he believed Freemasonry to be an enemy to the Gospel, and expressed pleasure that there was one man with courage enough to give such healthy testimony. The Observer replies by saying: "There is no accounting for tastes, certainly; but if all things are done decently and in order, men who do not know what is decent should be told so when they are out of order." It would be affectation in us, of course, to claim "taste" equal to that of our contemporary, but the point is this: Is a man "indecent" and "out of order," who rises in a public religious meeting and says that an order which ignores and denies the Savious is an enemy to Gospel?—United Presbyterian.

PAPAL INTOLERANCE.

That the Papacy never changes in its feelings toward Protestants, but continues to hate and wherever it has the power, to persecute and maltreat them, is now so well known and is capable of such abundant proof that it is needless to deny it. Liberal Papists are nowhere found but in Protestant countries. Wherever they are dominant and have the civil law to uphold and back them up, they soon show that they are as intolerant as ever in their opposition to Protestants and their determined hostility to Protestantism. Sometimes we hear individvals, whose acquaintance with the history and character of the Papacy is very superficial, telling us that amidst the changes which, in the course of ages, have passed over all religions, Popery has participated in and been influenced by these changes; it has been ameliorated and liberalized by them, so that the cruelties which, in the dark ages, some of the Popes inflicted on the Protestants, could not be repeated now, but are regretted and denounced by the great body of the present adherents of the Church of Rome. But such talk only shows the ignorance of those who indulge in it. They forget that the Romish church never changes, especially in her treatment of and intolerance regarding Protestant heretics. A most striking proof of this we have in the late utterances of Pope Leo XIII., regarding the permission of the Italian government to establish Protestant schools in Rome. A deputation had waited on him of high-flying, intolerant Ultramontanes, who regard all such innovations with alarm and dread. His holiness, in reply, said that "he received with joy the intimation that the people of the Trans-Tiberine districts view with loathing these unholy schools in which faith and innocence ran the risk of being lost. He deplored also that in Rome, the center of Christianity, permission had been given to heretical sects to erect places of worship, to open schools, and to disseminate among the people injurious publications, and that he, the Sovereign Pontiff, was not permitted, as he desired to do, to oppose a remedy to the impiety which invaded the city." He further said that "the enemies of the Catholic faith were scattering gold in profusion in order to fill their schools and conventicles," and that bread "bought at such a price killed the soul and brought down the malediction of the Almighty." Now these, be it observed, are the words of Leo XIII., who, we are told, was to be a very different person from his predecessor, Pio Nono. He was, it was said, to introduce a new and much more liberal policy—a policy that would accommodate itself to the changed condition of the church and the world, and by ignoring the intolerance and bigotry of bygone ages would introduce a new era of liberality and kindliness toward Protestants and others who do not belong to the church of which he was the chief. But these expectations the Pope himself, by such intolerant utterances, has not only disappointed, but utterly falsified. Accomplished as Pio Nono was in slandering, denouncing and cursing all that dared to differ from him, Leo XIII. is quite equal to him. Between the two there is not a pin's difference to choose upon, and the worst feature in the Pope's denunciation of the Protestant schools is its utter falsehood and untruthfulness. We cannot allow ourselves to suppose that the Pope is ignorant of the character of the instruction given in those Protestant schools which he denounces. He must know it, and if he does so, and yet can call it impious "and immoral," his slanderous perversion of what is truth is not only lamentable, but appalling. He laments also his inability to put down all such institutions, inasmuch as he has been deprived of the temporal sovereignty, whereby he would have been at full liberty to stamp out all Protestant institutions and subject their abettors and upholders to the tender discipline of the Roman church. Nothing can be plainer to any one than that if Leo XIII. had the power he would like his predecessors, be a persecutor in deed as well as in spirit; and yet with marvellous inconsistency, he has actually appealed to the British Government to throw the mantle of their civil protection over his missionaries whom he is sending to Cyprus, and whom he wishes to be protected in their proselyting efforts among the Cypriot Greeks and Turks. Did it never strike him that he was wanting from the British government a privilege which which he denounces the Italian government from according to Protestant teachers in Rome? But this is a specimen of Popish fair play. They take all they can get and more; but they give nothing in return, save when compelled to do it. The reciprocity of Popery is ever one-sided. It reminds one of a loaded, unjust balance, which, while professing to give those with whom it deals just weight, always aims at securing the biggest half for itself. —Christian Instructor.

FROM FATHER PRESTON.

THINGS LEFT UNSAID AT THE LATE ILLINOIS CONVENTION.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have just looked over the proceedings of the State Convention as reported in the paper of Nov. 28th, and the thought occurs to me now that did then, that, as is often the case, some of the most important business is left till the last and then hurried through like the omnibus bills at the closing hours of Congress.

It was so with some of the resolutions brought forward by the committee, especially those on the administration of justice and the right to challenge Masonic jurors. I did want to say a few words on those resolutions, but there was no time.

The influence of the lodge on the courts and in the jury box and on the grand jury is hardly less pernicious than it is on the Christian church. A judge of the circuit court in Kane county said not ten years ago that "the grand hailing sign of distress" had been given him by parties at the bar on trial, and I have myself witnessed the powerful influence of the lodge in the traverse jury room and on the grand jury, and I think there are few intelligent men fifty years old who have not.

The great question now is, How can this overshadowing influence best be counteracted? I think by improving every opportunity to challenge in every case where the parties are Masonic and Anti-masonic. Brother Masons who respect their oaths and adhere to their obligations are under a ten-fold obligation to favor and aid each other than natural brothers are, and if we have a right to challenge a Mason because he is a Mason, we have an undoubted right to ask every candidate if he is a Mason and to make a witness of himself to prove the fact, and in order to exclude the Masonic candidate we should have the right to prove what Masonry is, especially the full letter of the oaths and to compel the witness to testify as to the truth or falsity of the oaths, and it would be well in every case where it is possible, to have a seceding Mason on hand for a witness.

Now, sir, let this method be faithfully tried and a respectable Mason rejected by the court and it would do more to open the eyes of the community than half a dozen lectures. It would be the topic of conversation at the breakfast table the next morning in every intelligent family in the neighborhood of the court. Let the oaths, obligations and penalties taken and assumed by the candidates and the ineffable fooleries of the initiation and ridiculous indecencies be fully exposed before the court and the bar and the spectators and it would be an eye-opener to the whole crowd.

There can be no question but every man who chooses to do so would have a perfect right to go thoroughly into this method of testing the qualifications of the men who are to try his case.

Let the experiment be fairly tried by every "cowan" who has a suit at law with a Mason and the results reported to the Cynosure for publication.

A letter from an American resident of Costa Rica states that in July a number of Jesuits who had been expelled from Guatemala arrived in Costa Rica, but were ordered when within ten miles of the capital to stop. Congress met the same day, and two thousand Masons appeared in the hall of Congress in a body and petitioned for the expulsion of the Jesuits, on the ground that they were "mischievous members of society." The President, who is a Mason, and several prominent members, spoke against the Jesuits, and the result was that Congress voted $1500 for their immediate wants and ordered them to leave the country.—Christian Instructor.

What We Need.

BY ELD. S. C. KIMBALL.

As Christian reformers we need the Cynosure. We have many good papers like the New York Witness and Bible Banner, that occasionally speak out against the wicked rule of lodgeism; but these papers are supported by subscribers who are, to a great degree, indifferent to secret lodges, and it would appear from the course pursued that their existence depends upon not prominently discussing the question of Masonic rule. These moderate papers are doing a good work, but rather follow than lead public opinion. We must have a paper like the Cynosure, which is national, unsectarian, Christian, and which is neither directly nor indirectly dependent upon lodge power. The conductors of the Cynosure have been wise in not tying it to any side issue. There is no objection to allowing any conscientious Christian to debate the millenium, the advent, church government, the character of the U. S. Constitution, the advantages of instrumental music in public worship, etc., but we must not divide the anti-lodge hosts, the purified church, on such issues. The main question is not when will Christ come, is he recognized in our Constitution, or is he pleased with instrumental music: but, shall pure religion be banished from the earth, shall Jesus Christ be driven out of his own church, and a corrupt system of paganism take the place of Christianity? We may argue minor questions but let us not wrangle or divide over them.

One thing more we need here in the East: a tract carefully written, stating that Blue Lodge Masonry is thoroughly and completely exposed by Edmond Ronayne, and signed by as many seceding Masons as will sign it. Let every signer state his residence and occupation, and perhaps it would be well to certify character of the signers by the most convenient and convincing testimony. I know it may be truly answered, that the proof that Masonry is correctly revealed is already abundant and within the reach of every one. But it is still true that of the 40,000,000 of people in the United States, 39,000,000 do not know that Edmond Ronayne has correctly revealed Masonry. What we need is a two or four-page tract with proof so conclusive as to carry conviction to every honest reader. Masonry is dead the moment we can conclusively prove to the Christian public that Edmond Ronayne has revealed it. We want a document that will overbear the testimony of local liars when put against the truthful witness of honest strangers. In my view, swearing adds nothing to the word of a Christian. Let 10 or 20 or 50 or 100, the more the better, ministers, deacons, and other honest men, signs uch a paper and it would wonderfully supplement the work of Bro. Ronayne. Print such tract and then pour it into the churches, conferences and ministers meetings, and Baal worship would fall like Dagon's image in the presence of the ark.

Meanwhile, let us extend the circulation of the Cynosure and the many excellent Anti-masonic tracts we already have, and above all look to the God of heaven to vindicate the Gospel of his Son when assailed by the deism and infidelity of the secret lodge.

Reform News.

Proposals for Indiana.

DELPHI, Ind., Feb. 7, 1879.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am well after passing through the hardest campaign of this year, viz., about thirty lectures; and I can truly say I have been well used. I found plenty of friends in every neighborhood where I have been and think I am safe in saying some good has been done. I must rest and get home.

I want to hear immediately from counties west and south of Indianapolis for March and April. I have found these months about as favorable for lecturing as any in the year. If the friends in western Ohio between Ft. Wayne and Utica will send me word I would be glad to attend the Ohio meeting, March 4th, and give some lectures on the way to pay my expenses.

The tried and true friends in Indiana are not discouraged. They are still strong in the faith. On this trip I have found a host of them in Hendricks county. I found Wm. H. Figg still at his post, a deliberate, faithful and clear-headed sentinel. He should have the sympathy of all our friends; his family for ten consecutive weeks has been sick with typho-malarial fever and yet he aided me much by his advice and financially. His aged father is also a firm defender of truth under whatever circumstances it presents itself. I shall long remember Reno, Coatsville and Hadley people. Samuel Phillips also must never be forgotten.

In all this hard battle of five weeks I had not a hard word said to me until the moment of starting. The cars were in sight, when a Mason came on the platform and among other offensive expressions said I had the evening before uttered the "infernalest lot of lies." I replied that I agreed with him, for that is what Masonry is and I had given pure Masonry. A number of seceding Masons in that vicinity confirmed my lecture and told the Masons that I had given more and better Masonry than they had ever learned before.

I am now arranging for March and April in the west and south counties. Now, dear friends, let me hear from you and let us, trusting in God, pull all together.

Yours truly, S. L. COOK.

The Iowa Lecture Work.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, Feb. 10, 1879.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wish to call the attention of the friends of reform in Iowa to the following action of the last State Convention:

"The Committee on State Agent reported that D. P. Rathbun be and hereby is invited to act as State agent and lecturer, for the State of Iowa the ensuing year; and in addition to the support as salary which he may collect from friends where he may lecture, this Convention pledges $200; provided, however, that the collections taken by himself be an insufficient salary as agreed upon between himself and the Executive Committee."

This report was adopted by the Convention as the minutes will show. In accordance with this action the Committee on State Agency invited Bro. Rathbun here, and he came, believing this action was taken in good faith. But you will remember there was no provision made to raise this money. Now it seems clear to some of us that the Executive Committee are under obligations to provide immediately for the payment of at least a portion of this money, or call a convention that the people may have a chance to act. There is abundance of work for the Agent to do but he cannot live without something more than his expenses. What shall we do? No time to lose. Yours for reform.

JOSEPH MCCLEERY.

New England Notes.

DEAR BRO. KELLOGG:—I know of no better field for the discussion of this great question than Connecticut. If the city of Hartford is left out, Hartford county has to-day a majority of Anti-masons. All it wants is that this Anti-masonic sentiment should be developed and organized and it is a mighty power. There are many old men who participated in the discussions of forty years ago in whose hearts the old fire still burns; and we have a few young men who are earnest and devoted to this reform. The timidity of the ministry is the saddest feature of all.

Our good brother Philip Bacon had visited West Hartford and engaged the Town Hall of the proper authorities, and my lecture was announced for January 28th; but another meeting which had been appointed for the 30th was changed to that time and we were shut out. Bills were posted for a meeting on the 30th and the authorities saw that our rights were maintained. The large hall was full. The Masons, who have a large lodge here, were out in full force and occupied the front seats. They seemed astonished, but were quiet. Four-fifths all that large audience were manifestly Anti-masonic. They voted by a large majority to have a lecture on the next evening; but the Masons were full of wrath. There were all kinds of lying reports and threats of violence. The janitor next evening cleaned his lamps and went out, locking the hall. Fifteen minutes afterward he returned and found all the burners removed and carried away. The hall filled up with people and one or two lanterns sufficed until the lamps were brought from the Congregational church and the hall was well lighted. Then Rev. Mr. Hatch, Congregational pastor, made a ringing speech in favor of free discussion and the lecture went on. There was no disturbance except from one Mason, a preacher who professed sanctification, who said I lied, and hissed. The point he denied was that the Masonic candidate took off his shoes. Poor man! The devil cheated him badly. He gained nothing and lost much by his folly and sin.

My next point was Glastonbury. Here in a large fine hall I met about 150 people, many of them Masons, who were very bitter in their feelings and words. The devil here was not of the dumb sort, and sought to put me down with a flood of words. Those who did the talking were nearly all infidels and showed their opposition to Christianity most manifestly. The result was a triumph of truth. The gentleman who owns the hall said I could have it free for another lecture, which I accordingly appointed for the 7th inst.

Last night I spoke to a large quiet audience in the Town Hall in Hebron. I enjoyed the hospitality of Rev. Mr. Mack, formerly of Peoria, Ill., and am now stopping with Rev. A. Sharpe, a faithful friend of our reform, who has spent his ministry mostly in the West. My next point is East Hampton, Connecticut.

WILLIMANTIC, Conn., Feb. 12.

From Hebron I went to East Hampton where the lecture-room of the Congregational church had been engaged and bills posted for a lecture. Anti-masonry here is somewhat passive, while Masonry is earnest and aggressive. The result was that the Congregational minisister, who says that Masonry is wicked, having more of the fear of the lodge than of the Lord, told me that he was very sorry that I had come there; thought all such lectures to be evil, and even charged my good brother Bacon with fraud in obtaining consent for the use of their house of worship. It is perfectly notorious that they rent their lecture-room for all sorts of shows, and no objection would have been raised to the discussion of any other subject.

The result was that a pressure was brought to bear on the church committee which induced them to go back on their agreement and shut me out. I paid my bill, shook the snow off my feet and left.

At Middletown I found some warm friends and got some material aid, but could make no arrangement for lectures. At Durham I met a fair congregation in a hall furnished gratuitously by a Mason, and think a good impression was produced. This beautiful farming district is cursed with the tobacco culture.

I asked an old man who said that he had been many years a church member what he thought of tobacco raising. He said that it was a subject that he had never investigated. He admitted that it was a matter of serious inquiry, but he had not found time to consider it. He is an extensive tobacco grower. I was reminded of the two fellows who were stealing chickens. The one in the tree became conscience smitten and cried out, "Sam, don't you think this is pretty mean business?" The other replied, "O never mind, that is a great moral question. We haven't time to discuss that now. You just hand down another pullet." How many Freemasons and tobacco growers are waiting for another pullet before they stop to discuss. I was kindly entertained by brother and sister Camp who are faithful witnesses amidst abounding worldliness.

Back to Middletown and thence down the Connecticut river to Chester, where I met brother Bacon, who had arranged for a lecture in a hall. We met a good congregation of attentive, sharp and critical listeners. Many of them were Masons and felt called upon to rescue their darling institution. I spoke about two and one-half hours and debated on hour longer. The results will appear in the final day. Among those present was Capt. Wm. A. Pratt, of Deep River, Ct., a seceding Mason. He had been a Mason about nineteen years, and had renounced it because he felt that it was utterly wrong. He testified to the correctness of what I said of the order. Bro. Bacon and I called at his place next day and found them a most earnest and excellent Christian family.

Capt. Geo. D. Morrisson also of Deep River attended our meeting and is an earnest Anti-mason though our work was new to him. He and his wife are most devoted Christian workers. They have frequently had an entire ship's crew converted during a single voyage. They had seen the influence of Masonry as opposed to Christianity and destructive of discipline on ship board.

At Killingworth I spoke in the town hall to a fair audience of interested listeners. The place where I stayed is about 600 feet above the Sound which is seven miles distant. It can be plainly seen and Long Island dimly appears in the distance.

From there I came on to New Haven and thence to Willimantic, where I am arranging with Bro. Conant our plans for the future.

Yours in the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

Correspondence.

FROM A VETERAN IN REFORM.

LELAND, Mich., Feb. 6, 1879.

J. BLANCHARD—Dear Sir: I am sorry to know that the American Home Missionary Society support any Masons. Perhaps they do not know the fact. Some years ago I learned that we had one in our (Grand Traverse) conference. I immediately sent notice of the fact to G. Whipple, (he was a minister among the Indians, receiving support from the Am. Miss. Association), and the Mason was dropped from their support after remonstrance, and he refusing to leave the Masons. The family have ever laid it up against me for "taking away their salary." I can bear it. My next step was to to come before our "ministers' meeting" (this Mason was one) with an essay against Masonry. When called on for his criticism, he said, "It is all a lie" and began to read from "Beauties of Masonry," when the moderator broke out, "Bro. Smith, do you believe any such nonsense as that?"

Next, I came before our conference with a long essay, drawn from Bernard's work. Conference appointed a committee to report on the subject. They did so at Traverse City and strong resolutions were adopted, none voting against them, though the Mason was there to hear all. It was too hot; so he requested to be dismissed to join Grand Rapids Presbytery, and so left us. And thus our conference was purged. I do not know of any Mason minister now among us. There are Masons in Traverse City church, but they are all in a muss and I expect will divide or break up the church. If we have any other Masonic members in our churches I do not know it.

I let off shots every little while, and am now the only minister that speaks on the subject. I have lectured on Masonry here, also in Northport, Glen Arbor, Homestead, Pleasanton, etc., and stand ready to fire when occasion offers. My answer to inquirers is "always loaded." But my circumstances forbid my going forth to lecture as a business.

There is but one other acting Congregational minister in the county—and I have more work than I can do; am breaking down under continued hard work. You may safely put down this weak church with "The Associated Churches of Christ," as opposed to Masonry and all secret societies. I have preached plainly against them, as one of Satan's most effectual ways of damning souls. And we get no help from any missionary society.

The course of many ministers is exemplified in the statement of one in our conference (he has now left us) two years or so ago. I had said in an essay on "The higher Christian life," "No Mason can ever enjoy it because living in plain violation of so many of the principles of the Gospel, and in complicity with wickedness and wicked men." This minister said, "Bro. Thompson is one of the best men God ever made, but he is always in hot water; because he keeps pitching into these evil things. I do not do so. I said to Masons in my church, 'Do you attend to your matters and I will attend to mine,' and we had no trouble."

In our last conference it was decided that particular sins should be preached against, but because I have done so, and still do so, many are set against me; call me a "personal preacher," etc., and try to crush me, but I know of but one way to deal with open and bold wickedness, and that is, to rebuke it so that all shall understand what is meant. Nathan did so, and all ministers should also. The "bread and butter" question is not to come into the account, but "What does the Lord require from his watchman?"

I have lectured nearly forty times on temperance here, and have given many concerts, etc., but the interest has declined, and we meet this evening to organize a "Red Ribbon club"—something new to awaken a new life in the cause. I have lectured on temperance also in Northport (3 times), Traverse City, Good Harbor (4 times) Glen Haven, Frankfort, Benzonia and Manistee, and in Berea, Ky. You see I am busy. I am not a "one idea" man, but sweep the board. I have preached and written much on Sabbath-breaking, dancing, card-playing, "chivareeing," fashions, etc. I have facts enough collected by correspondence, to make a small volume on "Iron Furnaces and the Sabbath," demonstrating that they can be run successfully and keep the Sabbath, and more profitably than to run on Sabbath. And because I have shown up and rebuked this wickedness, iron men have tried to crush me. But, blessed be God, by his help "I hold the fort" while iron furnaces stand still and are sold at bankrupt sale. So here, so in Frankfort. As Luther said, "Here I stand, so help me God." Pray for me.

But few realize my surroundings and the hard battle I have had to fight. And in the midst of all, the American Home Missionary Society left me because I "worked with my hands," to support a large family, my own and orphans; and because "the people gave me so little." (The two reasons assigned for refusing aid!!)

Never mind "The Lord has stood by me," and in him will I trust and on him wait.

Your brother in Christ,

GEO. THOMPSON.

WINONA, Iowa, Feb. 7, 1879.

DEAR EDITORS: — Masonry has had a terrible blow through Bro. Mathew's lecture and Ronayne's exposition in this part of sin-cursed Iowa. Indeed, I think that their blows crippled the old handmaid more than ever happened to her since I have been a resident here. I believe there should be the spirit of love manifested in the lectures towards those who belong to the institution, as Bro. Ronayne says, Anti-masonic lecturers have no business to make Masons mad if it can be avoided. There is no necessity of their getting mad, he says, yet they will get mad if you touch their idols, and I am sure Bro. Ronayne found this out on the last night of his exposition and lecture here, and had he remained here long enough after his exposition he would find that he had inflamed many of them. It is a hard matter to stir people up in their sins without getting them angry, especially if you touch their idols.

One thing I am sure of: Masonry has done more towards sapping the spiritual life out of the different churches than any other evil, intemperance not excepted; and Christianity is at a lower ebb in this part of the country than I ever knew it. Now what is the cause of it? Infidelity. And what does more to create infidelity than secretism? Nothing under God's heaven.

Now to give you an idea of how matters stand, I will just mention some things that have come under my observation lately. The Methodist Episcopals of Winfield and vicinity (whose minister I learn is a seven-degree Mason) have tried hard to get up a revival of religion for over two years past, and some weeks ago they tried the matter over again, holding meetings for over two weeks' duration, with no success whatever, as usual; and when called upon for testimonies for Jesus, not one of the whole membership could be induced to take the witness stand. Now I have wondered what was the matter with Methodism in Winfield, but yesterday as I rode through the place I learned that the M. E. church in that town had opened its doors for a traveling troupe to hold theatrical performances. Subject: "Ten Nights in a Bar-room." Now think of this, and remember that we as a people of Free Methodists were refused the use of their church to hold our religious meetings in, giving as their reasons that they had learned that wherever the Free Methodists held meetings, where they existed, they caused division amongst them, (i. e., they were afraid some of their members would be reclaimed from the world and leave them for better company). I learn that the church building would not hold all that attended, and that to-night they were going to have a second exhibition. The Lord help such professors of religion, as it is a stench in the nostrils of God Almighty.

Now such is the state of religious matters in this part of Iowa. I learn that the same minister expects to start a series of meetings north of us in another place where the old handmaid has some children. But how can he expect that God will honor his labors while he keeps contaminated with uncleanness. May God help him to obey the command, "Come out from amongst them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing." Hoping to do what I can for reform, having been redeemed from Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Good Templars, etc.

I am yours in Jesus,

JOHN W. HOUGH.

THE INDEPENDENT ORDER OF GOOD TEMPLARS.

A FULL ILLUSTRATED EXPOSITION OF THE ORDER.

(Copyright 1878 by EZRA A. COOK & Co.)

[The Worthy Commander kneels, places his right hand on those of the candidate, holding his book in his left.]

Worthy Commander. You will now give your assent to the Knight Templars' vow and obligation.

OBLIGATION.

You do hereby on the holy Evangelists, in the presence of Almighty God, and surrounded by this cordon of living, throbbing hearts, without any reservation whatever, most solemnly promise and covenant, that you will faithfully adhere to, and perform all previously assumed vows and obligations of abstinence from intoxicating drinks WHILE LIFE SHALL LAST.

You furthermore promise that you will sacredly keep and never improperly reveal to any one, not a member of this degree, and not to him or them until after due trial you have proved them to be such, anything pertaining to this degree, any business transacted, any edict, order or communication received from superiors. You also promise that you will yield due and cheerful obedience to, and aid to the utmost of your ability in carrying out all lawful requirements of your superiors in office.

You furthermore promise and covenant, that you will never propose, or knowingly vote for any person to become a member of this order, whose previous life does not afford satisfactory evidence that he will conform to our rules and usages, and whose daily actions shall not strengthen our hands and commend our order to public favor.

You also promise, that you will attend all meetings, unless the demands of your business, or duties to your family prevent.

You also promise, that you will aid and assist all needy and distressed Knights, they applying to you as such and you finding them worthy, when you can do so without material injury to yourself or family.

Finally you promise, that all your conduct towards members of this order shall be characterized by fraternal regard and courtesy; your intercourse with the world conform to those noble principles of integrity, virtue and truth, which are a sure passport to the esteem and regard of your fellow-men. To all of which without the slightest reservation, and with a deliberate purpose to perform, you most solemnly promise and covenant.

Knights. God bless our brother and keep him steadfast, to do and perform the same.

Worthy Commander. Sir Knights! a hearty welcome to our new comrade. Rise, brother, and receive the congratulations of the brotherhood.

[A few moments are spent in congratulation, during which time officers and members, with the exception of the Herald and candidate, resume their seats.]

Worthy Commander. Brother Secretary, let our new recruit affix his name on the roll of honor, (signs the constitution.) Our Past Worthy Commander has a few words of advice for the novitiate.

Herald. Our new brother seeks such counsel and advice as your age and experience well qualify you to impart.

Past Worthy Commander. Sir Knight: You have taken the solemn and binding obligation of a Knight Templar. You have been admitted a member of a fraternity whose watchwords are honor, labor, brotherly love. A most hearty welcome I bid you, to our confidence and regard, to duties and dangers, toils and trials, and to the sweet rewards of fortitude and fidelity.

It is expected that your sympathies will ever gush out towards the sufferers from the wine cup, and that your labors will be abundant for their salvation.

I charge you, my brother, that while mingling in the conflict, and exposed to trials and temptations, your escutcheon never be stained, your honor never tarnished by an unworthy action.

The age and occasion which gave rise to the order whose honored name we bear, have passed away, but the moral and beneficent principle still remains, bright in all its primitive beauty and loveliness, to excite, as in the days of its greatest glory, that spirit of refined and moral chivalry which prompts us to labor in behalf of the needy and distressed—to wield every influence, and exert every power to bless and save our fellow men.

In ancient times, important truths were taught by signs and symbols. In the sacred volume, the most glorious promises, as well as the highest practical duties, are couched in types and figures; and parables are often employed to illustrate principles and convey reproof. We, too, would use them to impress on your mind some of the cardinal virtues on which this order is based.

Scattered up and down through our fair State, are a band of tried and faithful hearts, inspired with sympathy for the unfortunate and tempted, who are associated to accomplish what cannot be effected by individual effort. We find in this combination of sympathy and labor, the best security for ourselves individually.

You see this bundle of rods—how successfully it resists our most determined efforts to break it. Let us sever one from its connection with, and reliance upon its fellows. How easily it yields. You, my brother, are the single rod. Unaided, you can accomplish but little, and are exposed to danger. Secure the protection of the brotherhood by an active and faithful life.

Our Worthy Chaplain desires your acquaintance Give good heed to his counsels.

CHAPLAIN'S CHARGE.

Worthy Chaplain. My dear brother, I, too, bid you a hearty welcome. Your name is inscribed on the roll of honor. Let that name descend to posterity, unsullied by a single broken vow, a single unworthy action.

Remember, my brother, that the character and reputation of our order and measurably that of its individual members, is committed to your guardianship and keeping. The acts of each, affect all. I charge you, my brother, that you guard that reputation with the most unremitting care and vigilance.

This glass of water is composed of a thousand minute particles, each independent of the other, but having a common affinity. As you see, a single drop of an impure substance discolors the whole.

Our order is made up of individual particles, a single unworthy member, a single dishonorable action, would mar the beauty, the symmetry and harmony of the whole.

Our lives, too, are made up of individual acts. A single false step can never be fully recovered—a single stain on your conscience can never be eradicated in this life. Ponder often and deeply this lesson.

The duties required of us are laborious—often trying, but the rewards are sweet and refreshing. You may be called upon for aid in carrying out our plans. And whether your contributions, if according to your ability and with an honest heart, be little or much, your reward will be the same. The giver of "two mites which make a farthing" received a warm commendation from the Great Teacher, while Pharisaic abundance called forth a scathing rebuke.

May your whole life be so conformed to the orders of the Supreme Commander, that, clad in the vestments of his righteousness, when present service is over, your name be found enrolled in the Army of Life, where Angelic Heralds will conduct you through the realms of glory, and introduce you to glorified spirits, where labor is worship, and a smile of Divine approval your highest reward.

Introduce the brother to the Worthy Commander.

Herald. Our brother waits on our Worthy Commander for the closing exercises of his induction.

Worthy Commander. My brother, the congratulations and welcomes addressed to you, fall from sincere lips. In the name of the whole fraternity, I welcome you. May the actions and lessons of this night long be remembered with pleasure and be fraught with profit to all.

Behold our emblem! A triangle composed of the lance, the battle axe and the sword.

The lance teaches us fearlessly to enter the lists against the enemy of all mankind; to wage an uncompromising warfare, and neither give nor ask quarter.

The battle axe is an emblem of truth, which, with a powerful arm, we are to wield in the great contest between right and wrong.

The sword teaches us to execute strict justice between man and man, and to remain faithful while we have strength to strike, or skill to parry a blow.

The words image to our minds the deeds of worthy Knights in ancient days, when in the lists of the tournament, on the field of battle, whilst on errantry far from home, they pointed the lance, wielded the battle axe, or drew the sword, in love for the fair, in compassion for the weak, in justice to the wronged.

To understand fully some of these allusions, I advise a perusal of the history of the middle ages, wherein you will learn that knighthood, in days of yore, occupied a most prominent and honorable position. It was a bright star in that night of ignorance and superstition; but by reason of the contaminating influences which surrounded it, its eyes were dimmed and its energies slumbered. But the wails of the widow and orphan—made thus by intemperance—aroused it. It comes forth redeemed and purified, still retaining all its former virtues, and now stands as the champion of the oppressed; the deadly, uncompromising foe of the rum traffic and its minions. It will evermore be found where the battle wages hottest, gathering up and directing the social, moral and political influences at command, and will not fly the field, while there is a drunkard to save, or while youth and beauty need protection.

It only remains for me to give the secret work of the order. (Descends from his seat.)

To gain admission to a Council while in session, give one rap at the outer door. Sentinel opens the wicket and you give him the subordinate password.

At the inner door you give two raps; Guard opens the wicket and you give him the Council password.

He answers, password is correct, when you give the countersign.

Worthy Commander. The Herald will seat the brother.

CLOSING.

Worthy Commander. Brother Secretary, what are the receipts, and from whom received?

[Secretary reports.]

Worthy Commander. Sir Knights, we are about to leave this sacred retreat consecrated to friendship and fraternity, to mingle again with the world. Amidst its cares and its duties, forget not your vows. Be faithful and diligent, and may the Great Commander delight to dwell with and bless you.

Sing our parting song.

ODE.

AIR—"The Watcher."

Our Council now is ended,
And duty calls away—
Our love and friendship blended,
Turns darkness into day—

The knight who wears our armor,
Ne'er dreads the coward foe.
He's proof against the charmer;
Where duty calls he'll go.

Where'er the conflict rages,
There will the knight be found;
When right with wrong engages,
His clarion notes will sound.

Though thick the blows may rattle
Against the shield of truth,
Still for the right he'll battle,
For beauty, age and youth.

Worthy Commander. The Chaplain will invoke a parting blessing.

CLOSING PRAYER.

Chaplain. O, God! our Creator, Preserver and Benefactor, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known. We heartily thank thee for the fraternal communion which we have this evening enjoyed. Pardon all thine Holy Eye has seen amiss in us.

Bless our humble labors in promoting the cause of sobriety and virtue. Smile upon our institution and make it an instrument of great good.

Dismiss us with thy blessing. Sustain us when tried and tempted. Guide us evermore by thy divine presence, and finally re-unite us at thy right hand, in that world of light and life where thou forever reignest. Amen.

Council respond, So mote it be.

Worthy Commander. Attend to the signs, as on opening.

Sir Herald, you will now declare this Council closed until our next meeting.

Herald. By order of the Worthy Commander I declare this Council closed until ——— at — o'clock.

By a unanimous vote, the two latter requirements may be waived.

ART. II.—DUES.

This Council shall meet at least once in each month; but may meet on its own adjournment or on call of the Worthy Commander.

ART. V.—PASSWORDS.

No person shall be allowed to sit in Council unless in possession of the quarterly and term password, and suspension or expulsion in a subordinate lodge shall disqualify a member from a seat in the Council.

ART. VI.—PROPOSITIONS.

Under the head of Propositions, the Secretary shall read applications for membership, which shall be referred to a committee of three appointed by the Chair, who shall report at the next meeting of the Council, but the committee may by a vote of three-fourths of the members present, be instructed to vote forthwith, which vote shall be equivalent to a dispensation, and the Council may proceed to ballot and initiation, the same meeting. If no more than one black ballot is cast, the candidate shall be declared elected. Should there be two black balls, the Worthy Commander shall without remark order a second ballot, and if, with the same result, he shall order the case postponed till the next regular meeting. If the same result be found at the regular meeting, the candidate shall be declared rejected. Three black balls shall always reject.

OUR MAIL.

Elvin Jones, Lenawee, Mich., writes:

"The lectures that we had in Adrian woke the people up there. There is nothing but Masonry talked of there now."

Hugh Nash, Monmouth, Ill., writes:

"We expect soon to have a debate on secret societies at our school house."

Daniel Leggett, Allegan, Mich., writes:

"Allegan is a hot house of secretism, from Masonry, the old handmaid, down. I live six miles from Allegan. There are seven churches there. I have never yet been able to get one to have a public lecture in."

Hiram Whitney, Plano, Ill., sends the Cynosure to a lusty, stout man who is very weak in the back on the subject of Anti-masonry. He writes:

"O that the good Lord would wake him up to a sense of his duty and responsibility."

Josiah Shaw, Eau Claire, Wis., writes:

"The whole city is given up to idolatry. Hardly a man but what belongs to one or more of the lodges; and recently we were greeted by over 200 of the most noble grands from all parts of the State, tarrying with us four days. We need thorough work here and think we shall get it some day, and are praying the Lord to hasten the time and that he will sustain all our Cynosure laborers with health and prosperity."

Sanford Ward, Adams, N. Y., writes:

"I am connected with the Baptist church, but do not commune with them, for we are commanded to 'withdraw from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition he received of us.' The great apostle probably referred here to the sin of idleness which was considered a vice. And if we are commanded to withdraw from communion on account of one sin, why not for every sin. The churches here have held meetings every evening for two weeks without any marked interest. I cannot see how God can consistently work by his Spirit in a church that is so mixed up with the world as the church here is. Many of the leading members and some of the deacons are Masons. I am eighty-seven years old. I enlisted against Masonry in 1826, and have always stood in the front ranks. With the help of God I shall stand until he shall call me home. The Bible has always been my guide, the Holy Spirit my instructor. My heart and soul are in sympathy with this great work. My prayer is that the kingdom of darkness may be overthrown and Christ's kingdom built up."

Wm. O. Bancroft, Harpersville, N. Y., sends Mrs. Marsh's renewal, and writes:

"Mrs. Marsh, who is nearly eighty years old, but able to walk the streets yet, wishes to say that she is a well-wisher to the cause of breaking down the stronghold of Satan, and hopes that prosperity and blessing may attend you."

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pa., writes:

"I am still a strong anti-secret man, and expect to battle for the right as long as I live."

Josiah Divoll, East Topsham, Vt., writes:

"Our little town is deep in debt, and worse than that many of our citizens love the filthy weed called tobacco. And that, you know, must be paid for. It was estimated five years ago that there was between four and five thousand dollars' worth of the filthy stuff sold in our little town in one year. I hope all editors will do all they can to rid our land from this curse. It would be a great blessing to the community at large, and perhaps extend the circulation of their papers. Would it not be wise for government to take measures to stop the manufacture and sale of tobacco as well as of strong drink?"

We think it would.

A. J. Cook, Lime Springs, Ia., writes:

"I feel the importance of extending the circulation of the Cynosure, and shall always do all I can for the reform."

Mrs. Eliza Bradbury, Owego, N. Y., writes:

"There seems to be great blindness upon the people generally in regard to the vast importance of this work. I am praying daily for your prosperity."

Jesse Stubbs, Vermillion, Ill., writes:

"It is with the greatest pleasure that I read of the success of our reform in other localities. It is at a standstill at this place."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 20, 1879.

THE MASONIC PRESS.—We call special attention to our extracts and notices from the Voice of Masonry this week. The lodge no more relies on argument than other vices do, but the paper of this city is entitled to our candor and commiseration. Many of the writers are evidently believers in Christ. Like Aaron they worship other gods, attempting to reconcile the false worships with the true; and, like him, are sad at the disgraceful failure which begins to loom up before them. Their best writers condemn French atheistic Masonry; call for reform; and are sad as a lodge of sorrow.

REV. GEO. THOMPSON.—This gentleman, whose letter appears on another page, was one of the three who were imprisoned in the Missouri Penitentiary for assisting slaves on their way to Canada when the United States was a slave country. Mr. Burr, another of the trio, lies buried in the Campus of Wheaton College, and his monument, when the spring flowers come out, is decorated by the students with wreaths, and his memory kept "green in our souls." I wish Mr. Thompson would send us some notice of the other member of the trio, Mr. Work. Perhaps Mr. Thompson would give a commemorative discourse of the three worthies on Sabbath evening preceding commencement at Wheaton in the College chapel to keep the fires burning which have forged out our national liberties. I make the suggestion to "all whom it may concern."

IT IS ALL IN THE BIBLE.—The great danger of lecturers against secret societies is that they go on their own ground to fight them, and fight with their own weapons. When Mr. Ronayne, as he did most convincingly in Carpenter Hall, Feb. 12th, evening, shows from Masonic authorities that Freemasonry is simply a modern rehash of old idolatries and opposition worships; impenitent men and even intelligent Christians, see little harm in all that. "The sun is a glorious object" say they; and "no man by searching can find out God;" so sun-worship, if the man knows no better, may be a very good thing. Such is the feeling of multitudes of tolerably fair-minded men. Whereas, a Hebrew prophet, when he met one of these worships, made language groan to express his horror and detestation of it, as an attempt to cut loose this globe from its God, and lose its inhabitants eternally among devils' baubles mistaken for religions. Amid his country's desolations, the patriot prophet cried: "When ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the Lord our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours." Every jackall that howls over the wastes of Palestine to-day proclaims the truth of Jeremiah's utterance above; and when the saint-gods of popery, and the tool-gods and sun-worship of the lodge have so weaned the United States from God that one religion is as good as another to our people, this land will just as surely be desolate as are Judea's hills. What can Americans do, when they know not or cannot agree what to swear a witness by, or what is truth, or religion? A cage of hyenas could keep up a nation as well as they. Without Christ we can do nothing. Moreover, all through the Bible, full length portraits of Masonry and its lodges are given. Take this example: "For among my people are found wicked men; they lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap; they catch men." (Jer. 5:26.) An old Scotch Presbyterian minister used to call the lodges "man-traps of Satan;" and so they are. And they can only be broken by Christ who is mightier than Satan; stronger than the "strong man armed."

THE CHARACTER OF THE CYNOSURE.

We have letters often which treat of the Cynosure, extracts from which go into "Our Mail." We have just received two which deserve special notice. One good brother was some thirty years ago chief founder of an "Oberlin church" in Ohio, as Oberlin was then. After Mr. Finney and Mr. Morgan carried resolutions against the lodge in the First Church at Oberlin, this brother offered the same for adoption in his church; but in a membership of two hundred and eighty he could not get a second to Mr. Finney's resolution! So there was neither discussion nor vote, and yet this dear friend thinks, though he likes the Cynosure and will not give it up, that perhaps he could get subscribers for it if I would be more mild and gentle; he thinks that those who would not even second Mr. Finney's resolution would possibly take the Cynosure and aid the reform. We think this brother entirely mistaken.

I give below an extract from a letter by the same mail, from Alexander Small, Esq., of Aurora, who has steadily paid above $100 a year through all the hard times in support of the First Congregational church of that city. I should not venture to print the extract without the writer's leave, but that Mr. Small is a clear-thinking, careful and charitable man, who writes nothing which he would hesitate to say to the world. He says:

"I take no religious paper but the Cynosure. I think it one of the best papers that I take. And the reason why I take it is, its bold and independent course on all questions.

"The religious papers of the day, most of them, are like many of the ministers, much afraid they will say something which will hurt some one; very careful to keep with the current. I wish we had more such papers as the Cynosure and more ministers who had the courage to preach against the evils of the times."

We confess that Mr. Small's testimony, and that of a multitude of calm, upright people who have no earthly motive to bias their judgment, soothes and strengthens us in the task which God has assigned us, and like Bunyan's Pilgrim we see the "Delectable mountains" ahead of us.

"PARASITE DEGREES."

The Voice of Masonry for the month of February comes to us on time, with its usual fair exterior, and neat execution. The more we read the writers who fill this monthly, the more we are forcibly reminded of the Scripture: "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the mind of them that believe not."

The aged Cornelius Moore, an able writer and former editor of the Masonic Review, under the above caption, pleads pathetically for the abandonment of all of Masonry but "Its three degrees with the Royal Arch as its completion." He says: "More than twenty years ago I urged, in the Review, this very course; but I was 'ahead of the times,' and could get no favorable response from any one. Now my suggestion finds advocates everywhere." He brands all the additions as "Parasite Degrees," and says: "The Grand Lodge of England, the mother Grand Lodge of the world, declared, many years ago, that ancient Masonry consists of three degrees only, including the Royal Arch," and asks: "Was that Grand Lodge good authority?" He then adds, with grief and bitterness which he takes no pains to conceal, that one Barker, forty or fifty years ago, "suddenly" came with pretended authority from some dignitary in Baltimore, to confer the degrees of Royal and Select Master. He condescended to confer these degrees at $5 00 per head, and he did a large business." Barker then proceeded to establish councils in two other towns in Ohio, "and," Mr. Moore adds, "three councils thus organized in Ohio, met together and organized a Grand Council for the State." Mr. Moore speaks of Barker's "converts" as his "dupes," and says that the Ohio Grand Council, thus organized by Barker's "dupes," is, he thinks, "the senior body of that kind in the United States; and the parent of the degrees in other States." And the writer repeats with emphasis, "These council degrees were an innovation," and proceeds to demand their annihilation.

Now if Mr. Cornelius Moore, long Masonic editor, with Masonic titles, and now an aged man, older than myself, and nearer perhaps to eternity, shall receive and read this writing, I respectfully beg his attention to the following remarks on his article on the "Parasite Degrees:"

1st. My dear aged friend, the Royal Arch degree is precisely as much an "innovation" as the council degrees first given to Barker's "dupes" in Cincinnati, Ohio, since, you very well know, it was not invented and added till many years after the birth of Speculative Masonry in 1717; Oliver says, "about the middle of the 18th century." If Barker swindled, the Royal Arch degree is "a swindling innovation" also.

2d. By the same rule of judging, the three blue lodge degrees of 1717, were a swindle upon the lodges of operative Masons which existed before that date.

3d. As the "council degrees" all over the United States control, overtop, and rule the original three with the Royal Arch added, by your own showing the system of Masonry in this country is controlled by "Parasite Degrees" only forty or fifty years old, first given to Barker's "dupes" at "$5.00 per head" in Cinnati, Ohio.

Suffer me, dear sir, to entreat you, before you go to meet that Saviour who spake nothing in secret, to flee from that accursed system of imposture which your candor and reason condemn in the Voice of Masonry, for February, 1879.

FLAT CONTRADICTIONS.

Daniel Webster said, "Every truth in the universe is consistent with every other truth." But error is self-conflicting: and Freemasonry is little else than a mass of contradictions. We give here two specimens:

"Masonry is a body whose essence is love; whose existence is the exercise of universal charity; whose religion is without sect; whose patriotism is without party; whose creed is the Bible; whose aim is the establishment of peace on earth and good will toward mankind; whose embodiment is liberty, and whose only enemy is DESPOTISM.—Grand Orator Gilfry, Grand Lodge, Oregon.

CONTRADICTION.—"The governernment of Grand Lodges is, therefore, completely DESPOTIC. While a Grand Lodge exists, its edicts must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges. * * * And to its decrees unlimited obedience must be paid by every lodge and every Mason within its control."—Mackey's Lexicon, Art. Grand Lodges.

"The Holy Bible, 'the rule and guide of faith,' has been declaimed against as being immoral and wanting in Divine authenticity, yet Masonry and the Bible have triumphed over every foe," etc., etc. And the same Grand Orator says in the preceding quotation, "whose creed is the Bible;" and this is published as Masonic doctrine in the Voice of Masonry, Feb. 1879, pp. 108–110.

CONTRADICTION. — "Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry; it would be something else."—Chase's Digest of Masonic Law, 12th Ed. 1877, p. 208.

It were easy to fill a small volume with similar contradictions. The authorities given above are fresh, current, Masonic literature, and the contradictions are not trivial but fundamental to man for time and eternity, in government and religion. And they stamp the system as identical with that of which the Bible says, "Thou hast a whore's forehead." Jer. 3:3. "Neither could they blush." Jer. 6:15.

RESIDENCES IN WHEATON.

In common with the great majority of cities, towns and villages, Wheaton felt the universal shrinkage of property and prices as thousands and tens of thousands of people have moved West and turned their faces to farming. If there are parents who read the Cynosure who wish to buy a small or large town property, and let their children or tenants run their farms; or if there are parents who wish to educate their children and have them under the wings of their mothers—the best of all possible wings—I know of no place in the whole country where prettier residences or more advantages can be bought with less money than at Wheaton.

The College, though not a machine which can turn bad or neglected children into angels in a single term, is yet (though I am its President) a charming institution, with a capable, conscientious and devoted faculty, and a rare set of students both male and female. As now situated, no college in the country gives better promise of permanency and enlargement in the future. The near proximity of Chicago, affords an outlet for surplus labor, energy and produce of every kind. Every spare chicken, calf or shoat about a place, can be sold for cash in the yard where it stands, at some price; and milk and fruit, and whatever men use from the farm or garden travels daily to the city. I would answer letters from persons who are opposed to the lodge, who may be interested in this writing.

GOOD TEMPLARISM ILSUSTRATED. —The exposition of Good Templarism which has been running through the columns of the Cynosure the past two months will be published in pamphlet form during the month of March.

Price of single copy, postpaid, 25 cts.
" per dozen. " $ 2 00
" per hundred by express, charges not paid, 10 00

—The Christian Statesman says, "The National Reform Association has ordered the Christian Statesman to be sent for the present year to one hundred and thirty-three reading rooms of the Young Men's Christian Associations, and to one hundred and fifty colleges and fifty theological seminaries, during the remainder of their current terms." It would not be a misuse of $500 for some friend to apply it in sending the Cynosure abroad in the same way.

—Bro. J. P. Stoddard started Monday evening for Michigan and the East. Urgent business called him to New Jersey and New York, but he expects to return to Adrian by Saturday and give his best aid aid to the brethren in the State Convention. He also expects to attend the Ohio State meeting at Utica, Licking county, on the week following, and may be gone from his headquarters until April.

—Since we last went to press th treasurer of Wheaton College has received in cash $400 and a notice of a gift of $1,150 more. The latter is from N. W. Myers, an aged but sterling friend of reform. In the same letter he designates the same amount for the publishing interests of the National Christian Association.

—In the article by Isaac Preston on President Blanchard, reprinted from the Chicago Times last week, an introductory note was omitted, in which Father Preston states that the article was written for the religious press and was offered to the Advance, but refused. On this refusal, the writer, believing that justice demanded that the public should know his views, took the article to the Times. It is good evidence of the truth of the opinions expressed, that men who have been hostile to the Cynosure and its editor are uneasy because of the publication.

—The Chicago Christian Association was addressed at its last regular monthly meeting by Past Master Edmond Ronayne, on the subject Freemasonry an Idolatrous Worship. The address was listened to with interest by an audience of about one hundred people. The heathenish character of Masonry was clearly set forth in a light which would lead patriots and Christians to shun it and seek its overthrow. A collection was taken up. President Blanchard followed with a few forcible remarks and the meeting adjourned till the second Tuesday in March.

—The Christian Instructor, our Chicago U. P. neighbor, notices the remark of a Masonic preacher reported by one of our correspondents, to the effect that the lodge was indifferent to opposition conducted on general principles as by the United Presbyterian of Pittsburgh, and offers its aid if the Cynosure is to be disciplined. Perchance if that were attempted, Bro. McCoy would find us in some very important particulars more United Presbyterian than the Instructor itself. The Freemason mentioned was speaking mainly for effect and not for truth's sake, for the lodge dislikes the calm criticisms of Dr. Kerr as much as it is a pleasure to us to read and reprint them. Only we are constrained to believe that if that was all the opposition it had, the Christian church would ere long become a Masonic bedlam, as truly as was the old temple under Manasseh "who built altars in the house of the Lord" to Baal. We believe God would be pleased if both the United Presbyterian and the Instructor would "cry aloud and spare not" so long as this same Baal worship threatens to supersed the worship of the true God in our own communities.

—John Motter, Lyons, Kansas, writes: "We must have the 10,000. In faith we can ask God to help and expect the blessing. Oh for a looking up to Him, brethren!"

THE ILLINOIS LECTURE WORK.

I have recently met and conferred with Bro. Browne respecting his work as State Agent for Illinois. His work has hitherto been mainly in the western part of the State, as the way opened and Providence seemed to indicate that his services were needed in Whiteside county. He desires to extend his labors to such parts of the State as are open or may be opened for the introduction of the anti-secrecy reform. Friends should bear it in mind that Bro. Browne is a young man in the prime of life and both capable and willing to speak fifteen times each week during the lecture season, if properly aided in arranging his programme. The way to get at this thing properly, so far as friends are concerned, is for each one who wants lectures in his locality as soon as he reads this to put his paper down and take up his pen and write a card or letter to Elder J. F. Browne, Morrison, Illinois, making his wants known, and he will receive a prompt reply. In this way you can greatly aid in the work, encourage your lecturer, lighten his burdens and strengthen his heart. Lecturers as well as pastors need the co-operation of their constituency and many a good man has been lost to the Gospel ministry for the want of it. Brethren in Illinois, let your lecturer understand that he has a live constituency who will work and keep their leader at work, and results will very soon justify your course.

J. P. STODDARD.

Chicago, Feb. 15, 1879.

—The Cynosure is doing a good work in the publication of a "Full Illustrated Exposition of the Order of Good Templars." It will be issued in book form, and should have a large sale. All secret orders should be so fully exposed that they cannot truthfully be called secret. If they are wrong, let in the light; if right, let out the light. In either case society will be the gainer.—Free Methodist.

THE MICHIGAN CONVENTION.

DEAR K. — Please say to our friends, and say it with an emphasis, that the Michigan State meeting opposed to secret societies will meet in Adrian, Lenawee county, February, 25th, 26th and 27th. Tuesday evening will be occupied by Bro. Ronayne in conferring the first degree of Freemasonry. Wednesday at 9:30 A. M. prayer and conference meeting for an hour. Then business, and there's much of it. Come to work! Second degree conferred at night. Thursday will be as former days, a day of labor. In the evening the sublime degree of Master Mason will be conferred in true Masonic style by Past Master Ronayne.

There will be an admission fee of 10 cents on the last night. We have secured the Opera House at a cost of sixty dollars, and other expenses will amount to near a hundred dollars more. Let local societies and friends in different parts of the State immediately elect delegates to Adrian meeting and send by them money to help forward this work. We have free entertainment for fifty, and think as people see that our meeting is a certainty, they will give homes to all.

Let all who believe in effectual, fervent prayer remember our coming gathering at their devotions. Ask God to give success. Yours in earnest, E. MATHEWS, Sec.

Brooklyn, Jackson Co., Mich., Box 36.

The editor of Harper's Weekly, who is no mean authority in the political world, says that the two great political parties at present mainly represent traditions. "The Republican party is unquestionably very strong; but there is not one question upon which there are not many Democrats in cordial accord with it, while there are most inconsistent opinions held within its own pale. The same thing is no less true of the Democratic party. Both parties maintain themselves by refusing to have a positive policy, and by clinging to their traditions." Personal politics have assumed great prominence, in view of the negative state of the parties. There is a call and room for new issues, and they must come to the surface. The only real questions for parties are those involving moral principles. Money-questions are not strong enough to divide men into real opponents. Names as grounds of opposition cannot last very long. That is all we have now. The temperance question, which concerns the real welfare of the people, is able to make parties. This will be settled, and then others which are now peeping over the horizon will enter the field of view and rise quickly to the zenith. The little day of personal politics, as now seen, will soon sink into night, party names will lose their magic, and real issues now rumbling with terrible meaning will soon fill the heavens. Let us not have deceitful peace.—Telescope.

SUPPLICATION.

Light of the world when gloomy fears oppress,
  When darkness shrouds us here.
Shine, and the desolate with comfort bless,
  The sad in spirit cheer.
Break through the clouds, thy smile on earth shall be
  As heaven on earth begun—
Arise, thy beams of mercy let us see,
  O God, our sun!

Fort of defence, whereto in ages past
  Thy saints for safety fled,
Be thou a shelter from the stormy blast,
  From snares around us spread.
Be still a refuge for the weary feet
  Of this, thy praying flock;
Be unto us a shadow from the heat,
  O God, our Rock!

"MARTHY."

"Marthy! Marthy!"

It was a peevish, querulous tone. Martha Faxon was crying—her head on the little table by which she sat, her miserable tears falling on the coarse gingham apron she was making for brother Bob.

"Marthy! Marthy! Mar-thy!"

"What do you want?" was called back crossly.

"Come right down and peel the pertaters. My hands are in the dough. And you'll have to see to Tony. He'll get into some mischief if he's left in the wood-shed."

Martha went down to the kitchen. Potatoes and Tony were duly attended to, the latter being severely tied into a high chair in the midst of a vigorous remonstrance.

"You might as well make the starch in that tin dish, Martha. Your father must have a collar to wear to town-meetin' to-night, and them currants hain't been picked over, and if you could just stir up some of that mountain cake for tea, and"—

"Oh, mother! mother!"

The words came in a great sob. Her mother, rubbing the dough off her hands, looked up in surprise. Even Tony, who had succeeded in emptying a pitcher of milk over himself, gave his undivided attention for half a minute to his big sister.

An instant later Martha disappeared, banging the buttery door behind her, and in its tin-pan solitude was doing her best to keep down another flood of tears.

"Where's Martha?" It was a very sweet voice this time that asked for the girl. Miss Livermore, the minister's daughter, had "just run in," as she often did, to have a little chat with worried Mrs. Faxon, who afforded a constant illustration of the fact that "women's work is never done"—at least some women's. This time she had come to invite Martha for a ride in the little phaeton that waited at the door. The mountain cake was indefinitely postponed, and the two set off together.

"You look tired, Martha," was Miss Livermore's remark after they had gone in silence for a little way. She made no comment on the tear-stained cheeks, and Martha believed she had scrubbed away all traces of her "crying spell."

"Yes, I am tired," she replied, her lip even then quivering a little. "I wonder if there's never to be any way out of it."

"Then it's the same old story, is it?" Miss Livermore looked with keen interest at the gloomy face.

"Yes, only worse. It seems to me sometimes as if I could not stand it any longer. I wish Uncle Crosby had kept his money instead of spending it to unfit me for everything—that is everything I can have here."

"He did not mean to do that, of course."

"Oh, I know it, Miss Livermore, and I am ungrateful, I suppose; but if you only knew what a hideous change it is to come from Orient Seminary and the society of that beautiful town into this desolate little village and our poky old farmhouse where there's nothing but cooking, dirty dishes, washing days, and —and—mother and father don't care anything about books"—she did not refer to the sore trial of their ungrammatical speech—"and I'm just discouraged."

She was sobbing again in good earnest. Miss Livermore waited until she grew quieter, and then asked, "Has anything new happened, Martha?"

"No—only—that is I had a letter from Chrissy Paine this morning. She is going to Europe this fall to stay two years and study the languages. She wrote me that May Baxter had been offered a position in the Museum of Natural History in Philadelphia; she always wanted just that sort of work. All the girls are doing something—all my class—except me."

"You told me once you didn't care for the languages."

"No. I don't, very much."

"Nor geology, nor zoology,"—

"No. I have no particular liking for any of those branches."

"Then I would not be unhappy because I was not going to study one or work in the others."

"O, Miss Livermore, you know its not that! And I can't teach either. I broke down miserably enough when I tried it last spring. It is because—well, because I don't seem to fit anywhere, or be wanted anywhere, or find anything to do."

"Anything to do!" repeated Miss Livermore.

"Well, anything I want to do—anything that is of any use, you know."

Miss Livermore made no response. She had her own views of the case, but this was not the "convenient season" for speaking of them. She had never yet succeeded in making much impression on the discontented girl; seventeen and thirty-seven see things with such different eyes!

"What would you like to do, Martha?" she asked instead, "if you could have your choice, I mean?"

The answer came hesitatingly.

"You will laugh at me, but if you only knew how I have longed to go down South—to go with the nurses and help take care of the yellow fever patients. That would be something worth while—and I think I could do it," she added after a little pause."

"Do you mean that you have a special gift in that line of work?"

"No, nothing 'special;' but the nurses are all told what to do; they have experienced people to direct them, of course. I'm not afraid of the fever, and"—in a more excited tone—"it wouldn't be a bit worse to die in Memphis than to live in Brownville—there! You see how wicked I am, and she laughed hysterically.

Miss Livermore was busily thinking.

"There is a poor sewing-woman," she said at last, "living with an infirm mother in one of the little cottages down there,"—she pointed with the whip—"who is sick with gastric fever, brought on by overwork and insufficient food. I have been wondering what could be done for them, for the mother is too lame to walk about. Now, if you could begin there, just to find out what talent you have for taking care of sick people—right here in Brownville—don't you think it would be a wise sort of preparation for a Southern campaign—wiser than to go so far from home?"

Martha was silent: the prospect did not seem attractive. She began dimly to realize that her desire to escape from Brownville was almost as strong as her ambition to be of some use in the world.

"I suppose I might try it," she said at last reluctantly, "if father and mother are willing." And so it came about that within a day after this talk Martha Faxon was installed as nurse in the poor little tumble-down cottage. Miss Livermore's few private words to the girl's parents were sufficient to obtain their consent.

Poor Martha! She would have been glad to listen even to the obnoxious pronunciation of her own name, to hear it again from familiar lips. "Gastric fever was no joke," the doctor said, and Martha quite agreed with him. In fact she found no suggestion of a joke anywhere. It was all the hardest work of her whole life. The poor woman was very sick, her mother quite helpless, and Martha struggled to do her self-imposed duty by both of them. It was cooking, washing, and dirty dishes over again with the added items of sick-room care; worse than Bob's dirty face or Ned's torn apron, she was obliged to confess. Nothing was handy in the cottage; it was even worse than the "poky farmhouse" kitchen. And oh, how sleepy she was, and how she longed for liberty! She held out for nearly two weeks, then the physical failed her. Her will was strong, else she would have broken down before—unaccustomed as she was to the work. Dr. Biden took her home in his buggy, got another nurse in her place, and gave her a little of his care for several days.

It was on one of these that Miss Livermore called again. She had been absent in the city while Martha was serving her severe apprenticeship.

"I did more hard thinking in that sick room nights, than I ever did before in all my life," the young girl was saying, "and I've made up my mind to stop longing to be something that I can't, and try to do something that I can. 'Tisn't very much and 'tisn't very interesting, but I can do it."

But the tremulous voice told that the prospect looked as dark as ever.

"I've never had a happy or contented week since I left school," she went on. "Now I'll try and fish a little comfort out of the iron pot or wring it out of the dish-cloth. I won't wince, either, when folks call me 'Marthy.'"

She put her head and her heart, as well as her hands, into the work. It was surprising to see the difference it made! It was "brains applied to bread, broom and buttons," she said, that showed her what a field for usefulness had been waiting for her, "all the time that I've been looking over the fences into other folks' lots."

Mrs. Faxon's face already began to look as if some of the wrinkles were ironed out of it, and the minister and his daughter dined with them one day.

"Uncle Crosby didn't 'unfit' me after all," Martha said to her friend as she bade her good-by that night. "I'm teaching Bob and Ned two hours a day. It's real fun, they learn so fast. And Dr. Belden is helping me get up that reading club we talked about, and do you know this has been the very happiest time of all my life."—Christian Intelligencer.

SCEPTICISM IN JAPAN.

A Japanese correspondent of the Scotch Free Church Record writes: "There are now scattered over all the parts of Japan, schools and academies and even colleges, where both general and professional education is given. But do they promise anything to the real interests of Japan? What is, for instance, the character of that 'Imperial University,' as they love to call the chief of them all? Let me speak to you freely. I have been in that institution for two years, and speak only what I have seen with my own eyes or heard with my own ears. Here are gathered, under the government's patronage, some eight hundred students, sons of the rich, the high and the powerful of Japan. It has about twenty-five foreign professors, and gives education in medicine, chemistry, law, engineering, literature and natural history. But the students learn other things. They learn to smoke tobacco, to drink intoxicating liquors, and to do even worse things; and so they learn to despise all moral and religious precepts.

"It is the student's unhappy lot to be educated in all the arts of an intellectual man without morality and without religion. In a library of thirty-five thousand volumes, I could not find a single copy of the Scriptures; and Draper's 'Conflict between Science and Religion,' is used as a regular textbook. Indeed, Japanese Confucianism is so nearly allied with the modern scepticism, that those portions of the samurai who are now ruling Japan, and who are intelligent enough to read a page of Mill or Spencer, are fast becoming sceptics, and are ready to go any length in that direction. Yes, Mills and Spencers, Darwins and Comtes, are going to make more trouble in Japan than the nebulous mythology of Sintoism, or the shadowy superstition of Buddhism. How are we to oppose them? How are we to protect the rising generation from their poisonous shafts? There is at present no hope in those educational institution under the government's absolute control. The reforming remedy must come from without. Christians have to establish an educational institution where Christian spirit is thoroughly developed, and where a scientific education could be given, of as good and as high a character as any 'Tokio University' gives."

Childrens' Corner.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR.

Between the dark and the daylight,
When night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the children's hour.

I hear in the chamber above me
The patter of little feet,
The sound of a door that is opened,
And voices soft and sweet.

From my study I see in the lamplight,
Descending the broad hall stair,
Brave Alice and laughing Allegra,
And Edith with golden hair.

A whisper and then a silence;
Yet I know by their merry eyes
They are plotting and planning together.
To take me by surprise.

A sudden rush from the stairway,
A sudden raid from the hall,
By three doors left unguarded
They enter my castle wall.

They climb up into my turret,
O'er the arms and back of my chair;
If I try to escape, they surround me:
They seem to be everywhere.

They almost devour me with kisses,
Their arms about me entwine,
Till I think of the Bishop of Bingen
In his Mouse-Tower on the Rhine.

Do you think, O blue-eyed banditti,
Because you have scaled the wall,
Such an old mustache as I am
Is not a match for you all?

I have you fast in my fortress,
And will not let you depart,
But put you into the dungeon
In the round-tower of my heart.

And there will I keep you forever,
Yes, forever, and a day,
Till the walls shall crumble to ruin,
And moulder in dust away.

—H. W. Longfellow.

THE STORY for our little folks which will begin in the first number for March, is of the best that could have been selected. It will be worth ten times the price of the paper to have children interested in such literature, and more than a mine of silver and gold to have them love and practice the precepts which are taught in "The Fisherman's Daughters." Little friends, be sure that your father renews his subscription so that you may not fail to read this narrative of English life; and get all your young friends interested, so that they will want the Cynosure also.

THE AFRICAN BOY, KONG.

On the north bank of the Yaltucher river, about two miles from its mouth, in the midst of the thick bush, is the little village of Mosam. There are snakes and leopards in that bush, and when the little boys and girls from the village go there in search of wild fruit, they have to keep a sharp lookout that they are not bitten by the snakes.

It was in this village that the hero of this story was born, about the year 1866. I say about, because the people do not keep dates there as we do here; but when they want to know how old a child is they count on their fingers how many farms they have made since the child was born.

Well, the boy was born, and they called him Kong, because that was his name. It is the custom in that country to call every first boy that name, and every first girl is called Bwoy. Kong looked and acted like all other African boys, as far as I know. Whenever and wherever his mother went, to the farm or to the other villages, Kong went, for he was tied to his mother's back, this being the custom of the country.

One day when little Kong was large enough to run about and get into mischief, his father took him to the Purrow-bush and gave him to the Purrow-devil. Now, the Purrow-devil is not that cloven-footed evil spirit that you children dread so much, but a man, one of the chief officers of the society. He took little Kong and annointed him all over with oil, and rubbed him with what they call "lacah," a kind of white clay, and he said that his name must be Contam. He now returned to his mother with his new name.

Shortly after this, Kong's parents heard that some missionaries had come to Shengay, about one day's walk from their place. These missionaries were from America, and had come to teach children to read books and to sabba (know) God. The parents thought they would like little Kong, or Contam, to learn to read books and to know God, for you must know that they were both heathen at this time, and knew nothing about God. The mother had visited Shengay and attended the meetings held by the missionaries, so she urged that little Kong, or Contam, should be given to the missionaries altogether. The father brought him and gave him to them, and, knowing that missionaries are not Purrow-men, he supposed that a Purrow name would not do, so he asked the king's son what name he must call the boy, and it was agreed that he be called David Cassamboe, as the father's name was Cassamboe.

Little David commenced at once to attend school, and learned very fast to speak English and to read. After he had got so he could read in the Bible he attended the boys' Bible class, taught by Thomas Caulker, Tuesday nights. On our way home from the class one night, in answer to my question as to what their lesson was about, he said they "been read 'bout where dem people keep meetin' dey get one gate name Beautiful, an' dem carry one man what no hable for walker, an' lay him dere to beg dem people for copper. (They call all money copper.) An' when Peter an' John want for go in, he say, 'Come, gie me copper, now.' Peter say, 'I no get, but dat ting what I get I go gie you; get up walk, now.' So he begin for walker."

NO GOOD FROM PASSION.

"Will putting one's self in a passion mend the matter?" said an old man to a boy, who had picked up a stone to throw at a dog. The dog only barked at him in play.

"Yes, it will mend the matter," said the passionate boy, and quickly dashed the stone at the dog.

The animal, thus enraged, sprang at the boy and bit his leg, while the stone bounded against a shop window and broke a pane of glass.

Out ran the shop-keeper, and seized the boy, and made him pay for the broken pane.

He had mended the matter finely, indeed!

Take my word for it, it never did and it never will mend the matter to get in a passion about it. If the thing be hard to bear when you are calm, it will be harder when you are in anger.

If you have met with a loss you will only increase it by losing your temper.

There is something which is very little-minded and silly in giving way to sudden passion. Do set yourself against it with all your heart.

Try, then, to be calm, especially in trifling troubles; and when greater ones come try to bear them bravely.—Ex.

LESSON IX.—March 2, 1879.—THE PRAYER OF THE PENITENT.

SCRIPTURE.—Psalms 51:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.—Ps. 51:2.

1 Have mercy upon me, O God,
According to thy lovingkindness:
According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies
Blot out my transgressions.
2 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity,
And cleanse me from my sin.
3 For I acknowledge my transgressions:
And my sin is ever before me.
4 Against thee, thee only, have I sinned.
And done this evil in thy sight:
That thou mightest be justified when thou speakest,
And be clear when thou judgest.
5 Behold, I was shapen in iniquity;
And in sin did my mother conceive me.
6 Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts:
And in the hidden part thou shalt shalt make me to know wisdom.
7 Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean:
Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow.
8 Make me to hear joy and gladness;
That the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.
9 Hide thy face from my sins,
And blot out all my iniquities.
10 Create in me a clean heart, O God;
And renew a right spirit within me.
11 Cast me not away from thy presence;
And take not thy Holy Spirit from me.
12 Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation;
And uphold me with thy free spirit.
13 Then will I teach transgressors thy ways;
And sinners shall be converted unto thee.

[From the Scholar's Hand-Book.]

INTRODUCTORY.

This Psalm was written by David after his great sin, as is indicated in its title. Luther says it "has been used by the church in song and prayer oftener than any other in the Psalter."

TO THE SCHOLAR.

Learn from this Psalm how a true penitent feels in view of sin; and be encouraged to confess to God, and seek his grace, whenever you have done anything wrong.

NOTES.

"Hyssop." This was used to sprinkle the doorposts of the Israelites in Egypt with the blood of the paschal lamb, Ex. 12:22; in the purifying of lepers, Lev. 14:4, 6, 51; in the sin-offering of the red heifer; and in purification from cermonial defilement caused by touching a corpse, etc, Num. 19:6, 18. Hence it is applied, typically, to the purification of the soul from guilt, Ps. 51:7; comp. Heb. 9:13, 14. Some botanists identify the hyssop with the majoram; others with the caper which grows plentifully in Egypt, the Sinaitic desert, and the Holy Land. It has a stem from three to four feet long; glossy green oval leaves; white blossoms; and a fruit in a pod, about the size and shape of a walnut. Still others identify the hyssop with the maru plant

How does this lesson teach us that—

1. Although sins may be great, God's grace is greater?

2. Confession is necessary to forgiveness?

3. Actual sins have their root in a sinful nature?

4. Cleansing must be sought through Christ's atonement?

5. Restored penitents should strive to reclaim others?

[From the S. S. Times Quarterly.]

PROMPTINGS TO FURTHER STUDY.

In what passage does God's promise teach us to forget as well as forgive sin? From what could the blood of sacrifices never purge the conscience? What passages show that the blood that cleansed from sin in David's time was the same as that which now so cleanses? What unfinished thing did the Holy Ghost signify by the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Jewish law? What Bible example is there of a man beginning to teach God's ways immediately upon his conversion? What did Christians once mention as a sign that a former persecutor was truly converted? What other Scripture phrases appear to be equivalent to a "clean heart?"

[From the National Quarterly.]

For the understanding of this Psalm the scholar should read the 11th and 12th chapters of 2 Samuel. In the 11th chapter is recorded David's great sin. Good and great as David was, in this one thing he showed himself to be capable of lust, of hypocrisy, and of murder. This black spot in the life of that wonderfully good man seems to be shown to us in order to caution each one to have no confidence in himself. After one has lived a long life of uprightness, without the Lord's help he is sure to fall. For a time David was not leaning upon the arm of the Lord as he had been wont to do. He was living luxuriously at home when he should have been at the head of his troops. If he had been doing his duty he would not have fallen into temptation. Those who are busy doing what they know to be right, the devil never approaches. In the 12th chapter is told the story of David's detection and repentance. The prophet went to him and told him a parable which the king thought was a real occurrence. It was about a poor man who had only one little ewe lamb, which grew up with his children, the pet of the household. His rich neighbor, when a traveler came to his house, spared to take of his own large flocks, but took the poor man's lamb, and dressed that, and served it before his guest. Now the poor man was Uriah, whom David had caused to be slain, and the lamb was Uriah's wife, whom David had taken for himself. But he did not know what the parable meant, and grew very indignant that the rich man should have done such mean a thing, and he declared that the man that had done that should surely die. After he had thus condemned himself, Nathan turns upon him with the declaration: "Thou art the man!" and, for the evil that he had done, the sword should never depart from his house, and that his own wives should be taken and given to his neighbor. David then saw the enormity of his sin, and was deeply repentant. He said to Nathan: "I have sinned against the Lord." And Nathan immediately replied: "The Lord hath put away thy sin: thou shalt not die." How quickly a repentant sinner can be forgiven! But though he was forgiven, still he had to suffer the punishments which Nathan had told to him. First, his child died. Next his son Ammon was slain by his brother, and then came the rebellion of Absalom, during which Absalom took the ways of his father as Nathan had predicted, and made them his own. He was forgiven for his sins, but oh how he had to suffer for having done them! He never fully recovered the standing which he lost. The bad results of sin do not cease immediately after it is committed nor even after it is forgiven. No one can tell how long they will follow one. Our lesson tells how thoroughly David repented, and how deeply he abhorred his guilt.

Sound Words.

—Rev. Mr. Talmage is credited by a New York paper as saying in a recent discourse on popular sins: "There are one million men and women in the United States to-day, reading themselves into hell."

—Mr. Whittier, Mr Garrison and Rev. Dr. Peabody wrote to the Massachusetts Teachers' Association, at its last meeting, letters opposing military drill in schools. Mr. Whittier's letter was as follows: "I earnestly hope that the decision of the association may be decidedly against this useless, and to a very large class of the community, highly objectionable feature. We are still suffering from the effects of the development of the war spirit, in the cheapening of human life and the reckless use of deadly weapons. God forbid that we should continue to foster it."

No doubt religion is—let scientists prate as they may—a state necessity, even if we go no further with it. The whole frame of our civil law is built up upon it, as a foundation-stone. You cannot have a court which deserves the name that does not recognize oaths; and what is an oath worth that is not religiously binding? And so the New York Times was quite right the other day in charging home upon philosophers the mischief of socialism and communism. It said that they taught the common people not to believe in a Deity who overrules men in this world and will judge them in the next. And their listeners have begun to say: "Well, if there is no such Being, and no future reckoning, then let us get the best of this world, and as fast as we can. Let us care for nothing and nobody, and do our uttermost for our own present convenience and that alone. Property is a fiction, and life a short dream; let us have the best of both, without regard to the (so-called) rights of others." That is philosophy run to seed. And if they who insanely uphold it could but open their eyes, and discover that even the heathen deemed divinities indispensable; if they could go as far as Voltaire, who said (with Romanism before his eyes) that a bad religion was better than none at all; they might at least become as pious as Cicero. And from his standpoint they might by and by rise to a higher one.—Churchman.

Belmont, Wis., Feb. 10, '79.

Wednesday Feb. 5th was a memorable day at the parsonage at Bashford, Wis. About eleven o'clock A. M., the people of the parish began to gather at the parsonage in wagons, buggies and on horseback, and continued to do so at intervals until 8 o'clock P. M. They came well loaded with oats, wood, beef, pork, butter, sugar, chickens, turkey—with a great variety of cakes, pies, bread, biscuits, etc. Then came a large supply of paper, silver and nickel currency. The above were gifts from loving hearts, to their pastor and wife. They were from all classes and ages, from the little girls and boys of five or six years of age, to the older ladies and gentlemen of fifty or sixty years old.

Mr. Editor, please allow us, through the columns of your paper, to express our heartfelt thanks to all who by their presence and presents contributed so much to make the occasion so pleasant and profitable to all.

Isaac Bancroft, Pastor.
Mrs. M. B Bancroft.

United Presbyterian.

—A new church was dedicated lately at East Salem, N. Y., Rev. R. J. Cunningham, pastor. The sermon was preached by Rev. T. H. Hanna of Xenia, O. The building is a commodious one and cost complete with manse, over $12,000.

—An effort is to be made by the Xenia presbytery to revive the congregation in Columbus, Ohio.

—D. M. Ure, agent of Monmouth College, has raised $3,000 for that institution in two congregations in Argyle presbytery of New York.

—Lieut. Governor Andrew Shuman of this State is announced as having been invited by the students at Monmouth to give the anniversary address next Commencement. As Mr. Shuman is an eminent Mason he may enlighten them on the principles of the U. P. church.

Free Baptist.

—A very precious revival of religion is in progress at Center Strafford, N. H., in the parish of which Eld. S. C. Kimball is pastor. So extensive a reformation has not been known in the place for many years. More than sixty persons have become new witnesses for the Lord and many more are deeply interested. Elds. Stoddard and Browne have lectured there on Masonry, and the pastor has for four years been subject to much annoyance for his fidelity to truth, but the Lord has made bare his mighty arm for the help of his saints and the confusion of his enemies. Praise his name!

Baptist.

—As a result of the firm stand taken by the Baptist church of Menomonie, Wis., of which Bro. Ames was for twelve years pastor, aided by lectures from brethren Hinman, Stoddard and Ronayne, it is said that infidels of the place openly declare that from the Bible standpoint Freemasonry is totally inconsistent with Christianity. The Temple of Honor could get but 35 members in Menomonie, while at Eau Claire, just east, their lodges gathered in 500 to 600 members. But for the information on secretism they would no doubt have gathered 200 or more.

United Brethren in Christ.

—Bro. Hott of the Telescope, is so far recovered as to promise to be at work as usual in a short time.

—A very interesting revival has just closed at Westfield College.

—Rev. N. R. Luce, an earnest Christian and reformer of western New York, proposes to establish an academy and commercial school at Union City, Erie county, Pa., in company with Rev. E. A. Starkey who is soon to graduate at Otterbein University, Westerville, O.

—The Otterbein U. B. church of Chambersburg, Pa., Rev. J. M. Bishop, pastor, has been experiencing a gracious revival which still continues; between thirty and forty conversions are reported and thirty-one have united with the church. This church has passed through the fire for the truth and stood the test. Now the blessing follows. The following from its constitution shows its faith:

Whereas, The loyal part of the congregation of the church of the U. B. in Christ in Chambersburgh, Franklin Co., Pa., have purchased of the 2nd Methodist Episcopal church their church edifice, situated at the N. E. corner of King and 2nd streets, Chambersburg, Pa., have resolved that the above named and described property be deeded to and held and controlled by a board of (5) five trustees elected by the official body of said church and their successors in office, who are members of the U. B. church, who endorse and respect the constitution of said church as it now is, and also the law as it is as a whole.

1st. They are to have full control of said property for the use and benefit of the congregation of the U. B. church who are truly loyal to the principles of said church and worship in said church statedly.

2nd. It shall be their duty to see to it that good order is kept in said church, and that the discipline is carried out to the letter, and its advice in not allowing instrumental music, or choir, or festival, or any worldly amusement in said church.

3rd. They shall not allow a man to preach in said church as a stationed (or otherwise) preacher that does not endorse in full the constitution and laws of said church; nor a person that holds a doctrine that conflicts with the doctrines of said church.

4th. The sitting of male and female to be separate or apart as directed in Zachariah 12:12. Any or every trustee neglecting to see to it that the above rules are carried out, shall forfeit his office as trustee for said church, and the vacancy be filled by a majority of the remaining trustees.

—Bro. J. K. Alwood makes an appeal for aid to be sent to the church at Stryker, Ohio, which through a combination of circumstances is likely to lose its house of worship by mortgage sale. Donations to assist this worthy church may be sent to Rev. Geo. O. Dinius, the pastor, at Bryan, Ohio.

—Bishops Wright and Weaver begin their conference visitations about the first of April and continue until the last of October.

—The Telescope for last week notices revivals in forty-four different places under the charge of United Brethren preachers. As a partial result there are noted in the same paper 533 additions to the U. B. church.

Wesleyan.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman is contributing a series of articles on sanctification to the American Wesleyan.

—At a holiness convention near Parma, Mich., a good work was done in cleansing some of the brethren from filthiness of the flesh in the shape of tobacco.

Rev. G. L. Paine is conducting revival meetings at Vought Hollow, Pa., near Herrickville.

—The North Carolina mission of this church has eight church buildings and sites for five more which will soon be erected.

—As an example of a pioneer missionary one Wesleyan preacher in Tennessee has five churches in his charge, requiring 170 miles travel to reach them all. During the past three months he preached sixteen times and made thirty pastoral visits and his salary was $25.10.

—Rev. R. E. Johnson, of Waupun, Wis., has been lately laboring among the colored people in Paulding county, Ohio, where his labors were rewarded with a blessed revival.

Church of God.

—The Herald of Gospel Freedom, the organ of the anti-lodge portion of this church, has removed to Rome City, Noble county, Ind., a beautiful location presenting some special advantages for the paper. The Herald has a holiness department, and it is cheering to note the good work being done in this direction among the churches which it represents. J. F. Kinsey, a musical author of some reputation, conducts a valuable department for music in the Herald. The churches that stand for Christ against lodgery will rejoice to know of the favor of God upon the northern Indiana Eldership.

—Elder B. F. Bear held a protracted meeting at Yellow Lake Bethel, Ind., during the month of January. The Lord did a great work, and a good number of conversions and eleven accessions to the church followed.

—Bro. Benj. Ulsh of Silver Lake, Ind., a most indefatigable worker for Christ against the lodge worships, has offended some of his church dignitaries through his godly valor for truth. A committee was appointed to try his case. Like the persecuted Christians of old he held to the Word of God and was willing to be judged by it, but that would not do for his examiners, who have not yet reported what shall be done to silence his conscience-troubling voice.

FREE METHODIST.

—The church in Brooklyn, N. Y., Rev. W. Gould, pastor, is experiencing an interesting revival.

—At Freeport, Ill., some twenty-five have been received into the church, and about twice as many were converted or received the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Rev. W. F. Manley is assisting the pastor. The lodge, tobacco and worldly attire are severely dealt with in these meetings.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Daniel Bailey of Wheaton, brother of Prof. E. D. Bailey of the College, has received a call to the church at Union, Ill., and has removed his family to that place. Rev. N. D. Fanning of Marengo, who has for some time supplied the Union church while preaching to his own people, was obliged to give up his outside appointment because of ill health.

—A union revival meeting has been progressing in Oberlin for several weeks. Ninety per cent. of the four college classes are now confessing Christ and a daily business men's prayer meeting is held.

—The Puritan church, Brooklyn, N. Y., called a council last week to install Rev. R. D. Field as their pastor. At his request only members of the Manhattan (anti-Beecher) Association were invited.

—Dr. R. S. Storrs of this Association, has lately seen his people, the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, finish the payment of a $23,000 debt on their chapel.

—The Congregational churches of Worcester have formed a city missionary society, the Board of Managers to consist of the pastor and one delegate from each church. Rev. Calvin Cutler is employed as missionary. The Mission Chapel church of that city, received five persons Jan. 26.

MISSIONARY.

—Thirty families at Tasso in Corsica, have embraced Protestantism and have secured an Italian pastor from Geneva.

—The wane of idolatry in the Oriental countries appears from what we see noted as an ascertained fact, that 33,000 Hindoos abjured their idols to embrace Christianity during the year 1878.

—There are about 400,000 persons connected with the Christian churches in India, China and Japan, besides 200,000 children receiving a Christian education.

—In Calcutta the Hindoos have 199 temples; the Mohammedans 117 mosques; the Christians 31 churches; the Jews 2 synagogues; the Chinese a few Buddhist temples.

—It was more than eighteen hundred years ago that Christ commanded us to go into all the world preaching his Gospel and bringing the nations to his feet. After all this time what report can we make. Rev. Dr. Wilson, presiding at one of the sessions of the Missionary Conference in England, said that of every three persons walking on the earth two have never heard the name of Christ nor seen a Bible.

—The American Missionary Association makes the following report of its work:

Churches: In the South—In Va., 1; N. C., 5; S. C., 2; Ga., 12; Ky., 7; Tenn., 4; Ala., 13; La., 12; Miss., 1; Kansas, 2; Texas, 5. Africa, 1. Among the Indians, 1. Total 66.

Institutions founded, fostered or sustained in the South:—Hampton, Va.; Berea, Ky.; Talladega, Ala.; Atlanta, Ga.; Nashville, Tenn.; Tougaloo, Miss.; New Orleans, La.; and Austin, Texas, 8. Graded or Normal Schools: at Wilmington, Raleigh, N. C.; Charleston, Greenwood, S. C.; Macon, Atlanta, Ga.; Montgomery, Mobile, Athens, Selma, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn., 11. Other schools, 18. Total 37.

Teachers, missionaries and assistants.—Among the freedmen, 231; among the Chinese, 17; among the Indians, 17; in Africa, 14. Total, 279. Students—in theology, 88; law, 17; in college course, 106; in other studies, 7,018. Total, 7,229. Scholars, taught by former pupils of our schools, estimated at 100,000. Indians under the care of the association, 13,000.

News of the Week.

—Senator Bruce (colored) was called to the chair of the U. S. Senate last Friday and presided a portion of the afternoon. This is the first time in the history of the government that a colored man has occupied the chair.

—The committee on Ways and Means of the House is trying to frame some provision to supply the deficit of $27,000,000 in the revenue which is threatened. A dozen different plans are suggested in an informal way, but the issuance of more bonds has the most backing, yet this proposition has active opposition among Southern and Western members. There is great repugnance to increasing the bonded debt to meet current expenses. Members of the committee confess that they have a difficult problem to deal with.

—The bill to restrict Chinese immigration passed the Senate on Saturday, and now goes to the President for his approval.

—The President has received a large number of letters from distinguished women in all parts of the country thanking him in the name of their sex for approving the act admitting women to practice in the Supreme Court and thus extending the sphere of women's usefulness. The Justices of the Supreme Court once decided unanimously that women were not qualified to practice at their bar, and one of them at the White House reception Saturday, remarked to some ladies who were quizzing him about it, that they intended to change their consultation room into a nursery, where women who wanted to argue cases before them could leave their babies.

—At 7 o'clock Sunday morning fire was discovered in the basement of the Administration building at the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, near Xenia. Owing to the poor facilities for extinguishing fire, and the distance of the buildings from town, the fire got under full headway before an engine arrived. The six hundred children at the Home had just finished breakfast, in the main building, and returned to their cottages, when the fire made its appearance in the first story. Several members of the Legislature, visiting the institution, narrowly escaped with their lives. In two hours the entire building and contents were destroyed, including the personal effects of teachers and officials, which were considerable. No lives were lost, and no serious accidents are reported. The loss to the State by this fire will be about $75,000, upon which there is no insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

—A dispatch from Tashkend, Turkistan, dated Feb. 13, says: "The Afghan embassy, which will arrive at Samarcand on the 17th and Tashkend on the 20th, is furnished by the Ameer with full powers to treat. Shere Ali has declared to General Rasgonoff that he will follow implicitly the advice of the Czar, and will refuse absolutely to negotiate with the English invaders of his territory."

—The Official Journal, of Paris, says the latest reports of the plague are reassuring. It has not increased, and energetic measures have been adopted for its suppression. The French Government has dispatched a physician to investigate the disease. The reports that the plague has appeared in Turkey are unfounded. There is no ground for a panic, and no danger for the present from arrivals from the Black Sea or the Sea of Azov. Nevertheless, the Minister of Commerce has ordered a quarantine of two days at the French ports on the Mediterranean and in Algeria, including the arrivals from the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov, even when provided with a clean bill of health.

—Lord Beaconsfield reports to the British Parliament that the object of the government in inaugurating the war in Afghanistan has been completely accomplished. The object of the war was, as he states it, to secure control of the great highways connecting Afghanistan with India, and announced the purpose of the government to retain them. The resenting of an insult offered by the Ameer was a mere pretense then. Beaconsfield invited war to secure more territory.

—Advices from Cape Town, Africa, say that on the 21st of January a British column, consisting of a portion of the twenty-fourth regiment, a battery of artillery, and 600 native auxiliaries was utterly annihilated near Tugela river by 20,000 Zulus, who captured a valuable convoy of 102 wagons, 1,000 oxen, two cannon, 400 shot and shell, 1,000 rifles, 250 000 rounds of ammunition, 60 000 pounds weight of provisions, and the colors of the twenty-fourth regiment. It is estimated that 5,000 Zulus were killed and wounded in the battle. Lord Chelmsford, commander of the expedition, has been forced to retire in consequence of defeat. It is estimated that 500 soldiers were killed.

—It is feared that before next year half of the inhabitants of the southern provinces of Morocco, Africa, will have perished by starvation and disease, on account of the scarcity caused by last year's drought.

Those who wish to know the character of Freemasonry, as shown by its own publications, will find many standard works in the following list.

All the books advertised here are used by Masons, but Duncan's Ritual, Allyn's Ritual and Richardson's Monitor, are not publicly acknowledged as Masonic authority, because they tell too much.

Home and Farm.

The Orchard in February.

If one is to set out small fruits, whether for home use or market, the sooner the preliminary work of selecting the kinds, and ordering the plants is done, the better. The present is one of those periods, that every now and then occur in fruit culture. There are a number of new varieties of great promise, but that have not been sufficiently tested to warrant planting them largely. The grower for market feels much like the hunter who wished to so aim at an animal, that he would miss it if a calf, but hit it if a deer. The safe way for those who grow fruit for sale, is to plant out trial beds of the promising kinds, and thus test their adaptability to the soil, and if the result is satisfactory you have a stock of plants for setting out a plantation.

The market and the neighborhood have both to be considered. If the market is a distant one, the fruit, whatever other quality it may have, must be firm enough to reach its destination in good order. If there is a local or neighborhood trade—a matter quite too often overlooked by growers—then a very different class of fruit may be grown.

Pruning omitted last fall should be attended to now as soon as the weather will allow. Grape-vines need the first care, and should be pruned long before the buds begin to swell. Currants and gooseberries start early, and should be pruned early.

Prepartory work in the way of trellises and other supports may be attended to and the materials got ready. In the family garden, the best support for raspberries is a single wire strained between posts at the ends of the rows, and we think that the best grape-vine trellis is that with horizontal slats four feet apart, with upright wires where needed.—American Agriculturist.

Heat and Light in the Sick-Room.

A recent writer gives the following sensible suggestions on this subject:

Each person in a room should be supplied with 3,000 cubic feet of air per hour; and this should be done, where possible, without creating a perceptible dratt, for the nervous irritation induced by drafts is liable to produce internal inflammation.

The temperature of the sick-room should be kept at a uniform height, the best average being from sixty-five to seventy degrees F., except for infants or very old people, who require a temperature from seventy-five to eighty degrees F.; and for these it is especially important to guard against changes, and to keep it as uniform as possible. All cases of fever require a temperature lower than the average, as from fifty to sixty degrees F., to assist in reducing the high temperature of the body; but when the fever subsides, and there is much debility remaining, the temperature should be raised somewhat above the average.

As a patient can bear a greater degree of cold when in bed than when out of it, convalescents from severe diseases, fever especially, should have the temperature of their rooms higher than that maintained during the height of the attack. Diseases of the air passages, as croup and diphtheria, require a higher temperature (eighty to ninety-five degrees Fahrenheit) and a moist atmosphere. The best method of heating the sickroom is by the open grate fire. The sickroom should not be darkened by blinds, except where there is a disease of the eyes, with photophobia, or when the patient is very restless and cannot sleep; then strong light must be excluded. Otherwise the sunlight should be allowed to enter and act chemically by decomposing the noxious gases, and purifying the air. Of course it is not advisable to place the patient under a strong uncomfortable glare of sunlight, nor in summer to allow the sun's rays to shine into the room and raise the temperature too high. Artificial light has no useful effect, but does harm by burning up oxygen.

PROTECTION AGAINST RUST.—Nothing simpler or better adapted to general use has been discovered than the compound of lard and resin recommended by Prof. Olmsted, of Yale College (author of "Olmsted's Natural Philosophy"), and used by him for the preservation of scientific apparatus. Take any quantity of good lard, and to every half pound or so add of common resin an amount about equal to half the size of an egg, or less—a little more or less is of no consequence. Melt them slowly together, stirring as they cool. Apply this with a cloth or otherwise, just enough to give a thin coating to the metal surface to be protected. It can be wiped off nearly clean from surfaces where it will be undesirable, as in the case of knives and forks, etc. The resin prevents rancidity, and the mixture obviates the ready access of air and moisture. A fresh application may be needed when the coating is washed off by the friction of beating storms or otherwise. There was talk of patenting this recipe at one time, but Professor Olmsted decided to publish it for the general good.

Illustrated Supplements.

A large number of these supplements, containing the signs, grips, pass-words etc., of Freemasonry Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias and the Grange, have been printed, and deserve a general circulation. They are sent post paid at two cents each, and by express (charges not paid) at 75 cents per hundred, and 1000 for $6.50.

OHIO.

FRIENDS OF ANTI-SECRECY IN THE STATE OF OHIO: You are called to meet in convention in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Utica, Licking county, on the 4th of March, 1879, at 7 o'clock P. M., to take counsel in regard to our duty as citizens of this great and growing commonwealth, ruled by the lodge, what we can and ought to do to free our State from this bondage. Christ was manifested to destroy the works of Satan; all works of darkness are the devil's. Let us come together in the light of God's countenance and look each other in the face, and thus sharpen one another in the work of our Master who is the true Light of our fallen world.

☞ We will meet, D. V., Tuesday evening, March 4th, at 6:30; hold three sessions on Wednesday and probably two on Thursday. Rev. J. P. Stoddard will be with us all through our meetings; and will speak at every session by the help of God. Able men, representing the different anti-secret churches in the State will speak. Free entertainment will be given to all delegates. Do not be afraid of burdening the good people of Utica. An old friend there says, they have plenty of "hog and hominy," and will give them cheerfully to all the friends who may come.

Welcome addresses will be given Tuesday evening by Revs. Dysart and Boyd of Utica.

Utica is located on the Lake Erie division of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, twelve miles north of Newark and twelve south of Mt. Vernon. At these points other railroads are struck. Two trains each way pass Utica stopping there every day.

Come, friends, to this convention in the name of Him who is strong and mighty in battle. H. P. MCCLURKIN, Pres.

New Concord, O., Jan. 13, 1879.

All delegates to the Ohio Convention are requested to forward their names by card to James M. Kirkpatrick of Utica, a few days before the meeting, and entertainment will be provided.

IOWA.

The State Christian Association of Iowa is called to meet at West Branch, Cedar county, Iowa, Tuesday, at 2 P. M., March 18, 1879. There will be a prayer and business meeting Tuesday afternoon. At 7 P. M. a lecture will be delivered. Wednesday will be devoted to counsel until 1 1-2 and 7 P. M, when lectures and expositions will be given by Bros. J. P. Stoddard and D. P. Rathbun. Let all the friends give publicity to this notice and be on hand the first day and contribute to the success of the anti-secret reform movement. West Branch is on the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern railroad, between West Liberty and Cedar Rapids. Free entertainment will be given to all the friends who may come. We therefore invite with pleasure a large number of men and women from all the Christian churches in this and other States, with other friends of humanity, to be present. The Convention will be short but deeply interesting.

M. S. DRURY, Cor. Sec.

—THE NORTH-EAST PENNSYLVANIA ASSOCIATION will hold its next quarterly meeting at Clifford, Pa., on the 28th of March.

NEW ENGLAND.

It is very probable that I am going back to New England in a few weeks. In the event of my doing so I desire to say that every city and village in the Eastern States ought to be made to see that the worship of the Masonic temples of America to-day is the self-same worship that used to be practiced in the temples of Baal or Osiris. New England friends therefore are requested to write to Bro. Hinman at once, addressing him care of S. A. Pratt, Worcester, Mass., and make all necessary arrangements for a successful expose of the Masonic philosophy. I shall start for the East by March 15th, or immediately after shipping my new book and if friends in Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York will write me at once I can visit them as I move along.

Topics of the Time.

A friend calling on his return last week from England referred to the gloomy commercials prospects of the United Kingdom and the want and the suffering experienced by thousands in the humbler walks of life. On every hand he was reminded of America by the tools and articles of common use manufactured here. The supplanting of English manufacture by the superiority and cheapness of American products though probably the chief direct cause of the destitution now experienced there is not the only one. European economists are wisely turning their attention to the immense standing armies maintained largely through the influence of Germany. It is estimated that there are now under arms in Europe 7,500,000 men. This multitude are not only non-producers, but they represent so much deducted from the able-bodied, working class, and their cost per man is $200 per annum, or about four million dollars each day, or a total of fifteen hundred millions of dollars per annum, expended for the services of men who do not add one penny to the productions of the country. To the practical men on this side of the ocean such an outlay is supreme folly, and the day hastens when the crowned heads of Europe will themselves begin a thorough reform on the principle of national arbitration, or their over-borne people will undertake it for themselves.

The depositors of the defunct Chicago savings banks are becoming restive with long delay and little returns from the settlement of the broken institutions. In one case they are taking hold of the business, which should have been attended to by the courts, and investigating the receiver. Of nearly $400,000 gathered up by this functionary depositors have been paid only $127,000, while $200,000 have been paid for "expenses" In pushing the bank into insolvency they have fallen into evils which they knew not of, into the hands of greater thieves than even bank officers. It is truly pitiable that such rapacity should be practiced upon the class of people who patronize the savings bank, and, though too late to save much from the wreck, our courts should have integrity enough to see that no further stealing is allowed.

The Romish Bishop of Chicago died last week and his body was sent East for burial. What were his personal merits or faults; what were his public or private efforts for elevation of his fellow-men, or their relief in suffering, few outside the Catholic hierachy ever knew. Chicago has ministers who have ever been abundant in labors of this kind, of which the public has not been indifferent. Yet no Protestant clergyman, or score of them, exerts political influence equal to that of the Catholic priest or Jesuit it may be who is at the head of that church in a great city. This can be the only reason for the overflowing of the daily political press, giving pages to lavish descriptions of the elaborate ceremonies attending the funeral. It was a political index that could not be misunderstood.

The peculiar and political character of the Chinese bill comes out more clearly since it passed the House finally on Saturday and went to the President. Some California papers threaten to drive that State into secession, and the Republicans of the coast declare that a veto will give the democratic party "Eternal sway" west of the mountains and utterly annihilate them. They forget that every one will say that a party which rests on so frail a basis does not deserve to live. East of the mountains the voice of the party is nearly unanimous for a veto; this, joined with the general opposition of the religious press, and the known hostile opinion of every member of the Cabinet, is a fair indication of the President's decision.

ENCOURAGEMENT FROM THE GRAND LODGE.

It is certainly light springing from the darkness, and hope arising from very unusual surroundings to read the record of Freemasonry in Illinois. If there is complaint that the progress of reform is too slow, that the army of light does not rapidly enlarge, that men unconnected with the lodge are not joining us by the thousands, we must remember that while upon the right we gain the attention and support of candid men, on the left the efforts of the Cynosure and the lecturers is breaking off a large section from the lodge, reclaiming districts overspread with the deluge of secretism. The reform enlarges on either hand. While we are occupied with one wing we must not forget the other. Dr. Marsh of Elmwood, Ill., sends us a most instructive table which explains itself, taken from the Masonic Grand Lodge reports for this State for several years:

Where is the Wrong?

BY GEN. J. W. PHELPS.

If we judge by the Masonic standard, wherein has Mr. Tilden or his coparceners done any wrong? They have acted up to that "standard of sublimated morals" called Freemasonry, in every respect. They have colluded together in secret; have acted on the sly; have showed their charitable intentions in "fifty of the United States' best documents"; have modestly secured their acts from exposure as far as possible, by "ancient and honorable" pretensions and by an intricate system of signs, and ciphers, and symbols; and finally, not forgetting the virtues of the oath, they have appealed to heaven for the purity of their motives and the propriety of their proceedings.

Now as Freemasonry teaches all this, and more of the same sort, under the claims of being "the most moral institution that ever subsisted," and as Freemasonry has become the "true inwardness" of both political parties, both Republican and Democrat, so that whichever party is in power Freemasonry is the ruling force that is to control us, wherein have Mr. Tilden and his co-parceners been guilty of any remarkable wrong? When their actions are measured by the standard that controls the political sentiment of the country, and no little of the religious sentiment too, what crime or fault have they committed? Have they not been entirely governed by the same secret counsels that have ruled the Republican party ever since it came in power?

The double part played by the uncle and nephew, one claiming high and honorable motives of action, while the other was dealing underhandedly in the "best United States documents"; the uncle showing indignation and scorn at the "inchoate" rascality of the nephew, but still allowing the nephew to go on, and the entire knownothingness concerning all criminating acts that were done among them—all this is as perfect Freemasonry as if the actors had learned their lesson in the lodge, and had practiced it all their lives. Nothing is more common than this double action practiced by Freemasons in all the affairs of life, one of the coparceners playing the honest, the civil, the proper, while the other plays the knave, the churl, the blackguard.

If we were to judge the coparceners by any other moral standard than that of Freemasonry; if we compare their actions with the common standard prevailing among honest, open, fair-dealing men who conceive that truth, sincerity and plain dealing are the proper attributes for republican citizens, without which republican government is impossible, and who are never guilty of trifling with the oath and with religious subjects as Freemasons do;—if we look upon the coparceners from this point of view, what must be our feelings to think that such men came so near attaining supreme power in these United States! Think of the character of our earlier Presidents, and then think what a President we should now have if the assassination and intimidation practiced by the Ku-Klux lodge had only succeeded in adding one or two votes more to the some thirty, more or less, which they gave him! Think how near fifty "documents" came to buying those one or two votes, thus making bribery the crowning grace of what murder and outrage had failed to accomplish!

"I declare before God and my country," says Gov. Tilden, the especial head and front of the Democratic party, "that it is my earnest belief that the votes and certificates of Florida, South Carolina and Louisiana were bought; and that the Presidency was controlled by their purchase." And as a consequence of this state of things so earnestly believed in, his coparceners had advised to "Let forces be got together immediately, in readiness for contingencies." Now was this solemn appeal to heaven that the Republicans had placed a man in the Presidential chair by bribery, and the suggestion to have forces got together immediately, a real, earnest step towards the use of force and imperial power, or was it a mere Masonic trifling, according to the prevailing custom among the politicians of the present day?

Reader, if you value the present institutions under which you live; if you value personal independence, freedom, and civil liberty, there are some things that you must not permit to be trifled with, as they are by the Masonic lodge; and among these are the oath and our republican form of goverment. You must resent the action of a Republican Congress of April, 1864, in covertly and slyly chartering a "Masonic Hall Association," as you would resent an immediate grievous wrong done to your personal rights. You must reject the Masonic standard of morals, and never vote for those men who sustain it. Though it is possible that some Freemasons may pass for good men; and though even Mr. Tilden and his coparceners may be thought to he good and true men by some, yet life is too short to be spent in hunting through Masonic chaff in the hope of finding substantial good. It does not pan out well.

Who are the Blessed—The Truly Happy? II.

BY REV. WARREN TAYLOR.

Reader, on our previous walk we saw, or at least it was mentioned, that happiness springs not from any circumstance or condition, but from character; that is, not from what we have, but from what we are. And it was also remarked for substance, that when one begins to see himself as he is, when he awakes to a sense and realization that he wants, or is in want of a clear knowledge of God and an evidence of his favor, and in want of a holy character and a well-founded hope, so that he looks around and reaches out or sighs for these things, then the foundations of a pure and strong character are being laid, and on him has fallen the benediction, "Blessed are the poor in spirit." But this sense of inward poverty will not be unattended, or at least it will be followed by a sense of one's own unworthiness. How did I come to be thus destitute of the knowledge and favor of God? How came I to be thus poor and wretched and miserable and blind and naked? Oh! I have sinned against the great and good God. Sit down, my soul, in the dust; lay thy hand upon thy mouth and let tears flow; for I have sinned against God. And now, the soul, weeping over not only its evil deeds, but its inward corruptions, is prepared for a second benediction, "Blessed are they that mourn."

Let us dwell for a moment on this thought. If anything is a proper occasion for mourning, sin is. For in the first place, sin dishonors God. He is our Father and the Giver of every good gift, the Lord of angels and of all. The highest service we can render and the supreme affection of our hearts are due to him for what he is and what he has done. But what reproach have we brought on his holy name by breaking away from his government and rebelling against him! And how must his holy nature be displeased with us!

2nd. The sin in which you and I have had a share has filled the world with all its untold miseries. Look in upon the scenes of wretchedness and woe in all our large cities. Read over again the history of the late campaign in the Balkans. Walk awhile in the track of the pestilences; the wars and oppressions with which sin has cursed and filled the world, and remember that the sole cause of all is that sin in which we, alas! have walked and lived; and then weep and cry out and ask God to forgive and to save if in justice to himself he can.

3rd. Sin has not only filled this world with misery, but it has peopled another world with a race far more wretched—and hopelessly so. For unending misery is unending sin.

4th. It was sin, yours and mine my brother, that forced that bloody sweat from the body of our Lord in the garden, and wrung from his lips the cry, "Eloi! Eloi!"

> "Yes, our sins have done the deed,
> Drove the nails that fixed him there,
> Crowned with thorns his sacred head,
> Pierced him with a soldier's spear
> Made his soul a sacrifice
> For a sinful world he dies."

We might proceed thus to count up the evils of sin without limit and without end. But whatever view of the subject we take, we find cause for mourning and lamentation.

But this mourning has a comforting side. For 1st. It begins in love for God. Were there no love for him there would be no grief for having dishonored his name or marred the interests of his empire. And 2nd. In this love for God and hatred of sin, and sorrow on account of it, there is the promise and the dawn of a better life. The spirit is doing its work in the soul, enlightening and subduing it to Christ and to God. And what he has undertaken he will not leave unfinished. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Reader, you and I have long desired to be numbered with the blessed; and long sought to be happy. Let us begin by looking at things as they are, and striving by the help of God to feel as we ought to feel. And these right views and right feelings will develop into the flower of a better life and the peaceable fruits of righteousness in the end. With the inward poverty and grief that we feel, we are ready to come to him who 'taketh away the sin of the world;' to him who is mighty to save. They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick. And how precious those words, "I came not call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

The blessed are not the rich and prosperous, nor the gay and thoughtless, nor those who fret and chafe against circumstances and the providence of God, but the poor in spirit and they that mourn. And let the old saint, the Christian worker and minister of Christ remember, "He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

Grangerism Probed.

Editor Cynosure:—The grangers of our neighborhood have been holding a sort of revival meeting lately. On January 29th, they held a public meeting that was addressed by their National lecturer. Having a desire to hear great men, on great themes, I attended. The meeting was held in the Methodist Episcopal church about five miles northeast of West Unity,—and just here let me state, I am happy to testify to the growing liberality of the officers of that church. Less than three years ago I tried to get the church for Rev. John Levington to lecture in against secret societies, but no appeal that I could make had any effect on the stubborn bolt to the door of that sanctuary. "You can't come in," was the dignified answer. Hope we shall succeed better next time,—or are the members of that church only anxious to hear one side?

But to the lecture. The speaker began with the declaration that the whole organization was founded on the Bible; but before he got through he told us that any thing could be proved by the Bible by twisting it, which I think he proved to the satisfaction of every one present before he got through. If it is founded on the Bible, will some granger account for the fact that so many Bible haters are in it?

To prove the benefit of organization he referred to the bridge across the Ohio river at Cincinnati, and said the main cables were over a foot in diameter, but made up of wires not larger than a knitting needle; and, says he, "there is a notice on that bridge that all processions and military companies must break step while crossing." This was his strongest argument in favor of the grange; but what did this notice to "break step" prove? Why, that concert of action can destroy just as well, if not better than it can build up, and that the owners of the bridge were aware of the fact if the grange lecturer was not. He informed us that the grange benefitted us mentally, morally, socially and financially. One would suppose from his speech that we were a very ignorant people before the grange came. His description of our situation reminded me of Rev. Harris Barham's description of the inhabitants of London, before the opening of the University of that city:

> "What precious fools the people grew,
> Their alma mater not in town,
> The useful classes hardly knew,
> Four was composed of two and two.
> Until they learned it at the U-> Niversity we've got in town."

As to the moral benefits derived from the order, I think that as no man would hide his morality if he could, and could not if he would, we are just as capable of judging of the moral tendencies of the grange as the national lecturer himself.

I think he spent four-fifths of his time trying to prove that the grange has been a success financially. He mentioned a great many instances where men had made money by being connected with the order; and so I might, by telling only of my successes in life, make the impression (where I was not known) that I was very wealthy; and so might almost any pauper. If he wished to prove that the grange was a success why did he not give the number of granges in Ohio, the initiation fees, the amount paid as monthly dues, cost of regalia, value of time spent, expenses of picnics, dinners, hall rent, etc., (he told us they were great on dinners) in fine, all the necessary and unnecessary expenses usually paid by the members, and then turning his meeting into an experience meeting, we might have formed a tolerably fair estimate of its value financially.

In enumerating its advantages he dealt largely in the millions, seldom if ever come below thousands except in individual cases, all of which may have been true and yet the grange be a miserable failure. The sewing machine seemed to be his favorite hobby; yet he admitted that the price was not materially affected till within the last eighteen months, while the grange had existed eleven years. To account for this long delay, we were informed that the machine patents did not expire till about then—a very good reason! He told how coal oil was brought down from forty to twenty-five cents by a granger hauling a barrel of it through the streets of a certain town. He told of the grangers of a neighboring county driving their hogs to the railroad all at once intending to ship them themselves, and how the hog buyers got frightened and paid them thirty cents per hundred extra; but how he could credit all this to the grange, when men outside of the order could—yes, have done quite as well with large lots, I fail to see. If it paid so well, why did they not sell in that way last fall?

We see grangers hauling their wheat, oats, corn, clover seed and other farm products to the same warehouse with us, and selling to the same men and for the same price, selling their hogs to the same middle man that we do, going to the same store for groceries, calicoes, etc., and then when we hear such men prate of the advantages of being a granger, we take it with a considerable degree of allowance. The lecturer even admitted that the old law of supply and demand regulated the price of everything, and he might have added, for everybody.

In answering the objections to secret societies he mentioned the Morgan murder once or twice, but failed to raise much of a laugh. It was plain, however, to see that he enjoyed it if his audience did not; and if he enjoyed that murder what reason have we for believing that he would not enjoy another, or a thousand more if committed under the same circumstances. He claimed the family as a secret society; and he might have added, and the meaner the family the greater the need of secrecy. He mentioned the Lord's supper in an upper room as a secret society, and quoted quite a number of passages of Scripture to prove that secret societies were right; such as, "the door being shut," "and when thou hast shut the door," etc.; but he made no attempt to clear up the passages that plainly condemn them. He told us that the Christians used to meet in secret, and were a thousand times more secret than the grange, and he gave this very good reason for it: "If they had been found out they would have been thrown to the wild beasts." Can the grangers give as good a reason for their secrecy? He told us that the grange is helping on the cause of religion and temperance, and that the better the granger the better the Christian. He mentioned a church that had grown up through the instrumentality of the grange, and of persons actually being brought into the church by the grange, and of the grange uniting the different churches in a certain place. He spoke of the preachers who preached against it, but said it was on account of their ignorance. The probability is that some of our preachers know about as much about the grange as the lecturer does, and preach against it for a good deal less money than he is paid for preaching for it.

But suppose this to be all true, what does it prove? Why his spending so much time to prove its benefits financially, and so little to prove its benefits morally, proved that in his estimation, at least, the grangers set a much higher estimate on their money than they do on their souls; at least it seemed so to me.

As to the social tendencies of the order, we are free to admit, and we admit, too, that licentious France is more social than staid old Scotland. That there is more sociability of its kind in the ball-room than in the prayer meeting. And we often hear of the social glass. I would like to mention a great many other things that were said, but this article is already long enough.

J. G. MATTOON.

EMBARGO ON TRADE.

BY O. S. O.

While competition is the life of trade, yet exposure of deceit and extortion in a rival may prove ruinous to his entire stock in trinkets and capsize the business.

A lengthy article in the Chicago Times whines and winces at the Cynosure for radiating light to those in darkness pertinent to the expose of Good Templars, alleging that secrecy is desirable to gain a select class. The fact is the vampires, impostors and jugglers cannot successfully ply their art if exposed. A secretist deems it right to corrupt and deceive the simple and deprive them of their honest earnings. The Cynosure deems it right to enlighten, assist, instruct and elevate all mankind free of cost; and to rescue the simple and unwary from the snares and pitfalls of designing adversaries. The Cynosure is applying the lash and the cords felt on the backs of the sneaks and money-changers, peddling out their wares in the temple.

O, most noble Cynosure, flash forth thy glorious light on the Cimmerian darkness now holding sway, and reveal to public gaze the deceitful swindlers and their pitiable dupes. Every honest man to the rescue and work while the day lasts. To falter is arrant moral cowardice. To fall is immortal glory. A reform determined on must prevail, and can know no backward steps. The bridges in the rear are burned and there is no retreat. The prayers and blessings of every honest man are with you. When the gathering wrath is ready to burst on the church for tolerating in her midst the idolatry and blasphemy of Masonry, the least contemptible of these clans of night and money sorcerers, will quickly effect their escape and be found to act in unison with their head.

The communistic head of Masonry will assume the attitude of antagonism to the church the moment the latter refuses to be used or corrupted. This stands certain without argument. The church, on its mission to victory, cannot be established in righteousness until the Masonic leper has been carried out, placed on an ambulance and hauled off to other quarters to be put in quarantine, where the sycophant and craven miscreant in the church or at the press can palliate, excuse and adorn it with gentle soothings while trembling at its powerful vengeance. It is a lamentable role for a Christian to play second class puppet to a "Most Worshipful Supreme Master Mason," who at every step and strut pours contempt on our pure, all-sufficient and inestimable Christianity. Cowardice and knavery is depicted in every lineament of the countenance of the secretist in the church when asked to array himself on the side of truth. Right ever comes to the light and wrong ever shuns the light. What difference is there in the result, if Christianity is sold for thirty pieces of silver or Masonic favor? All the visitations to recreant humanity are but a re-echo that "God is not mocked; that man and the church and a nation reap what they sow. "He that gathers not with me scatters abroad." "Other foundation can no man lay." "I am the way." "He that is not with me is against me."

Members of the Mollie Maguire order (a whelp born of and nurtured into being by the Masonic monster) are paying the death penalty on the scaffold, but the Masonic beast arrayed against God and humanity cheats the gallows of its due and chuckles in its brazen egotism that it can compel church and state to do it homage and proclaim to it loud hosannas, while it tosses aloft its fantastic plumed head and prowls throughout the realm, bidding defiance to shame, law and death-dealing consequences. When a government allows itself so far to sink in infamy as to lend its aid to tolerate or legalize a secret, irresponsible corporation to force down the throats of its citizens a fiendish, false, blasphemous vow, and with the most horrid profanity asking to have their throats cut if they do not follow the customs and usages of Masonry, it may well be questioned, Has it the right to deprive these Mollie Maguires of their lives at the gallows for murder, when they were only carrying out the teachings of a government that stands convicted in the minds of all honest men as accessory to their crimes and as accessory before the fact to the murders. Remove the mask from the nation's guilt as well as the lodge and the sneak secreted in it, and hold it up to the execrations of the Hottentot and the savage. Not because love for the nation less, but right more.

It is a truth the nations are slow to learn that socialism, communism, nihilism, could not exist but for the Masonic beast that breeds them. The throes and struggles of the nations are but begun, and the Masonic work for the reaper of death will continue to grow and spread and shock humanity. Educate a nation to swallow and approve of Masonic vows, styled obligations, oaths, to intimidate their dupes, and its gates of war would never be closed. These Mollie Maguires knew that corrupt secretists were organized throughout this fair country, arrayed in gay attirement and costume that lunatics would refuse to strut in, who held them in contempt; and they retaliated by adopting their teachings.

Who is it says to the citizen, if you bow down and blaspheme, you shall be a citizen in and outside and above the government, receive undue favors and partiality, and advantages in a communistic order of conspirators, and be protected in crime and corrupted in heart? The government.

Who chartered a corporation to vow all its members to the foulest murders and heaven-daring blasphemies, and authorized and set the example and taught these misguided, miserable, pitiable, benighted men to become inveigled into crime and lured to their doom? The government.

Who has been entreated by the purest, ablest, noblest men of this nation (while being hounded down and their influence crushed and their names blackened) to discourage and stamp out organized secrecy; and to which a deaf ear has ever been turned? The government!

Whe are in the pulpits of the land, who refuse to inform and warn the people against these monsters, stalking at noonday to drum up, and trumpet up recruits, and plotting at night for the souls and money of men, and on whose skirts are the indelible stains and blood of these Mollie Maguires and their victims? Clergymen!

Who are digging cisterns that hold no water—and are fitting out and manning pirate vessels to run down and strand and despoil the church, and wreck hearts and human souls. And who are arrayed against the counsel and testimony of the wise and good in the past—who re-echo the shout of the multitude, "Away with Him," and are fostering in the church a scorpion that will outrage and sting the living church with demoniacal rage and malignity? Professing Protestant clergymen!

A host of socialistic and communistic Masonic conspirators hold this government by the throat and the church in its iron grasp (implacable, and tolerating no rival) and yet, neither seems willing to enter the conflict and, under the aid of Divine favor and guidance, throw off the yoke of the oppressor, and maintain their loyalty as a nation of freemen, rid of the most hideous and deceptive tyrant that ever insulted or enslaved mankind.

Strength as the Day Shall Be.

AN OPEN LETTER.

PAXTON, Ill.

Mr. Wm. C. Bissell:

DEAR BROTHER:—Yours of the 18th just received. Your example comes to me like an inspiration. At your age, riding ten miles per diem, out and in, putting in a day's work at teaching, through one of the coldest winters of this zone, is a marvel indeed. You certainly must have more than human help. It is good to have the Divine presence gloriously manifested in dying moments. It is vastly better to realize the Divine presence and help in earthly struggles, in the discharge of ordinary duties calling for the exertion of every power of body and mind to take up crosses of unusual weight, often imposed upon us in the service of the Master. We turn from Luther's dying bed as a small matter compared with the wonderful exhibition of the Divine power that protected him from his enemies, and sustained soul and body, giving him strength, deliberation and impressiveness in his testimony for Christ in the Diet at Worms.

What God is doing by his struggling, praying children, in the great work of purifying the church and nation from the fearful, threatening corruptions that are sapping their life blood, wholly eclipses the dying scenes. God is doing wonders indeed. The enemy is fearfully mighty; the friends of God like a little flock of kids; their implements but a sling and small stones from the brook. Yet the Goliath trembles before them. Should we have God's manifestation while living, acting with others, to see one monster Goliath iniquity slain, it would fill a dying hour with floods of ineffable glory, and heaven itself with hallelujahs of praise.

Brother Bissell, I think Christians should value more and toil and pray and believe more for the wonderful displays of God's power, here and now, in this earth made terrible by sin, in mighty works of triumphant grace, in victories over huge systems of heaven-defying iniquity, than for the triumphs of the dying hour. The one implies the other and more. It is a living power that all men can see. It stops the mouths of infidelity, assures the doubting, strengthens the halting, and gives invincible power to the faithful, struggling children of God. For this should we all have a united aim, and the blessed, yea, glorious results in due time will astonish us all.

I am happy, from long years acquaintance, to know that you are not a stranger to these most precious truths; that according to the measure of grace given to you, you are acting upon them as the controlling principle of your life. You inquire about the Cynosure. I will request the editor to send you one copy, as mine as fast as read are given to ministers and others just awakening to the importance of the truths they contain. But I will say, and your long and friendly acquaintance enables you to put a right estimation upon my judgment, that the Cynosure is the most vigorous and efficient exponent of the principles that are to purify and preserve the church and the world that is published on this globe. Take it and see. You need not send the money to me, but send a post-office order or bank draft of $1.50 to Ezra A. Cook, No. 13 Wabash avenue, Chicago, Illinois, with your address and request for the Cynosure, and you will receive it.

You ask my views of the second advent. Jesus is our teacher. Matthew 24: 42-51 contain all that is important. The wise and faithful servant was wholly engaged in the duties of this life-giving "meat to the household in due season." So Jesus would have us wholly engrossed in the "work of purifying and preserving the church and the world. This is spiritual food. Then we are prepared for his second coming. His real presence is here now in power with his struggling, believing people. Of the time of his visible presence none know. Many speculate; none can point you to the time. If they could they would. The times and seasons God has kept in his own power. The blessedness of the real presence of Jesus in life's battle as the captain of our salvation is of infinitely more importance to us than the time of his visible appearing. All that makes heaven rich and glorious to us, is secured to us through the real presence of Jesus with us, enabling us to do faithfully daily duty, and make great achievments in Christian work. Jesus said all he could to make this impression on our minds, everywhere teaching that his visible presence would take the world on a surprise. Let us be the faithful servants, not watching the clouds, but acting vigorously up to our best light in the spiritual battle on earth, and in his own good time he will appear and then our joy will be complete.

Your affectionate brother,

WM. W. BLANCHARD.

Reform News.

From the Secretary and Agent.

VINELAND, N. J., Feb. 20, '79.

DEAR K:—I have just completed the business for which I came to this place, satisfactorily to all parties interested and have one hour before my train for Philadelphia arrives.

The devil has not been idle in this place, but as is his wont has been stirring up strife among the brethren. The Baptist church has recently been convulsed by the introduction of vain shows by its pastor and others into the sanctuary, and thirty or forty of the more spiritually minded now worship in a hired hall.

Bro. Myers has been very low, but has now partially recovered, contrary to his own and the expectation of his friends. A council of doctors said he could not live, but the Great Physician interposed and raised him up from the very brink of the grave. Bro. Myers had a most gracious and heavenly experience and being filled with the Spirit there were no clouds to obscure the visions of the heavenly land. His children and relatives gathered around him, and as a careful and judicious man he arranged his business and disposed of his estate in such manner as he wished, and as is satisfactory to all parties in interest. Bro. Myers now hopes to visit Chicago in April next as he has interests in the West which, should he be spared, would require his personal attention.

I learn from the executor of the will of Rev. Bro. Wilbur that the conditions of the will are such that we may expect to receive at some indefinite time in the future $3,000 or more for our reform work.

I go to New York city, thence, to Adrian, Michigan, to the State Convention. I hope to reach Adrian by Saturday afternoon.

J. P. STODDARD.

Connecticut, Respond Heartily!

WEATOGUE, Conn., Feb. 18, '79.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I wish to say to the friends of reform in Connecticut that Bro. Hinman has been doing noble work for the cause of truth and righteousness in our State this winter, for which as yet he has been but poorly paid. He is a faithful servant for the Master and has sown the seed of truth which will bring forth fruit in years to come. He has done pioneer work as has never been done before. New friends have been found and new recruits to the army of reform. Some of the fortifications of the enemy have been attacked and very much weakened by the shots of truth from his battery.

This warfare should be kept up and no rest given the enemy until he is vanquished and driven from the field. To do this it needs constant agitation. If every Antimason would do his duty Freemasonry would soon be an institution of the past. I am aware that the friends of the cause, with few exceptions, are in moderate circumstances as to this world's goods, but if each will contribute a small sum, Bro. Hinman can be paid. The collections at all of the meetings I understand have been very small, barely enough to meet daily expenses. Will the friends where he has lectured take it upon themselves to collect what they can and send to him.

And those living in places where he has not been, you should not feel that your help is not needed, or that you can wait until the work is done in your own locality. What has been done will have its effect all over the State and has opened the way for future work. I shall feel disappointed if the friends whom I have met this winter do not respond and reward Bro. H. for his devoted services.

Many no doubt will be glad to hear him again, but we must first pay him for what he has done. Do not be afraid that you may over pay him, he is an honest man and will give faithful service for all money received. P. BACON.

TRAIN WORK.

SEEMLY, Ill.

Taking the cars at Hoopestown for Paxton, I gave out a number of Ronayne tracts. The brakesman tore one into pieces and viciously threw the bits into the wood-box, but a Mr. Marshall from Peoria was glad to meet with the tracts. I gave him a number to distribute in his own neighborhood. At Paxton I took supper at a restaurant. The proprietor, Mr. Martin, proved himself to be a perfect gentleman, and when I was rudely assaulted by some man with language and words of the most abusive character, he escorted my assailant to the door. I had distributed a number of Ronayne's tracts, for which fault my assailant said I ought to be skinned from my head to my heels!

The lodge defenders (of whom there were several to back up my assailant) laid great stress on the good man argument, reference being specially had to the M. E. presiding elder Buck and Rev. Mr. Musgrove, also Methodist, both Masons. The Masons regard themselves as strongly entrenched behind such preachers, and it is a matter of necessity now, in order that we may "move upon the enemies works," that this their "last ditch" or hiding place be taken away. The question is, How shall it be accomplished? This can be accomplished to a great extent by argument and reasoning with these ministers and if these fail, then withdraw all support and countenance.

Christmas I was at the pleasant little village of Philo. The Masons were intending to have had a big time at a Masonic supper at the hotel that night, but their peace was greatly disturbed by the Ronayne tracts that I scattered all over the town. There were a number of excited groups at the various stores discussing the lodge question. Ronayne's tracts are just the thing to awaken the people and the honest ones of the craft. What added to the intense interest of some of these discussions, the lodge had been watched by outsiders, on two or three occasions at least one gentleman and two ladies had been the outside tylers and watchers. Every one at Philo has, or can, hear their story if they wish to. It was amusing to hear, as I did, a Mason cross-questioning this man that did the watching. Said the Mason, "What did you see in there?" "Well," said he, "I saw four men hold of a blanket, one at each corner, the candidate hoodwinked and cable-towed, and you fellows leading him about the room."

I did not learn the name of this watcher or tyler. When the lodge was in session they would blow out the lights, watch, study and learn Masonic trickery, antics and tactics.

Lodgemen say everywhere that seceders are not to be believed, and that, too, right in the face of the fact that every material fact is fully established by respectable outsiders who have witnessed by both hearing and seeing nearly or quite the entire performances. I know of two credible witnesses, besides the three at Philo, who witnessed from the outside the Masonic initiations. The account of the witnessing and seeing of a Masonic initiation at Milford has been published in the Cynosure. The man had every advantage to see and hear. He is a good man (I know him well). His statements are not to be gainsaid. Also the lodge in Ash Grove was watched by a member of the M. E. church, the particulars of which I am under obligations to not publish for the present, as this gentleman is on his death-bed, and can live but a short time. By his personal request his statements are withheld for the present.

Let us press the battle to the gates. The dark lines of secretism are already falling back.

J. S. HICKMAN.

CREDIT TO WHOM CREDIT IS DUE.

The Episcopal church, whose worldly motto is the media via, that is the middle way between extremes, has been accused of forgetting her motto quite, in going after the false though popular gods of Freemasonry; but she has recently made an effort toward righting herself.

Every one has heard of the Oneida Community. It is almost worse than Freemasonry. It is nothing short of Freemasonry of the most "perfect and sublime degree." It originated in Putney, Vermont, at a time when Freemasonry, pure and simple, was prohibited there, both by law and the voice of the people. The Community left Putney for some reason or other; and since then Putney has become not only the seat of a rancid lodge of Freemasonry, but it is a kind of Masonic shire town for Windham county.

Putney is on the Connecticut River; and Bishop Huntington, of central New York, was born and reared on the banks of that river; though ower down in Massachusetts. Oneida, the present seat of the Putney Lodge of Perfection, is in the Bishop's diocese; and he has at last ventured to call the attention of his flock to this wolf's den. A movement has been made which may probably result in a repetition of the exploit of Gen. Putnam: the den may be entered by a sound state of public sentiment, and the wolves destroyed or driven out.

We do not regard the step, in itself, as one of much importance; for the Oneida community is not greatly worse than any other Masonic lodge; but as a step which may lead the Episcopal church to separate itself from Freemasonry, it appears to us a step of the greatest possible consequence; and one that does Bishop Huntington and his flock great honor as truly religious men.

It would be a singular and notable fact, and at the same time an exceedingly gratifying one, if a Christian church should succeed in clearing itself of the Oneida community in that very region of country where a combined attempt of the church and politics against Freemasonry has seemingly utterly failed. The Episcopal church is not much given to revivals; but this movement against the Oneida community is a revival indeed; a practical, real revival, one which, if carried out in law, judgment and mercy, will justly demand the grateful acknowledgments of the entire Christian community.

EPISCOPALIAN.

FROM THE "LIBERTY SINGER."

[A letter from that friend of music and reform, Geo. W. Clark, of Dansville, N. Y., informs us that his new collection of reform songs is nearly ready for the press. He writes further:]

This place, like many others, is ridden down to the bones by secret societies, and some who do not wear the saddle stand in fear of the "old hag" and dare not have the Cynosure in their offices, or be seen with it in their possession for fear it will injure their business or their standing in the community! And yet, I venture not one in fifty of the population have been drawn into the lodge meshes. Such is the power these secret orders exert over a class of the uninitiated! If those only are free whom the "Truth makes free," there are many slaves to be emancipated yet! There is great need of hard work—of ten times ten thousand Cynosures, and Past Master Ronaynes, to dispel the darkness and break up the power of these moral cancers that together with their allies, liquor and tobacco, are eating out the vitals of the nation.

Not many days ago not many miles away, an old liquor-dealer and liquor soak, a profane and vulgar creature, but a good Mason, died and was buried by the order. Among those taking part in the ceremonies were some professed Christian ministers flaunting their pagan mummeries before a Christian people, and sending such a subject to the Grand Lodge above! O tempora! O mores! G. W. C.

OUR MAIL.

Benj. M. Spaulding, Albany, Vt., writes:

"I have been an Anti-mason since one month before Morgan's murder, and do not vote for a Freemason for any judicial or executive office, believing that the obligations of Freemasonry disqualify any man for the administration of impartial justice."

James B. Dawlin, Silver City, Idaho Ter., writes:

"There are a great many cattle raised in this country. Many are driven from here up the Snake River to Chicago. We have the great Snake River valley for hundreds of miles on both sides of the river. There is a small white sage, growing short and thick, on which the cattle feed during winter. In the spring we drive them upon the hills, where they feed on fine bunch grass and get very fat. So you see they get their own living. All we have to do is to brand and mark our calves every summer. If any butcher or drover should want to know anything about this country, the price of stock cattle or beef cattle, if they will write to me I will give them information at any time."

Joseph Day, Markesan, Wis., writes:

"There are not many Masons here or much interest in the Anti-masonic cause. We lack information on the subject and need a course of lectures. Can we get them some time this next summer? We are well-to-do farmers. Have a good church, and a lecture would be well received and supported."

Mrs. S. McConoughey, Atkinson, Ill., writes:

"When the Word of God is taken as our rule of life peace and prosperity will prevail."

L. S. Whiting, Springwater, N. Y., writes:

"I think there is great need of work being done here in opposition to secrecy. There are quite a large number of Masons in this section. They made a great show at a funeral one week ago last Sabbath. The corpse was kept over a week so as to bury it with Masonic honors. The Bible was carried through the streets by one of the lowest men in our town. We feel it a disgrace to the Bible and religion."

Ed. Keig, Rockford, Ill., writes:

"I intend to canvass for the Cynosure though it may get me enemies. I believe in exposing sin, for Christ has said, whatever makes manifest is light. The people must be enlightened."

Jno. Ball, Rockford, Ia., writes:

"I hope to be able to leave home and make an effort to assist in raising the 10,000 subscriptions for the Cynosure; to spread light in the midst of darkness. I am with you in spirit in this reform, and trust to show it in practical efforts."

Sidney Wilder, Arcadia, N. Y., writes:

"I hope and labor that the host of secret organizations in our land may be overthrown, and that the time may soon come when all Christians and all honorable men may feel it beneath their dignity and self-respect to be cable-towed and hood-winked, and shut up in secret conclave under the pretense of accomplishing some great and good work, which can be accomplished a thousand times better without any secrecy."

J. W. Boulden, Durham, Ont., writes:

"I heard of this anti-secrecy work by accident from a brother who is posted; and he tells me that he learned of your reform while on a visit to some of his friends this winter."

Miss Ruia R. Wilcox, Aurora, Ill., writes:

"Our ministers, as a general thing, would not go to hear an anti-secret lecture, but would prefer a Red Ribbon fol-de-rol gathering."

A. H. Springstein, Caro, Mich., writes:

"I lectured in a hall five miles from Caro twice this week. The first night I talked two and a half hours, and the second night three hours. It seems to have accomplished wonders. The people here never heard secretism exposed before."

S. H. Spencer, Cortland, O., writes:

"There are a great many men in our place who fully believe in the sentiments of your paper."

H. H. Hinman, Bristol, Conn., writes:

"I have had good and profitable meetings here, and while there is much that is trying, there is much that is hopeful. I go from here to Westogue."

Susannah G. Reed, North Hannibal, N. Y., writes:

"I should like to add some new names to your list, but a person eighty-four years old must submit to Providence, and let the younger people labor. I did what I could after the Morgan tragedy, which is fresh in my memory, having had acquaintance with Miller, and heard him relate all the facts."

Mrs. L. Trask, Worcester, Mass., writes:

"I spent the last summer in Michigan. I heard and read much of the institution of Freemasonry and its allied forces. Having never had any confidence in it as an institution for good, the more I have read and studied it the more I am convinced that it is evil and only evil. I have read the Cynosure with interest."

G. Trott, Summerfield, O., writes:

"I like the Cynosure's bold attacks on the dark orders with all other wickedness. I know God will give the victory. Masonry is no stronger in public opinion than slavery was, but when its cup was full how quickly God destroyed it. The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! Hallelujah!"

Enos Mitchell, Pittson, Me., writes:

"If there is a place on earth where Freemasonry abounds to a greater extent than in Gardiner and Pittston, Me., I do not know where it is. All of the Methodist ministers belong to the order. One has been led in this winter. I believe Masonic ministers, more than any other instrumentality, are used of the devil to draw men into the lodge and keep them out of the church. I do not know as I shall find one in this place with courage enough to take the Cynosure. They seem to fear the lodge men. * * The people here need a good lecturer to wake them up. If they could see the three degrees worked it might start the big wheel. * * I believe the cause is God's and it will prosper."

Rev. Halleck Floyd, Dublin, Ind., writes:

"The Cynosure is doing a noble work in moulding public sentiment in one of the most important reformations of the world's history. I hail its issue with delight, because of its Christian spirit. Every minister in the United Brethren church ought to have this weapon in his hand as a defense of the anti-secrecy principles of the denomination. I close by saying I cannot afford to do without the Cynosure."

Thos. Gilmore, Rix's Mills, O., writes:

"It grieves me to think that so many professed friends of our reform will not do anything to advance the interests of the cause. But let us hope that when the stringency of the times shall have somewhat passed away, we shall see a better state of things—men's hearts and purses alike opening to the demands of a cause whose importance can scarcely be estimated.

"In view of the Grand Lodge of France resolving to expunge from the list of qualifications for membership in their lodges, the belief in a Supreme Being, and the resolution of the English and American lodges not to fellowship them any more until they rescind their obnoxious action, what becomes of the much boasted unity of Freemasonry, as for instance set forth in these pompous lines:

> 'Hail mysterious, glorious science!
> Hail mysterious, glorious science!
> Which to discord bids defiance;
> Which to discord bids defiance;
> Harmony alone reigns here.'

"Go on, then, dear Cynosure, in the cause of truth and righteousness, sustained by a firm hope in Him who is your advocate, until the last den of iniquity is opened up to the light of truth; and the abominable system of secrecy and wrong, like their originator, Satan, are shut up in the bottomless pit, and a seal set upon them, that they shall deceive the nations no more until the thousand years shall be fulfilled."

——

[NOTE.—All Councils working under this ritual agree to do so on the following conditions: All initiation fees, which are not to be less than twenty-five cents each, to be set apart as a subscription for the Good Templar. When a Council is organized, the fees to be sent to the editor of the Templar, who will furnish the paper for three months at the rate of ten cents per copy, either to the Secretary or to a person designated. At the close of each quarter of the subordinate lodge, a report to be sent to the editor of the number of members, with the initiation fees of members initiated since last report, when the Templar will be sent as heretofore. On the first of January and July the editor will furnish to the Secretary of each Council a list of the Councils in the State, with number of members. Accompanying it will be sent the annual password for the ensuing six months.

On application of seven degree members, accompanied with one dollar, a set of books will be sent with the necessary information as to organizing a Council.]

EXPLANATION OF THE COUNCIL DEGREE.

This degree was devised by a Mason and Odd-fellow, B. H. Mills, editor of the Good Templar. By the Constitution (See note at the bottom) all fees for initiation must "be sent to the editor of the Templar who will furnish the paper for three months at ten cents per copy." Whoever reads the degree will see, at once, that the whole structure and most of the terms and ideas are Masonic. Thus this cheap and wicked contrivance constitutes another training school for Masonry, and another experiment on the credulity and superstition of mankind. Its name of "Council Degree," is taken from two "side" or spurious degrees in Masonry of which Mackey says in his Ritualist, (p. 106): "Forty years ago * * the degrees were here, but few knew whence they came from, or by whom they had been introduced." And Cornelius Moore (Voice of Masonry, Feb., 1879, Art. Parasite Degrees) after Mackey, says the two "Council Degrees" were conferred at $5.00 per head, by "one John Barker" who suddenly appeared in Cincinnati, Ohio, some forty or fifty years ago. Moore continues, "Barker did a large business. And after he had received all the five dollar bills accessible, he organized his converts (dupes) into a Council; gave them some kind of authority to work, and then proceeded to other fields of labor and 'pastures green.'" Such is the origin of the name of this "Council Degree."

The title of "Knights Templar" given to the initiates is taken from an order which proved the reproach and curse of society even in the Dark Ages; to which the contriver has the ignorance or hardihood to refer (see p. —). Those "Sir Knights" of the Middle Ages, referred to in this ritual, history informs us became military tramps, vagabonds and pests; were abated by law as nuisances; and their expiring remnants annihilated by the ridicule of Cervantes in his Don Quixote. Yet it seems that this mongrel contrivance of swindling and superstition has spread in several States. By Article I. of its Constitution we learn that this is a fourth and upper degree of Good Templarism, and that candidates must be members of a subordinate lodge; over seventeen years of age; and must have been officers in lower lodges, in order to become Knights Templar. The women and girls in Good Templar lodges are not excepted by the Constitution; all who have been officers, and who are over seventeen years of age, may pay their quarter dollar and be dubbed "Sir Knights!" And men were found to act as chaplains and mock God by prayers in such secret night leagues where the holy name of temperance was little more than a bait, to unsex women and girls in prairie villages; to turn their heads by Masonic raps and passwords and circumambulations; and though it is to be hoped few or none would accept the privilege of becoming Amazons with male titles, no thanks are due to this vile constitution if they did not. And we are informed by a good man who had been drawn in with the hope of benefitting his sons, and who as second officer, attended four Grand Lodge meetings in his State, that the worst roughs of the village were often elected chaplains for a joke, and that late hours, strange intimacies and false religion had their wonted, known and universal effect, in producing Baal Peorism, fornication, forced marriages and illegitimate children, where abortion and infanticide did not prevent.

The mystery of all these modern mysteries, is how men of acknowledged piety and goodness, men like Theodore Cuyler of New York, can join and uphold such by-plays of hell! Orders forbidden by both the precept and example of Jesus Christ, whom they preach, profess and trust! Who "in secret said nothing;" who forbade secret teaching to his disciples, and consequently would have broken up or made the lodge a silent meeting if he had joined one. The "stars" in the Apocalypse were the ministers of the churches, and John in vision saw a time when the dragon, who is the god of all false worships, drew a third part of the stars from heaven. (Rev. 12: 4) Are these those days of blinding, bewildering vengeance? and is this long retinue of secret orders the "tail," or following thing of "that old serpent which is the devil and Satan," who first charms good men as snakes charm birds, by the glitter of his eye and glare of his colors, and then drags them from their orbits in the church, to "put light for darkness, and darkness for light?" If so, may God in mercy cut short these days, for "Except the days be shortened," we read, "no flesh shall be saved." But the days will be shortened and light and truth triumph.

INSTALLATION CEREMONIES—SUBORDINATE LODGE.

[The proper installing officer is the Grand Worthy Chief Templar, (or in his absence, a Deputy Grand Worthy Chief Templar). When the lodge is ready for installation, the Grand Worthy Chief Templar will quietly appoint a Grand Worthy Secretary and a Grand Worthy Marshal, and retire to the ante-room.]

Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Marshal, our lodge is duly prepared for the installation of its officers, and the Grand Worthy Chief Templar is in waiting in our ante-room to install them. You will now retire and introduce him, with such representatives of the officers of the Grand Lodge as may accompany him.

[Worthy Marshal retires and introduces the officers.]

Worthy Chief Templar (three raps, all rise.)

Worthy Marshal. Worthy Chief Templar, I have the honor and pleasure of presenting to you the Grand Worthy Chief Templar, who is here for the purpose of installing the officers of this lodge. He also brings with him these brothers (and sisters), whom he has selected to represent the Grand Lodge.

[All give the salutation except in public installations.]

Worthy Chief Templar. It is with pleasure that I welcome you within our lodge. Our officers are elected and waiting to be installed. It will be our pleasant duty to assist you in any manner you may require.

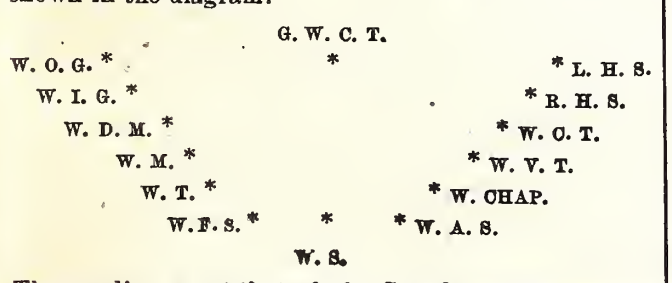
Grand Worthy Chief Templar. It is a source of gratification to us to find a lodge ready for our services. You will now give us, as representatives of the Grand Lodge, a place with you, and we will proceed with the installation ceremonies.

Worthy Chief Templar (one rap, all but officers seated.)

[The Worthy Chief Templer and Worthy Secretary now step forward and conduct the officers to seats. The Worthy Chief Templar takes the Grand Worthy Chief Templar, the Worthy Secretary the Grand Worthy Secretary and the Worthy Marshal the Grand Worthy Marshal each to their respective stations. The Worthy Chief Templar then steps in front of the Grand Worthy Chief Templar, who says:]

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. You have now closed your term as Worthy Chief Templar of this lodge. There are certain laws that must be observed before I am permitted to proceed, and in order to know that you have complied with them, I will ask the usual questions.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Have the officers elect been chosen in accordance with the laws, and have the required bonds been given and approved?



Worthy Chief Templar. They have.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Have the quarterly returns been made out, and, with the per centage, placed in the hands of the proper officer?

Worthy Chief Templar. They have.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. It is with pleasure that we receive your report, and, with the same feeling. I will now proceed with the installation, as soon as the names of the appointed officers are reported to the Grand Worthy Secretary. The labors of your office are ended, yet your experience prepares you for still further usefulness, and the lodge cannot now dispense with your services. You will therefore take your seat (if re-elected, say "among the members,") as Past Worthy Chief Templar of this lodge for the ensuing term.

[A full list of the officers elect, with blank spaces ready to fill in the names of the appointed officers, should be on the desk of the Grand Worthy Secretary, and, while the appointments are being made by the officers elect, the Grand Worthy Marshal will arrange seats in front of the Grand Worthy Chief Templar, as shown in the diagram:

The regalia, except that of the Guards and Supporters, will be left at the chairs of the officers.]

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. (Rising.) My brothers and sisters, you have been elected to take charge of this lodge for the ensuing quarter. It is no common mark of favor which has thus been bestowed upon you. I feel confident that it has been worthily bestowed, and that diligence in the discharge of all your duties, together with courteous demeanor, will raise you still higher in the estimation of your associates. In rising to the position of officers of this lodge, you have done well; but if you rise in the discharge of your duties you will do better.

Please sing our Installation Ode.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar (three raps, all rise.)

INSTALLATION ODE.

AIR—"Auld Lang Syne."

Whatever station we may fill
In this exalted band,
Our plighted duties we shall still
Achieve, with heart and hand;
And evermore, through good and ill,
By one another stand—
Whatever station we may fill
In this exalted band.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. The officers will now assume the Good Templar attitude for receiving the

OBLIGATION.

You, and each of you, do solemnly promise, upon your sacred honor, that you will faithfully discharge all the duties devolving upon you as officers of this lodge, in strict accordance with the laws, rules and usages of the order, the Constitution and By-Laws of the Grand Lodge and of this lodge.

Officers respond. We will.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Brothers and sisters you have just heard the obligation taken voluntarily by your officers.

Members respond. We are witnesses.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar (one rap, all seated.)

[Officers rise as they are addressed.]

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Guards, your duties require you to take charge of the doors of our lodge: see to it that no unworthy persons are admitted, and that our opening, initiatory and closing ceremonies are not disturbed. Our Grand Worthy Marshal will clothe you in regalia, and conduct you to your stations. You will relieve the present Guards, and immediately enter upon the discharge of your duties.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Marshal and Worthy Deputy Marshal, you will see that all who enter here without passing the Guards are qualified to remain; you will have charge of the regalia and odes, and will see that they are properly distributed at the opening and collected at the close of each meeting, conduct the candidates at their initiation and introduce visitors. Follow our Grand Worthy Marshal, and he will conduct you to your places in the lodge, and clothe you with your regalia.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Financial Secretary and Worthy Treasurer, the financial affairs of this lodge are now placed in your hands: see to it that no injustice or wrong is done to the lodge or any of its members, or to yourselves. The Worthy Financial Secretary will, at the close of each meeting, pay all receipts to the Worthy Treasurer and the Worthy Treasurer will keep the same subject to the order of the lodge. You will now be conducted to your stations by our Grand Worthy Marshal, and enter upon the discharge of your duties. Let your fidelity be apparent, and a good conscience your reward.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Secretary and Worthy Assistant Secretary, the records of this lodge are now about to be placed in your keeping, and upon the precision, punctuality and ability of the Worthy Secretary, the prosperity and harmony of the lodge in a great measure depend. A good Secretary is always at his post. Without prompt action on your part, the Worthy Chief Templar cannot successfully conduct the affairs of this lodge. You have accepted an arduous place, but we feel confident that you have taken it with a determination to perform its duties faithfully. So do, and you will merit and receive the thanks of this lodge and of the Grand Lodge. The Grand Worthy Marshal will now conduct you to your place by the side of the Grand Worthy Secretary and clothe you with regalia.

Grand Worthy Chief Templar. Worthy Chaplain, it is your privilege to invoke the divine favor and blessings, without which we labor in vain. Endeavor so to conduct the devotional exercises of this lodge, that they may be beneficial to the members and acceptable to our Heavenly Father. The Grand Worthy Marshal will now conduct you to your place in the lodge.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, FEB. 27, 1879.

THE OHIO STATE MEETING to be held during the first week in March at Utica, Licking county, promises to be a convention of much importance to the reform work in that State. President McClurkin desires it to be reiterated that "all who expect to attend and take part in the proceedings by speaking, hearing and voting, whether appointed as delegates or not, should forward their names to Mr. J. M. Kirkpatrick, of Utica, of the entertainment committee. "Let congregations, and anti-secret associations appoint delegates, so far as this can be done; but do not let any friend be backward about sending on his or her name and coming, because there are none in his or her neighborhood to appoint delegates. All true friends are wanted there. Come all who can. Speakers are engaged—we want hearers and voters."

THE UNITED BRETHREN.—I fear there are troubles in the path of this excellent church. A bishop of this denomination writes to the Monthly Itinerant, a weak article, in which he expresses no opinion of that paper but hints that "there are ever so many preachers in the same region" of non-committalism with himself. We have received for notice, a book written by this bishop against "Universal Restoration," and, of course in favor of future endless punishment of the wicked. If this brother could see how his article, written to encourage and concentrate rebellion against the testimony of his church which he is bound by every sentiment of honor and decency either to uphold or honestly to oppose as wrong strikes us he would feel mortified for himself, as we do for him. An equivocal, non-committal course in a holy office like his will make a thousand Universalists, where his arguments will convince one. The Itinerant is a small monthly, started in the interest of the lodge, and against the testimony of the church of which he is bishop.

Read how this paper speaks of his patronage:

"BISHOP WEAVER. Of course all our readers will read with delight Bishop Weaver's article on the Monthly Itinerant, found on our first page. It's just like him. Full of pith and abounding in happy hits. Coming from the Bishop without any solicitation on our part it took us completely by surprise. We tender him our thanks for his kind remembrance of the Itinerant, and ask him to do so again."

NATIONAL PROHIBITION. — The last letter we received from Samuel French, Esq., whose sudden death, Jan. 28th, has been noticed, was to introduce a petition to Congress for national legislation against the liquor traffic. Mr. Chapin engaged in the war on intemperance as on the lodge, with a reformer's zeal and faith. The petition, which is appended, he procured through the agency of a temperance lawyer of Boston, and had the satisfaction of knowing that it received general favor in central Illinois, and men, women and children even gave their names with enthusiasm.

In his letter he refers to the struggle with the lodge foe and says that the next work must be the prohibition of the extra-judicial oaths of Freemasonry. "I felt like flying," he writes, "to go to our meetings at Worcester and Wheaton, but business was such that I could not. I feel more and more interest in the cause; I know that it will win because God is on our side." Read, sign and forward this petition to a responsible member of Congress:

WHEREAS, it is conceded that intemperance is a most prolific source of misery, poverty and crime, and that the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is a source from which intemperance is fed;

WHEREAS, without the supply is stopped, intemperance cannot be suppressed or even satisfactorily regulated throughout the country;

WHEREAS, the manufacture of intoxicants creates a demand for the same by the ordinary processes of business, the cravings of depraved appetites, and the constant accession of moderate drinkers, made by the social surroundings of the bar-room;

WHEREAS, the statute regulations of the various States of the Union render the regulations of each State upon this question to a great degree inoperative, by furnishing an unlimited supply of liquors to be sold as a beverage in States prohibiting the sale of the same; and,

WHEREAS, as long as the manufacture of liquors, to be used as a beverage, is under the sanction of the United States Government, intemperance can never be more than temporarily checked: Therefore, we, citizens of the United States, respectfully petition the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to enact a statute which shall prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, throughout the United States.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF A BAPTIST MINISTER.

The dastardly attempt to murder the Rev. Joel H. Austin, related in this number of the Cynosure will startle, but not surprise our readers. A beloved Free Methodist brother, referring lately to some similar acts, said, "There is nothing under the skies too mean for them to do." The first evening anti-slavery lecture which I delivered in Harrisburgh, Pa., forty-two years ago, was in the house of worship of The Church of God, (Winebrennarian.) On proceeding to the lecture, a stone intended for myself cut through the sleeves of coat and overcoat of Jonathan Young, a young mechanic, who knowing my danger, as I did not, nobly volunteered, though an entire stranger, to walk by my side. A deep gash was cut in his arm. Afterward, in Mercersburgh, Pa., a mob followed me from the M. E. church, where I had quietly listened to a sermon, and as I passed into a front parlor where the windows were open, (it was summer) a stone came in through the window from the crowd, passed by me, and broke in the lath, and lodged in the plastering on the other side of the room. I had delivered no lectures in the town. Now, all are abolitionists in the sense that I was. Will Dr. Whiting, late pastor of the Baptist Church, Quincy, and his compeers, the pastors of Galesburg and other leading Baptist churches, look on in silence while their brother Austin, whom their ex-parte council condemned unheard and unsummoned to answer, is murdered before their eyes, while they keep the garments of those who, unlike Stephen's murderers, seek to stone him to death in the dark! This Dr. Whiting wrote Mr. Kellogg asking him to print the letters assailing Mr, Austin, which were read before their ex-parte council (letters like those listened to by Dr. E. P. Goodwin and the ex-parte council in Wheaton against myself) which were gathered up without the legal notice for cross-questioning by the party assailed; and which were therefore slanders, every line of them, in law and in fact. And yet he had hardihood to ask the Cynosure to publish them! I have no words of my own to characterize such conduct. I therefore give the words of God's prophet to church leaders who had been debauched by the strange worships which destroyed the chosen people of God, and made their garden land a desert: "Woe to her that is filthy and polluted; to the oppressing city. * * Her prophets are light and treacherous persons; her priests have polluted the sanctuary: they have done violence to the law. * * * The unjust knoweth no shame." (Zephaniah, 3: 1, 4, 5.)

I do not know how many of the persons concerned in these ex-parte council outrages are Masons, but I know that they all "fellowship the unfruitful works of darkness;" and that the leaders Baptist and Congregationalist, while knowing the infamies of the lodge, never utter a pulpit testimony to save the men who support them from being sworn and swindled into them. And just so truly as God's word is not obsolete, a most fearful reckoning awaits them both in this world and the next.

COLONIZATION OF COLORED PEOPLE.

A late Cynosure noticed Senator Windom's speech for colonizing the colored people of the South in the western territories, particularly in Utah. His argument was that they might have protection and suppress the Mormons. We see also that a convention of colored people to consider the subject is called to meet in Nashville, May 6, next.

Ever since slavery began to agitate the country by its rapid growth the colonization of colored people has been agitated with no apparent benefit to that class of population, but much real injury. The only colonies which prosper are those where the colonists went forth self-prompted, to benefit their condition or to carry out their principles. But for people of various complexions called white, to start a colonization scheme to remove a population called black, is really an effront to the race which it is proposed to remove. If they are too weak to colonize themselves, they are incompetent to make and maintain a prosperous community. Besides all such agitations keep up the prejudice against color and aggravate the evils proposed to be removed. What proof has Senator Windom that Mormons would treat the negroes better than the ex-slaveholders do; or that the negroes would not themselves be proselyted to Mormonism? Christian industry and education are the only salvation for black people or white, and a just government will protect them in one place as well as another.

THE ANTI-CHINESE BILL.

This law which passed the Senate February 15th inst. by a majority of twelve votes (39 to 27) forbids the importation of more than fifteen Chinese on any one United States ship at one time, under penalty of $100 fine for each Chinaman or woman in excess of the permitted fifteen, and six months imprisonment. Efforts are being made in California by those hostile to Chinese immigration to induce President Hayes to sign the bill, and notify the government of China of a modification of the Burlingame treaty.

The effect of this law and the agitation connected with it will be to keep up friction between the two races of people. But it will, beyond this, have very little practical effect. While the slave-trade was piracy and punishable by hanging by United States law, cargo after cargo of fresh negroes were smuggled into the States through the bayous of Florida to stock Southern plantations, and nothing but destroying slavery destroyed the importation of slaves.

If the government of the United States were thoroughly Christian, negroes, Indians and Chinese could be Christianized and Americanized with a moiety of the trouble and expense of wronging, fighting or excluding them. "Righteousness exalteth a nation," but sin not only reproaches, but tends to the destruction of any people.

BEQUEST TO THE CYNOSURE—DEATH OF MR. JOHN VIALL.

This beloved and revered saint died at his home in Buffalo county, near Kearney, Nebraska, on Sabbath evening, Feb. 9th, 1879. He had removed from Illinois to Nebraska, to secure and open a farm for a step-son, his last act crowning a life devoted to the good of others. He has died in "a good old age" and "as a shock of corn, fully ripe, coming in in its season." During the long agony of the slave-struggle, Mr. Viall stood firm by the truth which has triumphed in the overthrow of that system of bondage and blood; and with great simplicity and beauty of Christian firmness and gentleness blended, he has stood up for Christ's atonement against the counterfeit and spurious salvations held up by the lodge, as lures and deceptions to attract unthinking and deluded men into its coils. He gave freely of his means to the National Christian Association. He paid several hundred dollars to extinguish the indebtedness of Wheaton College, and about a week before he died, he dictated and signed with his hand the letter from which extracts are given below, and which explains itself.

"J. Blanchard, Wheaton, Ill.

MY DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I feel that I shall soon depart this transitory life and be with my Lord and Saviour. Before going hence I desire to hold a short communion with you, my brother. May the Lord give you strength and grace to carry on the good work that you have been so long and faithfully engaged in.

"In contemplation of a speedy dissolution of this frail and mortal body, I thought I ought to do something according to my limited means to aid this noble cause. Reposing the utmost confidence in you, my brother, I have endorsed to you well secured notes amounting to $1068 and made to you a deed of some lots in San Jose, Mason county, Illinois; the notes and deed in trust, for our well-beloved paper, the Christian Cynosure, published in Chicago, Illinois. * * * I know that you will see that the money is appropriated to the purpose indicated by me above, to wit., the dissemination of truth through the Christian Cynosure. And now, in conclusion, I pray that the God of peace, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, be with you and sustain and bless you. And if it be the Lord's will that I be taken hence speedily, farewell my dear brother in Christ, until we meet around God's throne in heaven.

"Your very affectionate brother in Christ, JOHN VIALL."

He died eight days after dictating the above letter from the land of Beulah on the banks of Jordan. I have requested his friend Mr. Roswell D. Gould to furnish a brief sketch of his life for the Cynosure.

A VOICE FROM LONG ISLAND.

In January, 1872, seven years ago, the ladies of New Bedford, Mass., held the anniversary of their Missionary Society, and invited the resident clergymen, Rev. T. C. Jerome and Dr. A. H. Quint, to address them. Mr. Jerome's speech was printed at length in the New Bedford Republican, and among other good things worthy the occasion, said: "Masonry is not free, and we have an odd rather than an even fellowship, where half the world is certainly shut out. Are the women not worthy such societies, or are such societies unworthy of them."

Dr. Quint had a written speech but dropped it to take up a cudgel against his ministerial brother in defense of Freemasonry; in the course of his remarks saying, "He was proud of being the Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Masons, and anybody who don't like it can't help himself." This boastful speech deserves repetition only because of the prominence of the speaker in the National Congregational Council.

Let members of that denomination compare it with the memorable words of Prof. Moses Stuart of Andover, Massachusetts, who wrote about forty-five years ago:

"For a long time I neither knew or cared about the subject (Masonry); but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to some things contained in it, with horror. The trifling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever-blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress."

Or contrast that speech with the still more earnest words of President Finney, himself a reformed Mason:

"We have, then, the implied testimony, of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully, but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

Can any sincere Christian in these churches read with indifference the record of their former and of their present denominational leaders? Let them inquire of the Lord their duty in respect to this lamentable and critical condition of affairs.

On Sabbath, Feb. 16th, Mr. Jerome, now preaching in Patchogue, Long Island, preached a discourse on "Christian Courtesy to the Aged and Women," in which occurred some original ideas on tobacco and secret orders. The following extract appears in the Patchogue Advance of last week:

"The use of tobacco in any form is selfishness. I say, not only is it a pest and a poison to the user in his own person, but also is it discourtesy and selfishness toward other persons. Because it renders the breath and garments, even though the filth may not then be in the mouth, offensive to almost all ladies. And it is a wholly animal gratification which men alone enjoy. I want no pleasures which my wife and sister can not share. Women have the hard times in this world; and whatever good times there are, they certainly ought to have half. Your tobacco and walking matches and loafing in groceries, and your secret societies are contrary to true manhood.

"Think of it! how men who have all day, more or less, met fellow men in the social industries of the shop, store, highway, field or fishing boat—while women are closely kept within the four walls of the dwelling by the care of the children of the household—how, nevertheless, these men will gather at night to delight themselves in those mysteries, of which, however profound, pure or precious they may be, it is nevertheless the fundamental principle that no woman may ever learn a syllable. Ah, husbands and brothers of this church, I know not if I may convince you; but as for me, that which is too true, beautiful and good for my wife and sister is not true, beautiful nor good enough for me.

"There are, indeed, right, useful and godly societies, the objects of which may be such that only men can be admitted to their sessions: for example, the societies for 'the Suppression of Crime' in New York and in other cities. These are a part of the stern business of men—not of their ease nor recreation. But I can conceive of no literary, religious, social or convivial assembly; in which every true physical, social, mental or moral benefit would not be augmented rather than impaired by the presence of woman.

"These masculine secret orders indeed vaunt their peculiar advantages and charities to widows and orphans of members. But how flimsy the plea; when, in any standard 'Life (or Accident and Sickness) Insurance Company,'—for one-half the initiation and annual dues paid to the secret society, far ampler returns may be secured in the day of need!

"Other more momentous reasons there are why the principles upon which these secret, masculine social orders are avowedly built must be ever radically contrary and hostile to republican institutions, to the Word of God and to the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. But this morning, in speaking of the honor, courtesy and care due to woman, I say men are false to such courtesy; and husbands in particular to their marriage vows, in becoming or remaining active members of any masculine social order."

—Secretary Stoddard and Past Master Ronayne are at Adrian, helping the Michigan brethren with their State Convention, this week.

—Friends in Connecticut and all New England, read Bro. Bacon's letter, and let there be nothing lacking to the faithful servant of God who is giving himself to the work of reform in your part of the country.

—Elder Rathbun started from his home in Clarence, Iowa, last week Monday for two weeks' work in southern Iowa, beginning at Birmingham, Van Buren county. Next week he expects to be in Dewitt, just north of Davenport in the eastern part of the State. He is receiving many letters in respect to the State Convention, but prefers that the time and place should be agreed upon entirely by the officers of the State Association. His work of preparation is already begun and will be pushed with energy.

[The notice of the Iowa Convention was recdived after the above was in type.]

—Past Master Ronayne returned last Friday from a very interesting series of meetings at Hicksville, O., where warm friends of the reform have been made by the discussion and exposition of Freemasonry, and at least one Mason induced to renounce. After the Michigan State Convention this week he speaks at Constantine, St. Joseph county, next week Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and in Clayton on Thursday and Friday. Arrangements are under way for a meeting in this city some time during the second week in March, after which a long visit to the East is contemplated with expositions in Worcester, Hartford and other points, especially at Putnam, Conn., where a State Convention is being arranged.

—Two large hotels in this city which are always specially in favor with Masonic or other lodge gatherings, have fallen into serious financial difficulty. The "Commercial," advertised in the Masonic Register for 1875 as the "Masonic Headquarters," and its proprietors were high Masons. At the last meeting of the Knight Templars here their banner was flaunted above the Tremont House; the first time probably in the history of the city that such an arrangement was ever permitted by any public house. These two hotels, so liberally patronized by the lodges every year have lately come into grievous financial trouble and litigation and are both likely to be sold out.

—Dr. R. Thibodo is Master of Kilwinning Lodge, No. 311, which meets in Corinthian Hall on Kinzie St., Chicago. Last week the doctor became suddenly insane, as the papers report, and his insanity took the very remarkable form of raving about Masonry and murder. What does it mean? Will some Masonic neighbor explain?

—An urgent request is made for the note published by the Times of this city introducing Isaac Preston's article on President Blanchard. It is as follows:

"The following article was written and designed for the religious press, and was sent to the Advance for publication, but was refused by the editor of that paper. The writer, notwithstanding all that has been published by President Blanchard's opponents, does think that he has some "rights that white men are bound to respect;" and would respectfully ask the editor of the Times to give it a place in his paper."

—A correspondent at Henry, Ill., asks if President Hayes is a Mason or Odd-fellow or Mr. Colfax, late Vice-president, a Mason. Neither are known to us to be Freemasons. Mr. Hayes was member of the Odd-fellow lodge some years ago; we never have learned that his relation ceased. Mr. Colfax is an inveterate spouter for the Odd-fellows and invented their women's degrees.

Cradle Song.

A mother sang beside her little child,
Who, knowing not the meaning of the strain,
Still gazed on her with eyes wide-open mild,
And listened, pleased with cadence and refrain—
"Only the pure in heart see God."
These were the words the singing mother said,
As in the fire-light laughing baby played.

From day to day this was her household hymn,
As shadows of the evening gathered there,
As through the twilight showed the homestead dim,
Her song, wing-like, did seem to cleave the air—
"Only the pure in heart see God."
It floated up to some far star place,
Where spirits gaze for aye upon God's face.

The mother's spirit passed into the boy,
Grafting upon his soul her cradle words.
As old birds teach their off-spring to employ
Their tuneful throats to imitate the birds—
"Only the pure in heart see God."
As thrushes teach their young the thrush's lays,
She taught her deathless one a hymn of praise.

It bore its peaceful harvest to the child,
In all the thoughtful after-years of life;
It often stilled the raging unrest wild,
That frets the spirit in our worldly strife—
"Only the pure in heart see God."
It sometimes gave the wounded spirit rest,
When heavily with many cares oppressed.

It ran for aye a cool, life-giving rill,
Sparkling and sweet and hidden in the soul;
And sometimes seemed to overflow and fill
His life: sometimes in light it seemed to roll—
"Only the pure in heart see God."
A stream of brightness from a high far throne,
Whose haunting beauty was for him alone.

The Bible for Everything.

"The worth of truth no tongue can tell,
'Twill go to buy, but not to sell;
Truth, like a diamond, shines most fair,
More worth than pearls or rubies are."

What is a man prepared for, ignorant of the Bible, its doctrines, precepts, its holy inculcations, its grace and life-giving power? Is one ignorant or destitute of a saving, sanctifying knowledge of God's word, its light and hope, duly prepared for any duty at home or abroad, in his family, the social circle, or in the great congregation?

Can he pray as he ought, sing as he ought, teach as he ought, save by a familiarity with the Scriptures? Is he duly prepared to instruct others, impart wisdom, administer consolation, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, to be "patient towards all men," except he knows God experimentally through the medium of his Word, which is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword? How is it possible for one to preach as he ought, write as he ought, with energy of soul, the fire of love and salvation, unless his own heart is in a pentacostal blaze, kindled by God's truth, the wisdom from on high, "which is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy," except he himself delights in the law of the Lord, and is strengthened with might by the Holy Spirit in the inner man? How can any person adapt his conversation at all times wisely and profitably in a way to edify, minister grace to the hearers, impart whatsoever is true, honest, just, lovely, and of good report, unless "the word of Christ dwell in him richly;" unless he can say with the Psalmist, "Oh, how I love thy law! it is my meditation all the day." "Thou through thy commandments hast made me wiser than my enemies, for they are ever with me. I have more understanding than all my teachers, for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts. I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word." Psa. cxix. 98–100. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words shalt thou be condemned."

"Speak, poor heart, and tell thy pond'rings:
Tell how far thy rovings led,
When this book brought back thy wand'rings,
Speaking life as from the dead."

The Bible finds us guilty, and freely offers us pardon. It finds us polluted with innumerable defilements, and offers us moral purity. It finds us weak and enslaved, and offers us liberty. It finds us wretched, and offers happiness. It finds us dead, and offers everlasting life. It finds us "having no hope, and without God in the world"—with nothing before us but "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation," and places glory, and honor, and immortality full in our view.

"Men's books with heaps of chaff are stored;
God's book doth golden grain afford.
Then leave the chaff, and spend thy pains
In gathering up the golden grains."

A Scene at Brusa.

Selim Agha, a resident of Salonica, the ancient Thessalonica, was a Mussulman of some note, and at the age of forty-five he and all his household were converted to Christianity, through the agency of Dr. Schauffler. This was in 1852.

The feeling against apostasy from the Mussulman faith was very strong. In the reign of Achmet I. an article in the penal code of laws concerning it, read thus: "Apostacy is an enormous crime in the sight of God. The Mussulman who is guilty of it must be condemned to death, if he do not immediately abjure his error." In 1839 this article was rendered null and void by the passage of the famous Hatti Scheriff, but when the Turkish mind once conceives an idea, it matters not how false it may be, it has almost the permanence of the law of nature.

It was under these circumstances that Selim Agha embraced Christianity. His conversion was well known. Some of his Moslem friends advised him to leave, lest the fanatical mob should do him injury.

He with his family went to Malta in 1853, where he was baptized with the name of Edward Williams. In 1855 he went, with all his household, to Constantinople, where he entered with zeal and boldness, and yet with great discretion, into Christian work.

At a period somewhat later I took him with me to Brusa on a special service, not intending to attract any special notice among the Mussulmans. It proved quite otherwise. On the deck of the steamer all the Mussulmans gathered around him until we arrived at Modania, sixteen miles from Brusa. We rode hard, and reached Brusa first, that none of our fellow-passengers might know where we lodged that night. What followed the next day was unique.

While examining the Armenian school beneath the church, three Turkish officials appeared at the door, followed by an armed guard. The native pastor invited them in; they replied "they wished to see him and his guests in the church above." The three persons were, the Governor of the province of Bithynia, the Chief-Justice, and the collector of the revenues. There was no alternative, and we went in. After being seated, and passing the usual salutations, conversation followed concerning the Scriptures, suggested by the large Bible on the pulpit in front of us. The Judge, whose reputation for learning and ability was very high, absorbed the conversation with Mr. Williams, formerly "Selim Agha." The armed guard remained in the middle of the church, and seemed intent upon the conversation, which was very free and interesting, showing on the part of the Judge no little knowledge of the Old Testament Scriptures.

At length he turned full upon Mr. Williams and said: "I have had the pleasure of conversing with many foreign gentlemen who spoke our language very well, but I never met with one before who spoke exactly like a Mussulman as you do!" For a moment Edward Williams' eye dropped, then looking the Judge calmly in the face, he replied gently, "You may well say that I speak Turkish like a Mussulman, for so I was till I was forty-five years old. Then I became a Christian, and am now a preacher of the Gospel of Christ!"

The armed men stepped forward. The Chief-Justice bent suddenly forward, his fore-arms upon his knees, his face reddened with confusion, running his Tesbeh (ninety-nine beads, representing ninety-nine attributes of Allah) rapidly through his fingers. The Governor stared into the air, and the collector shook with suppressed mirth at the confusion of the Judge. It was a moment of great and painful suspense. What would be the next move? Would he be arrested and imprisoned? They had evidently expected a different course from this "Apostate," and thought to drive him through many subterfuges, and finally unmask him; but this frank, noble, unlooked-for confession confounded them. They did not know of the holy boldness with which a crucified and risen Redeemer qualifies his loving, true-hearted followers, who having the sweet sense of his pardoning love and mercy, are glad, if need be, to suffer for his name's sake.

At length the Judge threw himself into an easy, careless attitude, and remarked, "There is one thing in your faith that always surprises me! How can intelligent men believe that one God is three Gods and that three Gods are one God; one is three and three are one?"

Mr. Williams replied, "We do not so believe. You cannot hold the unity of God with more fervor than I do. As Creator and Author of all things he is called 'God the Father,' but not in any human sense. In some way God visits the human soul, to enlighten, purify and guide it. He does not appear in any visible form, but he acts directly and spiritually upon our spirits, and we call him 'God the Holy Spirit.'

"But our greatest of all mysteries is that God became incarnate in Christ our Lord. He took upon himself our nature. As we do not know how our souls dwell in flesh, much less can we understand how God came into flesh for our salvation. But this is not another God! It is one and the same God still manifesting himself in such a way that he is called 'the Son of God.' But these three divine manifestations, personal in view of their work and office, are still the one only living and true God.

The Judge turned to the pastor and myself for our assent, and then remarked, that "whatever he had inquired about this dogma of the Trinity, the only reply given had been 'It is a mystery,' but now he could see there is a way in which an intelligent man may receive it. He had never heard anything intelligible about it before." As they retired the Judge led the way, and each of the officials gave the usual salaam of honor to the pastor and myself. There was no significance in this; but how would they pass one who had openly declared his apostasy? If they had passed him as though unconscious of his presence we should not have wondered, but have said with a deeper meaning than any Moslem knows, "God is great!" But each one exchanged with him also the salaam of honor.

All passed out. I turned to Mr. Williams and said, "What does it all mean?" "Doubt not," he replied, with emotion, the power of Hazareth Isa (Jesus Christ), he has done it!"—Cyrus Hamlin.

Effects of Lager Beer.

So far as my observation goes, I am satisfied that a German, with his brain soaked to stupidity in lager beer, is as bad a brute as an Irishman with his brain set on fire with whisky. The paroxysm of the whisky-fired brain is more violent while it lasts, but the brutality of the beer-soaked brain is stolid and enduring. I speak from personal knowledge, obtained by visiting hundreds of families of both classes, and yet so confirmed is public opinion as to the harmlessness of lager beer, I do not suppose that any one will accept my statements as being even an approximation to the truth, still I know that I am right. It takes longer, it is true, and it costs more money for a German to stupefy himself with lager beer than it does for an Irishman to madden himself with whisky; but whether that greater outlay of time and money on the part of the Teuton gives him any advantages over the Celt, is a question which it might be well for political and social economists to consider, remembering, also, as they do consider it, that the the change from beer guzzling to whisky drinking is short and easy, and constantly made.—Oliver Dyer.

"If they'd only been Married on the Same Day."

Mr. Colville was reading to his wife from a newspaper on Saturday morning, when he struck this paragraph: "Mr. and Mrs. James Clark of Pulaski, New York, both came into the world on the same day, both died on the same day, and both were killed by a cancer."

"Well, I declare! wasn't that singular?" observed Mrs. Colville. "Born on the same day, died on the same day, and with the same disease. Now, if they'd only been married on the same day the thing would have been complete."

"What's that?" suddenly interrogated Mr. Colville, looking curiously at her over the top of the paper.

"I say," she repeated, "if they'd both been married on the—why, to be—" she embarrassingly added, as she caught the amused expression of his face—"that is—I wonder if I thought to put on the dishwater," and she hastened into the kitchen to attend to it.—Ex.

God's livery is a very plain one; but its wearers have good reason to be content. If it has not so much gold lace on it as Satan's it keeps out the foul weather better, and besides it is a great deal cheaper.

History of the Bible.

When and by whom were the books of the Old Testament first collected and arranged?

By Ezra, about four hundred and fifty years before Christ. The five books of Moses had been kept with the Ark of the Covenant, (Deut. 31: 24–26,) and Joshua had written the portion of Scripture bearing his name "in the book of the law of God." Joshua 8 and 24: 26.

What are the most prominent translations of the Bible that have been made?

The Septuagint, the Vulgate, the Douay, and the English or King James' Bible.

What is the meaning of the word Septuagint?

Seventy. The translation was so called because it was made by seventy, or, more strictly, by seventy-two men, six having been chosen from each of the twelve tribes of Israel for this purpose.

When and where was this translation made? At Alexandria, in Egypt, about two hundred years before Christ. It was a translation of the Old Testament only, from the Hebrew into Greek.

How was this translation regarded by the Jews in the time of Christ?

It was regarded with peculiar reverence. Our Saviour and the Apostles in their discourses generally quoted from this version.

What is the Vulgate translation?

It is a Latin translation of the Septuagint, not of the Hebrew, and so called the vulgate (common) because, being the only version which the Roman Catholic church used, therefore the common version.

When and by whom was this translation made?

By Jerome, about the year A. D. 400. It was hastily made, and became very incorrect by many changes.

What of the Douay Bible?

It is an English translation of the Vulgate, with notes and comments, and is the only English Bible approved by the Roman Catholic church.

From what did it receive its name?

From the place where it was first published, Douay, a town in France.

When was it published?

In the year 1610.

Why does it differ so much from our English Bible?

Because it was made, not from the original Hebrew, but from the Vulgate, which was from the Septuagint, and was very imperfect. It could not have been as correct as a translation made directly from the Hebrew.

Why is our English version called "King James' Bible?"

Because it was made by the authority of James I., king of England.

When was it begun and when completed?

In the year 1607 the work was commenced, and was finished in about three years, and published in 1611.

By whom was the translation made?

Fifty-four of the most learned men of the kingdom were appointed for the task. Seven of these did not serve, leaving forty-seven as the number who were actually engaged in the work.

How was the labor apportioned among this number?

They were divided into six classes, to each of which a certain portion of the Bible was given to translate, not from the Latin nor even from the Septuagint, but directly from the original Hebrew and Greek.

How will our English translation compare with other versions of the Bible?

It is said by competent judges to be better than any other.

What was the earliest division of the Bible?

That which is supposed to have been made by Ezra. The books of the Old Testament were divided into three classes: "the Law," "the Prophets," and "the Writings," or "the Psalms." To this our Saviour refers, Luke 24: 44: "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me."

What books were embraced in these three divisions?

"The Law" included the first five books; "the Psalms," or writings, including the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon. "The Prophets" included all the remaining books.

When and by whom was the Bible first divided into chapters?

This is generally said to have been done by Cardinal Hugo, A. D. 1240; but as early as the middle of the third century, the four Gospels had been divided into chapters.

When and by whom were chapters divided into verses?

By Robert Stephens, in the year 1551. It is said that he performed the greater part of this laborious task while on horse-back, on a journey from Paris to Lyons!—Watchman and Reflector.
